The Governor would have the voters decide his student-aid plan by referendum in the general election of 1960. He recommended as an interim measure that the Legislature authorize the adoption of a student-aid system by an district that wanted to.

His proposal to include private school teachers in the teacher retirement system would remove one of the obstacles to recruiting teachers for private schools formed to avoid integration. Public school teachers are reportedly reluctant to join the private schools for fear that they will lose their retirement benefits.

Private School for Whites Given $53,189 by Arkansas

Little Rock, Feb. 5 (AP)—The Arkansas State Board of Education today allocated $53,189 to the R. J. Raney High School as the first payment of State funds to a Little Rock all-white private school.

The high school requested the money for expenses it incurred last October, November and December in holding classes for students displaced by the closing of the city's four high schools by Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

Suit Is Pending

Faubus closed the schools under an act enacted at a special sesssion of the Arkansas legislature. The money was withheld from the Little Rock School District under another act approved by the special session.

A suit is pending in Federal District Court, initiated by Negro attorneys, charging that the two acts are unconstitutional.

John Rye of Russellville told the board before the first voice vote that action should be withheld until the Arkansas Supreme Court had ruled on the constitutionality of the laws.

First To Seek Aid

"The Virginia Supreme Court just recently ruled a similar act of their legislature was unconstitutional," he said. "Their decision was based on about the same provisions we have in our State constitution."

A voice vote gave unanimous approval of the motion to grant the money.

The Raney High School was set up by the Little Rock Private School Corporation when Faubus ordered the four public high schools closed last September. It is supported by private contributions.

It is the first private school to ask for State aid.

Answer Deadline Given On School Integration Suit

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 6 (AP)—Three federal judges reluctantly gave the Dollarway School District until May 1 to file a response to a suit seeking racial integration in the district at Pine Bluff.

The suit was filed Feb. 6 by George Howard, Negro attorney of Pine Bluff, on behalf of three Negro teen-agers who want to enroll in the all-white Dollarway High School.

The Dollarway suit was the first integration action filed in Arkansas since the Little Rock school crisis erupted in September, 1957.

The district includes a racially mixed rural area north and west of Pine Bluff, which is 45 miles southeast of Little Rock. The 1958 school census showed 1,136 white and 1,378 Negro residents of school age.

Excerpts From Brownell's 1957 Opinion to President on Using Troops at Little Rock

sideration relative to the use of Federal troops, attention also was given to the "Posse Comitatus Act" (18 U. S. C. Sec 1385).

In its present form, that act provides:

"Whoever, except in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress, willfully uses any part of the Army or the Air Force as a posse comitatus or otherwise to executive the laws shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both. This section does not apply in Alaska.

Exceptions Noted

I pointed out to you that the act, by its specific terms, excepts from its prohibition the use of the Army or Air Force as a posse commitatus or otherwise to execute the law in cases and under circumstances expressly authorized by the Constitution or Act of Congress. I advised you that your authority to dispatch Federal troops to Little Rock would be predicated upon express statutory right (10 U. S. C. sec. 332, 333) and, therefore, would be within the exception contained in the Posse Comitatus Act.

Although there has been no judicial decision on this question, the advice given you has support in a long line of opinions of past Attorneys General and in Executive action. The legislative history surrounding this act fully supports this view. In brief, it discloses that, at the time the Posse Comitatus Act was enacted, the predecessors to 10 U. S. C. secs. 332 and 333 were in force and the Congress did not intend or incalled upon to enforce the court's orders.

These facts were still present on the day after issuance of the proclamation. The street mobs reassembled. The Mayor of Little Rock wired you as follows:

"The immediate need for Federal troops is urgent. The mob is much larger in numbers at 8 A. M. than at any time yesterday. People are converging on the scene from all directions. Mob is armed and engaging in fisticuffs and other acts of violence. Situation is out of control and police cannot disperse the mob. I am pleading to you as President of the United States in the interest of humanity, law and order and the cause of democracy world wide to provide the necessary Federal troops within several hours. Action by you will restore peace and order and compliance with your proclamation."

Thereupon you ordered the use of United States troops and the federalization of the Arkansas National Guard.

During the course of conterpret the act as impairing whatever powers the President had under those statutes.

The sponsors of the Posse Comitatus Act expressly so stated during the course of the debates. This was also the view of President Hayes who approved the Posse Comitatus Act.

In Little Rock, the "vast interests involved" also reached beyond the confines of that one city, and as publicly stated by you and the Secretary of State, vitally affected our country's international relations. When an unruly mob arrogates to itself the power to nullify a constitutionally-secured right, a statutory prescripition, and a court order, it may reasonably be assumed that the danger of a fast-moving, destructive volcanic force is immediately present.

Success of the unlawful assemblage in Little Rock inevitably would have led to mob rule, and a probable breakdown of law and order in an ever-increasing area. When a local and state government is unable or unwilling to meet such a threat, the Federal Government is not impotent.

There are in any event grave doubts as to the authority of the Congress to limit the Constitutional powers of the President to enforce the laws and preserve the peace under circumstances which he deems appropriate. However, that consideration was not reached because of the express Congressional authority for the action taken.

Finally, much of what the Supreme Court said in the Debs case has special and peculiar relevance to the Little Rock situation. There, a Federal District Court issued a sweeping order enjoining strikers in the Pullman Company riots at Chicago in 1894. When the mobs continued their lawless course, Federal troops, both regular and National Guardsmen, were dispatched to the city and actively intervened to restore order. In reviewing this situation, the Supreme Court pointed out that what had happened at Chicago transcended municipal boundaries [and touched "vast interests" of the nation].

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—Following are excerpts from an official opinion of the then Attorney General, Herbert Brownell Jr., to President Eisenhower dated Nov. 7, 1957, on the legal and constitutional basis for the use of troops to prevent interference with Federal court school integration orders in Little Rock, Ark.

[The opinion begins with an account of the stationing of National Guard troops at the schools by Gov. Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas on Sept. 2, 1957, after a Federal court ruling that a previously approved integration plan must go into effect.]

Notwithstanding the order of the Federal court directing that the school plan proceed, the National Guard, under orders of the Governor, turned away the Negro students who attempted to enter the school. It later developed that the Governor's order to Gen. Sherman T. Clinton, Adjutant General, read:

"You are directed to place off limits to white students these schools for colored students and to place off limits to colored students these schools heretofore operated and recently set up for white students. This order will remain in effect until the demobilization of the guard or until further orders."

This action was in direct derogation of the orders of the Federal court and effectively frustrated those orders.

The first issue on which you requested my opinion was whether thhe United States courts possessed the power to review the action of the Governor in preventing execution of the Federal court's orders through the use by the Governor of military force; and, if that power existed, the manner of its exercise and the factors upon which its decision to review the Governor's action would hinge.

I then advised you, and do again advise you, that the United States courts have jurisdiction to determine the legality of the action of a state Governor which contravenes an order of a Federal court. This power exists although the Governor seeks to justify his action as required to maintain peace and order within the state, and announces his considered judgment that domestic order could not be maintained unless the action in question were taken. The law in such cases is that the Federal courts are vested with power to review the judgment of the Governor of the necessity for his action and to determine the validity of the justification he asserts.

Earlier Case Cited

This principle is unequivocally set forth in Sterling v. Constantin, 287 U. S. 378 (1932).

The Sterling case arose out of Texas to limit oil production. The producers had obtained an order from the United States District Court restraining the enforcement of limitations set by the state commission. The Governor declared the oil producing area concerned to be in "a state of insurrection, tumult, riot and a breach of the peace," declared martial law in the area, and directed the commanders of the National Guard to enforce the production limitations.

The Governor and the Adjutant General of the National Guard were made parties to the proceedings and, after hearing, an injunction was issued against them. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment. The court, in an opinion by Chief Justice Hughes, stated that it was "obviously untenable" to accept the conclusion that "the Governor's order had the quality of a supreme and unchallengeable edict, overriding all conflicting rights of property and unreviewable through the judicial power of the Federal Government." (P. 397).

It is further my opinion, as I have advised you, that the mere existence of a threat of domestic violence would be insufficient to justify the Governor in talking action to nullify the order of the Federal court by the use of force. The United States Supreme Court stated the well-recognized rule that the executive is necessarily vested with discretion to determine whether an exigency requiring military aid to suppress disorder has arisen. But the rule is subject to the reservation that the courts may determine whether the limits of allowable discretion have been overstepped (Sterling v. Con-

The principles expressed in Sterling v. Constantin have been reaffirmed in a number of later decisions.

In the Little Rock matter, no effort whatever had been made by the Governor of Arkansas to use his powers to uphold the jurisdiction of the Federal court and to aid, rather than subvert, the execution of its orders. On the contrary, his purpose seemed clearly directed toward a nullification of the court's mandate. I advised you that the propriety of his action should be judicially determined.

Justice Taney Cited

The wise counsel and cautionary expressions of Chief Justice Taney, speaking for the court in Ableman v. Booth and United States v. Booth, 21 how. (62 U. S.) 506 (1858) compelled this course:

"... controversies as to the respective powers of the United States and the states, instead of being determined by military and physical force, are heard, investigated, and finally settled, with the calmness and deliberated, and finally settled, with the calmness and deliberation of judicial inquiry. And no one can fail to see, that if such an arbiter had not been provided, in our complicated system of government, internal tranquility could not have been preserved; and if such controversies were left to arbitrament of physical force, our government, state and national, would soon cease to be governments of laws, and revolutions by force of arms would take the place of courts of justice and judicial decisions" (pp.520-521).

I further advised you that review of the Governor's action should be submitted to the District Court, rather than to a three-judge Federal Court.

This advice was based particularly upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Phillips v. United States, 312 U. S. 246 (1941), wherein it was held that a three-judge court is not the proper forum unless the challenged action of the State Governor was taken under state legislation, the constitutionality of which is attacked. The court declared that where the Governor's action in using the National Guard is attacked, his claim that a state statute authorizes him to call out the National Gaurd when he deems it necessary does not make the suit one to challenge the statute.

Federal Districts

On Sept. 9, the court requested the United States to enter the case as amicus curiae [friend of the court] and to file a petition for an injunction against the Governor of Arkansas. I advised you that the court had the power to make this request. In Universal Oil Co. v. Root Refining Co., 328 U. S. 575 (1946) the Supreme Court held that "a Federal court can always call on law officers of the United States to serve as amici."

While we were preparing for the hearing, it became increasingly evident that the normal judicial procedure might be inadequate to prevent obstruction of the orders of the court. The activities of agitators which had commenced after the Governor had placed the National Guard at the school presented a threat of concerted obstruction.

You accordingly asked for advice as to your power and duty as President to aid in the execution of the court's orders if obstruction should continue after the Sept. 20 hearing and further action by the court. Between the dates of Sept. 10 and Sept. 14 I gave you the advice which I am now setting forth.

Whatever interference and obstruction to enforcement of law exists, and domestic violence is interposed to frustrate the judicial process, it is the primary and mandatory duty of the authorities of the state to suppress the violence and to remove any obstruction to the orderly enforcement of law. This same duty fully exists where the domestic violence is interposed in opposition to the enforcement of Federal law rather than to the local law of the state. Under Article VI, Clause 2 of the Constitution, it is declared:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; * * * shall be the supreme Law of the Land."

The supremacy of Federal law and the obligation of state officials to support the Federal Constitution find expression in the rule that state courts cannot decline to enforce Federal laws on the theory that they are laws "emanating from a foreign sovereign." Tests v. Katt, 330 U. S. 386, 391.

Late on Sept. 20, the court handed down its decree enjoining the Governor of Arkansas and his National Guard commanders from further interference with the orders of that court. The Governor thereupon announced that he was withdrawing the National Guard from the school. No stay of enforcement of the court's order was sought by the Governor or others.

The local authorities of Little Rock announced their intention of maintaining order in support of the decrees of the court. The test of the ability of those authorities to control the situation came on Sept. 23.

At the opening of the school a mob of about a thousand persons assembled. When the Negro children who were entitled to admission to the school arrived, violence broke out.

After three hours of riot and tumult the Negro children were removed from the school by orders of the Mayor and local officials. Mob force had successfully frustrated the carrying out of the orders of the court and had demonstrably overpowered such police forces as could be mustered by the local officials. The Governor did not use his powers to support the local authorities.

I thereupon advised you that you then had the undoubted power, under the Constitution and the laws of the United States, to call the National Guard into service and to use those forces, together with such of the armed forces as you considered necessary, to suppress the domestic violence, obstruction and resistance of law then and there existing.

I further advised you, and do again advise you, that your power so to act rested upon both your powers as President under the Constitution and the powers vested in you by the Congress under Federal law, particularly as reflected by Sections 332 and 333 of Title 10 of the United States Code.

The Supreme Court has recognized the constitutional power and responsibility which reposes in the national government to compel obedience to law and order. (ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 395, 1879):

"We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle, that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to its laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent."

Other Statutes Cited

In addition to the constitutional power in the President in such matters, a series of statutes of broad sweep enable the President to deal effectively with civil disturbances within a state when compelling circumstances are present.

By Section 331 of Title 10 of the United States code, the President may use the state militia and the armed forces of the United States, upon call of the state Legislautre or of its Governor if the Legislature cannot be convened, to put down any insurrection against a state government. This authority was not appropriate for use and was not use in Little Rock.

Under Section 332 of Title 10, the President is vested with similar authority as to the militia and armed forces when, in his judgments, unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages, or rebellion against the authority of the United States make it impracticable to enforce the laws of the United States in any state by ordinary course of judicial proceedings.

A third statute, Section 333 of Title 10, gives the President like powers to suppress in a state any insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy which so hinders the execution of the laws of the state and of the United States that any class of its people is deprived of a right, privilege, immunity, or protection named in the Constitution and secured by law, and the constituted authorities of the state are unable, fail, or refuse to protect the right, privilege, or immunity, or to give that protection, or which opposes or obstructs the execution of the laws of the United States or impedes the course of justice under those laws.

As applied to the Little Rock events, I advised you that unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages made it impractible to enforce the laws of the United States in Little Rock by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings (sec. 332. Title 10).

The facts upon which these conclusions were based were reported to you as they occurred, and included an account of the determined group of hundreds of men and women bent upon overpowering the local peace officers, the several incidents of violence with their very real and discernible trend toward a larger-scale inflammatory assault, the action of the Mayor and local authorities in ordering the withdrawal of the Negro students so as to appease the unruly mob, the admission of local authorities that such peace officers as they could command wereu nable to cope with the disorderly assemblage, and the indifference or refusal of the Governor of the state to supply a sufficient force to quell the lawless movement.

I also advised you that the local strength of the United States Marshal was insufficient to achieve enforcement of the order of the United States District Court, and that, because of the local situation and the need for timely action, it would not have been reasonable, or effective in the circumstances, to attempt to have the marshal enlist the support of the citizenry to carry out the court order.

In accordance with the salutary policy that the agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall not be used as a national police, you rejected suggestions originating outside the Federal Government, that such agents be

Little Rock Request Delay Explained

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department said Thursday normal procedure delayed publication of the formal opinion Herbert Brownell, then attorney general, gave President Eisenhower in 1957 on his right to use federal troops at Little Rock, Ark., Central High School.

In releasing copies of the opinions Wednesday, the federal government confirmed for the first time that the troops were sent after Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann of Little Rock had urgently requested them.

Department officials asserted in response to inquiry Thursday that the department has a long-standing rule against publishing the text of formal opinions while litigation on the same subject matter is pending in the courts.

They noted that the last of several cases stemming from the troop situation was not closed out until the current session of the Supreme Court.

In this case, the high court refused to review the action of the Little Rock District Court in enjoining Gov. Orval E. Faubus from using the Arkansas National Guard to prevent racial integration at Central High.

Thereafter, these officials said, the department followed another traditional step by asking President Eisenhower as the official to whom the opinion was addressed —for permission to publish it.

When this permission was given, Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers directed publication in a forthcoming new volume of "Opinions of the Attorney General," a series widely used as a reference work in schools and in the legal profession.

Mayor Mann sent his appeal for federal troops to President Eisenhower on Sept. 24, 1957, which was the second day of mob violence around the school.

Justice Dept. Reveals

Little Rock Mayor Sought U. S. Troops

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Mayor of Little Rock, Ark., was officially disclosed Wednesday to have pleaded for the federal troops that President Eisenhower sent there in 1957.

Until now, the Eisenhower administration had said nothing definite to indicate that the bitterly controversial decision was not entirely its own. There has been wide speculation, however, that Eisenhower acted at the urging of Little Rock officials.

More than a year ago the New York Herald Tribune published the text of an appeal telegraphed to Eisenhower by the Little Rock mayor.

Wednesday, the Justice Department released a document covering advice which Herbert Brownell, then the attorney general, gave Eisenhower on what to do in the crisis resulting from opposition in Little Rock to school integration orders.

The opposition, at its worst, included mob violence.

BROWNELL PAPERS

The Brownell papers included a telegram to the President from Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann on Sept. 24, 1957:

"The immediate need for federal troops is urgent . . . I am pleading to you as president of the United States in the interest of humanity, law and order, and the cause of democracy worldwide to provide the necessary federal troops within several hours."

At the time, Mayor Mann refused to confirm or deny that he had requested troops.

Mann was not immediately available Wednesday for questioning on the disclosure of his appeal.

There were reports in Little Rock back in those tempestuous days that Mann had sent such a telegram, addressed to Brownell. The Justice Department denied this. The denial was technically true, since the request now is shown to have gone directly to the White House.

COMMENT DECLINED

The White House press secretary, James C. Hagerty, declined Wednesday to say why Mann's message was not disclosed at the time.

"You will recall that when I was asked at the time about a report such a message had been received, I said I had no comment but I never denied there was such a message," he said.

Thus Hagerty passed up a chance to explain why the White House has kept silent so long—almost 17 months—in the face of Southern denunciations of Eisenhower as a president who ordered federal troops to the scene on his own motion. Many Southerners contend this was in disregard of states' rights.

One possible explanation, at least for the time when feeling was red hot: Eisenhower wanted to protect Mayor Mann from possible harm, physical or otherwise.

Many people applauded the use of troops, especially those who were incensed at Gov. Orval E. Faubus for his use of National Guard troops in such a way as to keep Negroes out of Little Rock's Central High School in the face of court orders to admit them.

However, Eisenhower's action was bitterly received in most of the South and deplored by some in other areas. Politically, a general reaction was that the Republican party had lost ground it had gained in Dixie in 1952 and 1956, perhaps forever.

Little Rock Mayor Asked For Troops

WASHINGTON (AP)—The mayor of Little Rock, Ark., was disclosed Wednesday to have pleaded for the federal troops that President Eisenhower sent there in 1957.

Until now, for all the general public could tell, the bitterly controversial decision was the Eisenhower administration's own idea. It has hurt his party in the South.

Wednesday, the Justice Department released a document covering advice which Herbert Brownell, then the attorney general, gave Eisenhower on what to do in the crisis resulting from opposition in Little Rock to school integration orders.

The opposition, at its worst, included mob violence.

The Brownell papers included a telegram to the President from Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann on Sept. 24, 1957:

It's official now—

Little Rock mayor asked U. S. troops

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12—(AP)—Mayor Woodrow Wilson Mann of Little Rock, Ark., appealed to President Eisenhower for federal troops when mob violence blocked Central High School's racial integration program in 1957, it was disclosed officialy today.

In a telegram, Mann asked for the troops "within several hours," saying "situation is out of control and police cannot disperse the mob."

THE TEXT of the mayor's wire was included in a 7500-word document released by the Justice Department.

The document was a communication which Herbert Brownell, then attorney general, addressed to the president on Nov. 7, 1957, Brownell's last day in office. It summarized the legal advice which Brownell gave the White House, leading to the stationing of troops at the high school, and which will be published in full in a forthcoming new volume of "opinions of the attorney general."

When Eisenhower sent the troops to Little Rock Sept. 24, 1957, the question of whether Mann had asked for them was one which went unanswered in both Washington and Little Rock.

Three days later, the Justice Department denied in face that it had had any telegram from Mann. Technically this was true since the telegram had gone to Eisenhower.

Mann would neither confirm nor deny to reporters in Little Rock that he had requested troops.

IN LITTLE ROCK

Segregated School Reopening Barred

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 3 (AP)—A federal judge today refused to permit the reopening of Little Rock's closed public high schools on a temporarily segregated basis.

U.S. District Judge John E. Miller's ruling left the tangled legal situation here stalemated at least until the constitutionality of Arkansas' anti-integration laws is decided.

School Board President Ed I. McKinley Jr. said the refusal of the board's request killed all hopes of opening the high schools this term, either segregated or integrated. They were shut by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in September before classes began.

The board sought to reopen the schools segregated while working out a new integration plan to replace one which caused Faubus to shut the schools. The new plan would have been submitted to the court by Aug. 15.

What will the school board do next?

"There's nothing else we can do," McKinley said.

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the Justice Department opposed the board's proposal.

In turning down the board's request, Judge Miller added:

"The court knows of no affirmative steps that the board might take toward the opening of the closed schools on an integrated basis so long as the act of the General Assembly of Arkansas under which the governor issued his proclamation closing the schools is in effect."

The law, passed in a special state legislative session last summer, has been challenged in federal court. NAACP attorneys today asked for a speedy hearing.

Miller accepted today's report by the board as adequate answer to an order he issued Jan 9 directing it to tell him what steps it planned to take to achieve integration.

In issuing his decision, Miller took issue sharply with the role the Justice Department has played in the Little Rock court litigation. Justice Department attorneys have participated as "friends of the court," a legal position which allows them to suggest moves to the judge without being a party to the suit.

Miller called the Justice Department's charge that the school board is contracting in good faith "entirely arbitrary."

The judge interrupted his prepared statement to point out that education is primarily under control of the state and added: "Some people don't seem to recognize that—and the Department of Justice seems to be among them."

Judge Refuses School Request

Won't Allow Reopening At Little Rock

TEST OF LAW IS ASKED

By United Press International

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 3.—United States District Judge John E. Miller turned down Tuesday a request of the Little Rock School Board that it be allowed to open the city's four closed high schools segregated while it prepares a new plan of integration.

Wiley A. Branton, chief legal counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, immediately asked for a three-judge Federal Court to determine if the law Gov. Orval Faubus used to close the schools is constitutional.

The School Board wanted to open the schools segregated immediately, then be given until Aug. 15 to present a new integration plan to replace the one which led to rioting at Central High School Sept. 23, 1957.

Report Accepted

Judge Miller, however, accepted a report from the board which, in effect, said it could do nothing in the face of four state laws passed by a special legislative session last August and which Governor Faubus used to close the schools.

Judge Miller said that, under the gradual integration plan which he approved in 1956 and which was later approved by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, "all public schools would have to be opened on a non-segregated basis."

Judge Miller said he was conscious many problems faced a board trying to bring integration to a school.

"If they are unable to operate under that plan, they should not be denied the right to formulate a new plan of operation," he said.

Powell On Stand

School Superintendent Terrell E. Powell took the stand and said 1,085 white and Negro students were getting no schooling since Governor Faubus closed the three white and one Negro schools Sept. 12 to block integration.

Thurgood Marshall of New York, the NAACP's chief legal counsel, questioned Mr. Powell sharply, asking the superintendent if he knew how many students transferred from the Little Rock district were getting an education.

Marshall asked Mr. Powell repeatedly if the new plan the board wants to present would be for or against integration.

"We just want time to solve the dilemma we're in," Mr. Powell said.

Herschel Friday Jr., attorney for the School Board, argued that children, especially the Negroes, were the only ones suffering because of the school closure. He suggested the Negroes would not be hurt by being segregated another semester.

Friend Of Court

Mr. Friday also attacked the Justice Department as being "extremely partisan" and suggested the Federal Government should withdraw from the Little Rock litigation as a "friend of the court."

Judge Miller cited a recent decision of a three-judge Federal court in Virginia, which said no single public school could be operated with public funds if other public schools were closed to avoid integration.

"If the decision of the three-judge court is the law of the land," said Judge Miller, "and I am not saying it is, it necessarily follows the present school board must submit another plan before the present one is discarded."

FEDERAL JUDGE REFUSED PERMISSION TO RE-OPEN 4 HIGH SCHOOLS ON SEGREGATED BASIS

SCHOOL BOARD'S REQUEST DENIED

Opening on Segregated Basis Barred

By LLOYD HOLBECK

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — United States district Judge John E. Miller turned down Tuesday a request of the Little Rock school board that it be allowed to open the city's four closed high schools on a segregated basis while it prepares a new plan of integration.

Wiley A. Branton, chief legal counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, immediately asked for a three-judge federal court to determine if the law Gov. Orval Faubus used to close the schools is constitutional.

The school board wanted to open the schools segregated immediately then be given until Aug. 15 to present a new integration plan to replace the one which led to rioting at Central High school Sept. 23, 1957.

Miller, however, accepted a report from the board which in effect said it could do nothing in the face of four state laws passed by a special legisltive session last August and which Faubus used to close the schools.

Judge Miller said that under the gradual integration plan which he approved in 1956 and which was later approved by the U.S. eighth circuit court of appeals in St. Louis, "all public schools would have to be opened on a nonsegregated basis."

Miller said he was conscious that many problems faced a board trying to bring integration to a school.

"If they are unable to operate under that plan, they should not be denied the right to formulate a new plan of operation," he said.

U. S. Judge Asserts He Can't Open Schools

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 3 (AP)—A federal judge Tuesday denied the Little Rock School Board permission to reopen its four closed high schools on a segregated basis for the remainder of the school year.

United States District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith, Ark., declared he did not think he could reopen the schools — even on an integrated basis — as long as Arkansas' school-closing law remained in force.

The judge criticized the Justice Department twice in his remarks. He called the Department's brief attacking the School Board as not acting in good faith "entirely arbitrary."

'Don't Recognize'

He added he was gratified that the Justice Department's attorneys, in oral remarks, took a somewhat different attitude.

Later he said, "Some people don't seem to recognize that education is the responsibility of the State and the Justice Department seems to be among them."

Donald MacGuiness, Washington represented the Department of Justice as a friend of the court.

The denial of the board's petition "leaves us where we were," commented Board President Ed I. McKinley, Jr.

The next major step expected in the long integration dispute is a decision on whether the Arkansas laws, under which four high schools were closed to prevent integration, are constitutional. This case is before the Arkansas Supreme Court.

The board, in a petition filed January 21, asked Miller to authorize it to request Governor Orval Faubus to return the schools to its control. If Faubus granted the request, the board said, it would reopen the schools on a segregated basis while preparing a new integration plan.

Both the Justice Department and an attorney for the Negro school patrons who were original plaintiffs in the protracted integration litigation opposed it.

Court Bars Little Rock Reopening

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 3 (AP)—A Federal judge today denied the Little Rock School Board permission to reopen its four closed high schools on a segregated basis for the remainder of the school year.

U. S. District Judge Jonh E. Miller of Fort Smith, Ark., declared he did not think he could reopen the schools — even on an integrated basis— as long as Arkansas' school-closing law remained in force.

The judge criticized the Justice Department twice in his remarks. He called the Department's brief attacking the School Board as not acting in good faith "entirely arbitrary" and added he was gratified that the Justice Department's attorneys, in oral remarks, took a somewhat different attitude.

Later he said "some people don't seem to recognize that education is the responsibility of the state and the Justice Department seems to be among them."

Donald B. MacGuineas, Washington, represented the Department of Justice as a friend of the court.

The denial of the Board's petition "leaves us where we were," commented Board President Ed I. McKinley Jr.

The next major step expected in the long integration dispute is a decision on whether the Arkansas laws, under which four high schools were closed to prevent integration, are constitutional. They are before the Arkansas Supreme Court.

The Board, in a petition filed Jan. 21, asked Miller to authorize it to request Gov. Orval E. Faubus to return the schools to its control. It would embark on the temporary resumption of segregation if Faubus granted the request, the Board said.

Both the Justice Department and an attorney for the Negro school patrons who were original plaintiffs in the protracted integration litigation opposed it.

Judge Promises Ruling This Week On School Integration In Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A federal judge heard arguments in the Little Rock School integration case Tuesday and adjourned the hearing without issuing any order. He said he would rule later.

The hearing was held in connection with an appeals court mandate calling for immediate integration.

Opposing attorneys differed sharply over interpretation of the mandate. Litigants in the case are the Little Rock School Board and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

APPROVED PLAN

District Judge John E. Miller, who originally approved Little Rock's controversial plan of gradual integration, listened patiently to attorneys' arguments and then promised a formal order this week, probably Friday.

Asserting it was time "we looked the school situation here in the face," Miller said he would write a lengthy opinion designed to clear up some of the confusion in the case.

"This litigation cannot go on and on," Miller said. "I will try to write an opinion helpful in resolution of the problem before us."

ENJOIN BOARD

The mandate, issued by the eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, instructs Miller to enjoin the Little Rock School Board from leasing public properties to a private group for operation as segregated schools. It orders him to spell out steps under which the board should implement integration, even though the city's four high schools have been closed by Gov. Orval E. Faubus to forestall integration.

Attorneys for the NAACP and the U.S. Justice Department—which is taking part in the case as a friend of the court—disagree with school board attorneys when asked for opinions on what the exact wording of Miller's order should be.

RESUME PLAN

Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., NAACP counsel, and Donald B. MacGuineas of Washington, speaking for the justice department, contended Miller should direct the school board to resume the integration plan immediately, even if it puts board members in defiance of a state law under which Faubus closed the schools.

Herschel Friday Jr., attorney for the board, pointed out that his clients only took office a month ago and suggested that Miller not list any positive steps for the board to take. He asked, instead, that the judge give the board time to study the situation and make suggestions before a final decision.

NEW APPEAL MADE FOR INTEGRATION

U. S. and Attorneys for Negro Students Seeking Little Rock Action Now

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 6—The Justice Department and lawyers for Negro students urged today that the Little Rock school board be ordered to start immediate action to proceed with desegregation.

The board, which took office only a month ago, pleaded for time to formulate proposals in answer to a mandate from the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The attorneys appeared by invitation before Judge John E. Miller to offer suggestions as to how he should frame the district court order carrying the ruling of the appellate bench, issued last Nov. 9.

Following the argument the judge said he would hand down his order Saturday with an opinion setting forth the grounds upon which it was based.

Few observers saw any hope that today's proceedings would lead to the immediate reopening of the city's four high schools, closed throughout this school year under orders from Gov. Orval E. Faubus.

Misdemeanor Cited

Board lawyers are expected to return to court after Judge Miller issues his order and contend that the board is powerless to act under the provisions of the school closure law.

One board member, Traffic Judge Robert W. Laster, arose unexpectedly during the hearing to point out that the statute, now being challenged before the State Supreme Court, made it a misdemeanor for a board to reopen a school closed because of a desegregation controversy.

"Can any court order anyone to commit a crime?" he asked.

Judge Miller told the hearing that the Appeals bench had made it "perfectly clear" that the board could not lease its buildings or other properties for use by a private, segregated school system.

Board Action Scored

However, he added that the following provision in the mandate required interpretation:

"* * * [the board] shall take such affirmative steps as the district court may hereinafter direct, to facilitate and accomplish the integration of the Little Rock school district in accordance with the court's prior orders."

Wiley A. Branton, a Pine Bluff, Ark., lawyer retained by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, contended that the Appeals bench was aware that the Governor had closed the schools "and that the school board was not proceeding with the plan for desegregation."

Mr. Branton, who was accompanied by Thurgood Marshall, N. A. A. C. P. chief counsel, at the hearing, declared that the court was telling the board to open the schools under the plan.

Donald B. MacGuineas, chief of the general litigation section of the Justice Department's civil division, argued that the Appeals court was pointing out that "there was an order against the board to carry out the desegregation plan and that they were not living up to it."

Judge Miller interjected that the board had "that Act 4 [the closure law] staring them in the face and that Governor's proclamation. If there ever was an organization that was between a rock and a hard place they are it."

Herschel H. Friday Jr., who represented the board, asserted that its members needed time to familiariz themselves with the plan for gradual desegregation formulated by their successors.

Little Rock Case Hearing Slated Today

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The question of Little Rock's closed high schools will be argued before a federal judge here Tuesday but attorneys expect no immediate break in the long dispute.

U.S. District Judge John E. Miller has set the hearing for 9:30 a.m. (CST) to allow interested parties to be heard before he issues an order in the controversy later in the week.

Because of legal technicalities no decisive action is expected despite a higher federal court's direction to Judge Miller to order the Little Rock School Board to resume its integration program.

Legal authorities have said it would be difficult for a federal court to order the closed high schools reopened until the state law which gave Gov. Orval E. Faubus the power to close them is declared invalid.

There is a lawsuit pending before the Arkansas Supreme Court now challenging the constitutionality of these anti-integration statutes passed in a special session of the Legislature last September.

Legal precedent, if followed, would dictate that the federal courts wait until the State Supreme Court has ruled before accepting jurisdiction.

Thus when Judge Miller follows the mandate of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis and orders the school board to take steps to resume education on an integrated basis, the board is expected to reply that this is not posible since Faubus has the schools closed.

Little Rock School Unit May Get Aid

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 11 (UPI)—The Little Rock school board, given 30 days to figure out how to open and integrate the city's four high schools closed by Gov. Orval Faubus, may get some pressure taken off by the Arkansas Legislature.

The Legislature opens for 60 days tomorrow and at least one school board member, Municipal Judge Robert W. Laster, said he thinks it will abolish the school district.

"I have been told the Legislature has a bill ready to introduce to abolish the school district and make a sort of county district," said Laster.

A segregation leader said he is confident the Legislature will pass laws to "retain your right of self-government."

U.S. District Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith, Ark., yesterday ordered integration to proceed, but he failed, however, to order the four public high schools reopened.

This may leave the way open for further delays in integration.

The judge's order indicated the school board could abandon the Blossom Plan, a program of gradually integrating the schools by starting at the high school level and working down, year-by-year. The order said schools must be integrated "when and if" they open again.

Judge Miller's order was on a mandate of the U.S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, which also forbade the school board to lease out school property for use as private, segregated schools.

Central High School is the only one of the four closed schools under court order to integrate.

If the Legislature does not take the pressure off the school board immediately, the board is expected to point out that it cannot act in the face of the law which Faubus used to close the schools. The law makes it a misdemeanor for a school board to reopen any schools closed to block integration.

SCHOOL GETS 'A' IN LITTLE ROCK

All-White, Private High Can Receive Funds

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—The Thomas J. Raney High school received notice Wednesday it had been given an A accreditation by the State Education Department.

Supt. W. C. Brashears said the faculty of the private, all-white school was "definitely pleased and proud that our school has received the department's highest accreditation."

Accreditation makes the 350-pupil school eligible for state funds under Act 5 of the special legislative session last summer.

Brashears said he would have to meet with directors of the Little Rock Private School Corp., which set up the Raney school after Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed public high schools here, to discuss when and if applications for state aid would be made.

Under Act 5, any accredited school that asks may receive state funds on a per capita basis for students it accepts from the closed Little Rock schools. The funds are withheld from normal state turnbacks to the Little Rock school district.

The Raney school—named for Dr. Thomas J. Raney, president of the private schoo' corporation—opened in October, 1958. It has been operating on funds raised by public donation.

Faubus Requests New Laws To Maintain Segregation

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 13 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus called on the Arkansas Legislature today for more legislative ammunition to continue the battle against racial integration in public schools.

Outlining a program before the joint House-Senate session, Faubus asked for a constitutional amendment that would permit school districts at their option to give each student a fixed amount of money with which he could attend a school of his choice.

This approach, he said, would avoid the necessity of destroying the entire public school system in fighting integration.

Faubus reasoned that school districts not involved in litigation seeking to require them to integrate would simply continue to operate a dual, segregated system for whites and Negroes.

Teachers Bill Asked

Districts against which court suits were filed could help the creation of white, private schools by voting to permit each student to take his State money with him to a school of his choice.

But a constitutional amendment takes time to adopt because it requires a vote of the people. So the governor asked for an interim law to accomplish the same thing while awaiting the people's decision on the amendment which could not be in effect before 1960.

The Governor said also he wanted legislation that would cover, in the state teachers' retirement program, teachers who taught in private schools. The mechanics of this proposed law were not spelled out. But teachers have been reluctant to give up state retirement participation to teach in the private high schools at Little Rock.

This apparently would remove that obstacle.

3 School Bills Are Introduced In Legislature

Include Faubus Amendment For Student Aid In Integration Fight

PROVIDES LOCAL OPTION

Other Measures Would Assure Teacher Retirement Tenure, Allow Individual Grants In Emergencies

From The Commercial Appeal Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 22.—Three segregation proposals backed by Gov. Orval Faubus were introduced in the General Assembly Thursday, including his proposed constitutional amendment to set up a system of individual student aid in fighting integration.

East Arkansas legislators for the most part are handling the proposals, whose introduction marked official start of the Administration's "additional" anti-integration program. The Governor offered and gained adoption of six segregation bills in an August special session of the Legislature.

His proposed constitutional amendment would give counties the right to turn from the present system of financing schools—that is, through grants to public schools—to a system of "student education financial aid."

To Devise Formula

The General Assembly would be empowered to devise whatever formula thought necessary to carry out such a system. Whether or not counties forsook their present system of public schools would be left up to local option.

The student aid amendment would provide individual grants for both white and Negro students. It apparently would leave the individual parent or student free to attend a school of their choice, rather than be limited as at present by assignment from a school board.

Introducing the proposal in the Senate were Senators J. Lee Bearden of Leachville, Tom Aline of Brinkley, Jerry Screeton of Hazen and Clarence E. Bell of Parkin. Sponsors of the identical House measure are Representatives Carroll Hollensworth of Bradley County and Talbot Feild of Hempstead County. The proposed amendment appears assured of approval as one of three constitutional changes the Legislature can offer for popular vote in the 1960 general election.

The other two proposals, requiring only legislative enactment, would protect a student financially to assure schooling in an integration "emergency" and also assure school teachers of continued participation in the teacher retirement system if they start teaching in a private school.

The student aid bill, introduced in the House by Representative Lucien C. Rogers of Crittenden County and John P. Bethell of Prairie County, would allow a student having "special problems" to apply for financial aid to the district so he could continue his schooling elsewhere.

High Schools Ceased

The special problems obviously would refer to a situation similar to that now in Little Rock, where the four high schools are closed during the continuing integration dispute.

Senator Charles F. Smith of West Memphis and Senator Screeton are Senate authors of that proposal.

Senator Bell introduced the teacher retirement bill in the Senate, with Representative Guy French of Weiner the House sponsor.

Little Rock teachers have refrained from teaching in private schools here, with one reason advanced that of uncertainty about teacher retirement tenure.

Georgia, Little Rock Integration Pressed

U. S. Court Sets A 30-Day Limit For Ark. Board

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10—Federal Judge John E. Miller today set a thirty-day deadline for the Little Rock School Board to come up with a plan for integrating the city's closed high schools.

But the judge has answered a key question in the current phase of the integration controversy. He did not spell out whether he expects the board itself to seek reopening of the schools, or whether his court would be satisfied if the board simply prepares an integration plan and has it ready for use when and if the schools are reopened by any means.

Little Rock's four public high schools were closed Sept. 12 by Gov. Orval Faubus in an anti-integration move under powers given to him by a special session of the Arkansas Legislature last summer. The law under which he acted has not been tested in either state or Federal courts.

School board member Robert Laster, a city traffic judge, said he felt Judge Miller's order placed the board in "an untenable position" because compliance with any integration directive would mean the board had to violate the state school closing law.

Mr. Laster said he felt the board was powerless to act and had no alternative but to wait out the thirty-day period and see what developed.

Other members of the six-man board declined immediate comment.

Judge Miller's order named all members of the board as defendants. They were elected Dec. 6 to succeed a former board which drew up Little Rock's integration plan in 1955.

Gov. Faubus declined to comment on Judge Miller's action immediately. So did Wiley A. Branton, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which is the plaintiff in the integration case.

Judge Miller's order, which put into effect a mandate issued by the 8th United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, simply instructed the board to "take positive steps" to implement a previously approved intergration plan. It called for a report to the court within thirty days on what steps had been taken or proposed.

Gov. Faubus invoked the state school closing law after the United States Supreme Court turned down a request for a two-and-one-half-year delay in the integration plan.

Today's order also enjoined the board from leasing public school properties to any group for operation as segregation schools and "from engaging in any acts . . . to impede, thwart or frustrate the integration plan mandated against them."

Several private schools were up here to take care of some of the 3,700 students displaced in the school closings. Two are church-operated schools and one, which is operated by the Little Rock Private School Corp., is supported by public donations.

Only white children attend the private schools. Nothing has been done about establishing a school for Negroes.

The Arkansas Legislature convenes in regular biennial session Monday and there is speculation it may take further action in a possible effort to defy integration orders.

RULES AGAINST BIAS—United States District Judge John E. Miller, who yesterday ordered the Little Rock school board to speed integration.

Faubus Insists Closings Haven't Hurt Students

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Jan. 9 (AP)—The closing of high schools has not deprived any student of an education who wanted it, Gov. Orval E. Faubus told newspaper people from 32 States here yesterday.

But he said several hundred students, mostly Negroes, apparently do not want to attend school.

"We offered to use some of the public donated funds to set up private schools for them (Negroes), but on advice of Roy Wilkins of the NAACP they refused, probably thinking it would hurt their case," Gov. Faubus said.

The Governor's statements came in reply to questions asked by delegates to a joint convention of the National Editorial Association and the Arkansas Press Association.

All four of the city's public high schools are closed by order of the Governor as an anti-integration measure.

Gov. Faubus said that even if Little Rock students lost an entire year "they would still be educationally ahead of students in integrated Washington, D. C."

Washington, he said, has dropped from a high position it had before integration to a spot two grades behind the national education level.

Text Of Order On Integration In Little Rock

From The Commercial Appeal Memphis Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 10. — Here's the text of the order issued Saturday by Federal Judge John E. Miller of Fort Smith directing the Little Rock School Board to carry out integration in the public schools. The School Board was listed as defendants with Negro pupils and parents, represented by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, listed as plaintiffs.

It is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1. That this court's order entered Sept. 25, 1958, denying and dismissing plaintiffs motion for further relief be and is set aside and vacated.

2. That defendants, Ed I. McKinley Jr., Everett A. Tucker Jr., Ted L. Lamb, Russell H. Matson, Robert W. Laster, Ben D. Rowland Sr., (school board members) and Terrill E. Powell (school superintendent), and officers, agents, servants, employes and attorneys, and all persons in active concert or participation with them, are hereby enjoined from taking any further steps or action without the express approval of this court.

(a) To transfer possession, control or operation, whether directly or indirectly, of any of the senior high schools or any other property or facilities of the Little Rock school district, to any organization or person for carrying on any segregated school operations of any nature.

(b) From engaging in any other acts, whether independently or in participation with anyone else, which are capable of serving to impede, thwart or frustrate the execution of the integration plan mandated against them and which was approved May 24, 1955, by the then board of directors of the Little Rock school district.

3. That the said defendants are further directed in accordance with the said mandate, to move forward within their official powers to carry out the integration plan, and to take affirmative steps on their own initiative consistent with their official powers to facilitate and accomplish the operation of the Little Rock school district on a non-discriminatory basis.

4. That within 30 days from the rate hereof said defendants shall submit to the court a specific and detailed report of the affirmative steps they have taken and propose to take in compliance with this order. Prior to filing, such report shall be served upon the plaintiffs and the United States of America.

5. The court reserves jurisdiction herein to enter such further orders as may be necessary and appropriate.

This 9th day of January, 1959."

Little Rock Board Receives Integration Plan Deadline

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 10 (AP).—United States District Judge John E. Miller today laid down a 30-day deadline for the Little Rock School Board to come up with a plan for integrating the city's closed high schools.

But the judge left unanswered a key question in the current phase of the integration controversy.

Judge Miller did not spell out whether he expects the board itself to seek reopening of the schools, or whether his court would be satisfied if the board simply prepares an integration plan and has it ready for use when and if the schools are reopened by any means.

Closed in September

Little Rock's four public high schools were closed September 12 by Gov. Orval E. Faubus in an anti-integration move. Gov. Faubus shut them under powers given to him by a special session of the Arkansas Legislature last summer. The school closing law has not been tested in court.

School board member Robert Laster, a city traffic judge, said he felt Judge Miller's order placed the board in "an untenable position" because compliance with any integration directive would mean the board had to violate the State school closing law.

Mr. Laster said he felt the board was powerless to act in the dilemma and had no alternative but to wait out the 30-day period and see what developed.

Judge Miller's order named all members of the board as defendants. They were elected December 6 to succeed a former board which drew up Little Rock's integration plan in 1955.

Judge Miller's order, which put into effect a mandate issued by the Eighth United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St Louis, simply instructed the board to "take positive steps" to implement a previously approved integration plan.

"Positive Steps"

It called for a report to the court within 30 days on what steps had been taken or proposed.

Gov. Faubus invoked the State school closing law after the United States Supreme Court turned down a request for a 2½-year delay in the integration plan.

Today's order also enjoined the board from leasing public school properties to any group for operation as segregated schools and "from engaging in any acts. . . to impede, thwart or frustrate the integration plan mandated against them."

Several private schools were set up here to take care of some of the 3,700 students displaced in the school closings. Two are church-operated schools and one, which is operated by the Little Rock School Corp., is supported by public donations.

Only white children attend the private schools. Nothing has been done about establishing a school for Negroes.

School Board Loses Plea For Temporary Segregation

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI)—U.S. District Judge John E. Miller turned down Tuesday a request of the Little Rock School Board that it be allowed to open the city's four closed high schools segregated while it prepares a new plan of integration.

Wiley A. Branton, chief legal counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Arkansas, immediately asked for a three-judge federal court to determine if the law Gov. Orval Faubus used to close the schools is constitutional.

The school board wanted to open the schools segregated immediately then be given until Aug. 15 to present a new integration plan to replace the one which led to rioting at Central High School Sept. 23, 1957.

Miller, however, accepted a report from the board which in effect said it could do nothing in the face of four state laws passed by a special legislative session last August and which Faubus used to close the schools.

Judge Miller said that under the gradual integration plan which he approved in 1956 and which was later approved by the U. S. Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis, "all public schools would have to be opened on a non-segregated basis."

Miller said he was conscious that many problems faced a board trying to bring integration to a school.

"If they are unable to operate under that plan, they should not be denied the right to formulate a new plan of operation," he said.

School Superintendent Terrell E. Powell took the stand and said that 1,085 white and Negro students were getting no schooling since Faubus closed the three white and one Negro schools to block integration Sept. 12.

Delay Is Asked On School Plan At Little Rock

Board Petitions U.S. Court To Give It Until Aug. 15 To Set Up Program

REOPENING IS PROPOSED

New Integration Act Would Be Based On Study By Expert As Yet Unnamed —May 'Start All Over'

By KENNETH JOHNSON
From The Commercial Appeal
Little Rock Bureau

LITTLE ROCK, Jan. 21.—The Little Rock School Board Wednesday asked Federal Court that it be given until Aug. 15 to come up with a new plan dealing with the integration dispute here.

Meanwhile, the board proposes to reopen the four closed high schools at the earliest possible date on a segregated basis and continue that way until the new plan could be presented and court action taken on it.

Would Replace Blossom Plan

The petition, if approved by the courts, would "junk" the present "Blossom Plan" which courts have upheld and which calls for integration starting on the high school level.

The new plan would be based on a study by "an expert in the public education field" whom the board already has approached toward possible employment. Board members declined to identify the expert, and said they themselves had no definite ideas at the moment for a new plan.

The petition was filed by Herschel Friday, School Board attorney, in Federal Judge John E. Miller's court. Judge Miller, regularly stationed at Fort Smith, said he doubted if he could set down a hearing on the request before the week of Feb. 2.

The board petition asked for authority to reopen all schools so they would be available to students for the second term of school starting Monday.

The board's petition noted that it sought to "do equity as well as ask it . . . our study reveals most Negroes are not going to high school. It is only equity to permit them to return to school."

Negro School Closed, Too

That was a reference to closure of Horace Mann High School, the all-Negro school closed along with the three white high schools here Sept. 12 by Gov. Orval Faubus. Most white students have found other means of schooling since then.

The petition alluded to Governor Faubus when it asked court permission "to petition the Governor of the state to return the closed schools to jurisdiction of the board."

Ed I. McKinley, board chairman, said he had talked to the Governor about the matter and had received assurances that if the court granted the motion, Mr. Faubus would "co-operate with the board."

Board members declined comment when asked if the new board might be thinking of "starting all over" and perhaps starting integration on the lower grade, rather than the high school level.

A start on the high school level and working gradually down through all grades is the plan presently under court directive to proceed. It gets its name from former School Supt. Virgil T. Blossom.

One Member's View

One board member, Ted Lamb, said he thought the board eventually would have to start integration somewhere under present court orders, even if a change in plans is allowed.

Judge Miller, in his Jan. 9 ruling, left the door open for presentation of a new plan if the board chose to do so.

The board said it had concluded it would be impossible to carry out the Blossom plan under the "air of tenseness" still prevailing.

Little Rock Uneasy On Eve of Classes

Token Mixing Slated

Segregationists Still Are Looking for Way Out

Jacksonville, Fla. Times-Union

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 11 (AP) — Uneasiness settled over Little Rock tonight on the eve of the reopening of its four public high schools to token integration.

Richard segragationists still sought desperately for a way out. They had even declared a boycott of Main street merchants.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus finally spoke up, too.

"If the Little Rock situation is settled and if the schools are integrated, it will be under the compulsion of federal bayonets," he said.

Faubus until today had been strangely quiet. He had been expected to call a special legislative session. He called none. But segregationists still rallied around him. They planned to gather on the capitol lawn tomorrow to ask him to "do something."

Faubus, speaking today before a farmers union meeting, gave no hint of any action he might take to halt desegregation of the schools.

Details Settled

The school board buttoned down the details for integrating six Negroes into two of the schools under a state pupil placement law, already challenged by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Twice Faubus has stopped integration in Little Rock. In the fall of 1957 he used the National Guard to temporarily turn back nine Negroes at Central High School. Last year he closed the schools under a quickly enacted state law recently declared unconstitutional by a federal court.

The governor implied federal force was behind the integration and referred to reports of troop movements in the Pine Bluff area, 60 miles southeast of Little Rock.

At Pine Bluff, Col. R. W. Dodds, commanding officer of the Pine Bluff Arsenal, said 110 Army reservists are holding a two-week training course there but it had no connection with the Little Rock situation.

Police Chief Gene Smith has been charged with the job of keeping order around the schools. He is not new to the task. He was at Central High School in 1957 when mob violence flared there after Faubus was forced by a federal court to remove his guardsmen.

Faubus said, "The NAACP does not want this (the Little Rock integration squabble) settled" because Mrs. L. C. (Daisy) Bates, state NAACP president, could no longer attend $10-a-plate-dinners and NAACP attorneys no longer could collect fees in integration cases.

Faubus Arrest?

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, a Baptist minister and outspoken segregationist leader, said he had been told the federal government plans to arrest Faubus tomorrow to prevent his interference with integration. He gave an unnamed out-of-state newspaperman as his source.

Faubus, returning to his office in the capitol late in the day, refused to commit himself to any plans for tomorrow on integration, including his possible appearance at a segregationist rally at the capitol.

Chief Smith refused to say whether he had heard any rumors of possible trouble at the schools but Everett Tucker Jr., president of the school board, said he expected the integration to come peacefully.

"The people (of Little Rock)," Tucker said, "are not particularly happy with the circumstances of the reopening but they are concerned over the reputation Little Rock may have achieved in the last two years.

"We hope the reopening will be kept as routine as humanly possible. We are anxious that the situation be reported factually and that we'll get back on a road to normal education."

The board has warned any student disorders will be dealt with "fairly, firmly and effectively."

White students were assured of legal help through a segregationist fund should they be expelled over any problems growing out of the integration.

Rev. Pruden said the Freedom Fund would furnish the money. He and Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, president of the Capital Citizens Council head the fund which is suported by public donations.

Pruden said if violence comes tomorrow "I believe it will be invited by Police Chief Gene Smith." He called Smith arrogant and brutal and "self-appointed hero of integrationists."

Smith has tightened his control over his 150-man force. He met with newsmen but not to talk about his "security measures." He told them they would cover the story by his rules or they would get no press credentials to go though his lines.

The rugged, six-foot-two inch police chief refused to say where his perimeter around the schools would be set up. He indicated it might be as much as two blocks. He refused, too, to say how near parents might go to the schools.

The schools, opening nearly a month earlier than originally planned, will have classes only a half day until September. Hall High in fashionable Pulaski Heights will be the first to integrate. Three Negro girls are to report there for classes at 9:30 a.m. (CST).

Integration returns to Central High School at 1:30 p.m. (CST). Three Negroes are assigned there, too, but only one is expected to report. He is Jefferson Thomas, 16-year-old senior. One of the trio assigned to Central is attending a summer school in Chicago and the other apparently has enough credits for graduation.

Only yesterday the segregationist Capital Citizens Council declared a boycott against Main street merchants and others who employed Negroes. Business men reported today they had felt no reaction from it but Amis Guthridge, council attorney, insisted it would be continued until integration was stopped.

Token Integration For Little Rock

New Orleans La.
Sat 8-15-59

Little Rock, Ark.-(Special To The Weekly)--The Capital Citizens Council pulled another 'low punch' from under its coat of hate here Monday, with a boycott pledged to fight racial mixing in public schools at any and all costs.

The target of the boycott was downtown merchants on Main Street.

According to the Council's spokesman and attorney Amis Guthridge, downtown merchants have been accused of backing a School Board decision to reopen public high schools Wednesday to token integration.

Guthridge charged that Merchants have formed a coalition with the Negroes. He said, "Little Rock is being run politically by Main Street merchants and Negroes, and its about time the Negroes shared in the suffering."

Monday and Tuesday, business seemed to be going on as usual. Shoppers were coming and going with no outward appearance they were aware of segregationists' economic war.

Despite the action of the Council, four public high schools in Little Rock after months of wrangling, frustration and dissolution were scheduled to open Wednesday, August 12.

To prevent nine Negro pupils who had integrated Central High school in 1957 under federal troops protection, from re-entering, the schools were closed on September 12, 1958.

Wednesday, three of the original nine pupils, were expected to accept peacefully admission to Central High. The trio was selected by the Little Rock school board, now controlled by moderates from among 49 Negroes who registered.

Hall High, another Little Rock school located in one of the most fashionable sections of the city, was assigned to three Negro pupils.

The six represent the total number of Negro students assigned to previously all-white schools.

The opening of the schools Wednesday, instead of Sept. 8, was believed to be designed to head off any probable legislative action by Faubus and the state legislature to keep the schools closed.

In Dallas, Clarence Laws, NAACP Southwest field secretary, warned that the South is watching the recent development in Little Rock. Whatever happens there, will set the pace...." of integration throughout the South, he said.

Token Integration Quietly Accepted At Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)— The Little Rock Board of Directors Tuesday aligned itself against the segregationist position after almost two years of unyielding neutrality in the integration strugle here.

The board said it could find no basis for seregationists charges that police used brutality and violated a constitutional right of peaceful assembly when they quelched an anti - integration demonstration Wednesday at Central High School.

The seven-member board said it felt officers acted legally to maintain order and protect life and property. It referred complaints filed by two women segregationists to the U. S. Justice Department as the proper authority to probe alleged violations of civil rights.

Previously, the board had refused to involve itself in any manner with the integration issue. But it drew segregationist criticism for ordering police to maintain order when schools opened.

The Rev. Wesley Pruden, chaplain of the Capital Citizens Council, retorted that the Justice Department was in league with city police and that agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation donned police uniforms and helped repel demonstrators.

An FBI spokesman at Washington said he would not dignify Pruden's stateement with a reply.

Four Negroes attended two once-white schools for a fifth straight day Tuesday. There were no reported incidents outside the schools and school officials said everything was quiet inside.

Jefferson Thomas, the only Negro enrolled in Central High, said white students have ignored him. Thomas said three Negro girls who attend Hall High told him they were very happy there.

Seven students—three at Central and four at Hall — have requested transfer out of classes with Negroes under a 1958 law which requires school authorities to honor such requests.

Supt. Terrell Powell said the transfers were made under a school board policy of obeying every valid law pertaining to operation of the schools.

Attendance at four high schools continued to climb, reaching a total of 2,656. Average daily attendance was about 3,500 before Gov. Orval E. Faubus closed the schools against integration a year ago.

Little Rock School Head Shifts To Delaware School

World Birmingham, Ala.
Oct. 7-11-59

WILMINGTON, Del. (ANP)—Dr. L. M. Christophe, who resigned the principalship of Little Rock's Horace Mann (Negro) High school, has accepted the principal's seat at a local integrated school-Howard High school.

Dr. Christophe was Mann's principal from its opening in 1956. He gave no reason for his resignation, but did express appreciation for his long association—29 years—with the Little Rock school system.

At Howard High, Dr. Christophe will receive about $4,000 more a year. Educated at Talledega college, University of Chicago and New York university, the principal is a past president, Arkansas Teachers association, and was a member of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Education and the Arkansas delegation to the White House Conference on Education.

A native of New Orleans, he moved to Arkansas when but a child and was graduated from a Little Rock high school.

Board Ponders Plea

Top Negro Student Bids for Jackson

The Miami Herald
Miami, Fla.

By PHIL MEYER
Herald Education Writer

The Dade School Board was asked to admit a top Negro student to Miami Jackson High School Wednesday as the current series of pupil assignment hearings drew to a close.

14k

The board voted to take more testimony next Wednesday in the case of Theodore Gibson Jr., Booker T. Washington sophomore, who seeks to enter the all-white school.

P. 2-A

School Superintendent Joe Hall said young Gibson's request to attend Jackson was denied because "he attended Booker T. Washington High School in the past" and because of the greater distance from his home. The student, who lives with his grand mother, walks eight-tenths of a mile to the Negro school. He is 2.04 miles from Jackson. On cross examination, Hall admitted that Jackson has students who travel greater distances.

Of the six cases heard this month, Gibson's was the only one in which Hall failed to cite below-average academic achievement as a basis for denying a reassignment request. A nationwide achievement test showed that the 15-year-old Negro was in the top seven per cent of all ninth graders last year.

His father is the Rev. Theodore Gibson, head of the Miami Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Thurs. 10-29-59.

In two other hearings Wednesday, Mrs. Ruby Castelow of North Miami Beach told the school board that nearly 100 Negro children who live near all-white Fulford Elementary School ride a bus six miles to an all-Negro school. She seeks to have her 7-year-old twins assigned to Fulford rather than Bunche Park Elementary, Opa-locka.

As in three previous hearings, Supt. Joe Hall said that the Negro children were assigned to the all-Negro schools they they attended last year because their academic achievement was below average. Adjusting to a new school might impede their progress, he said.

The board took both of the Castelow cases under advisement.

Victims of Desegregation Disputes

Majority of Closed Schools' Seniors Barred by College Entrance Heads

Last of Three Articles

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

High school seniors locked out of classes this year by desegregation disputes in Virginia and Arkansas will face a rough time getting into many of the major colleges.

That is the view of college admissions officers who attended a conference in Carmel, N. Y., last week under the auspices of the College Entrance Examination Board.

The men who have the most to say about who is and is not admitted to college agreed that some outstanding applicants will be accepted despite school closings and that some would not have made the grade even if schools had remained open.

But for many students the lost school year of 1958-59 will mean rejection by the college of their choice, the admissions officers said.

"We'll look at individual cases," said Dean John U. Munro of Harvard College, "but we're not prepared to run a preparatory school for youngsters who have missed the 12th grade. We'll take just those who are ready for Harvard."

Monro said Harvard has received "many good students" in past years from Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., one of the closed schools. This year, he added, Harvard will require these youngsters to furnish evidence of "some scort of 12th grade instruction," and an evaluation of how much they learned.

"We feel terribly sorry for these kids," Monro commented, "but we don't want to strengthen the impression that it's all right to finesse the 12th grade—or any grade.

"Of course some who might have made it will miss out."

B. Alden Thresher, director of admissions for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, told a reporter:

"We're not going to take it out on the kids but we're not going to encourage school closings either. High school record is not our only criterion for admission, and we'll consider each applicant on his merits.

"I'm sure a great many marginal cases are not going to make it because of school closings."

C. William Edwards, director of admissions for Princeton University, said his school will waive the requirement of a high school diploma for applicants from the closed schools, but will "expect them to measure up on a full round of tests."

"Some won't make it," Edwards added. "We wouldn't be doing a student any favor by accepting him and then throwing him out after three months because he couldn't do the work."

A few of the colleges represented here indicated they would "bend over backwards" to accommodate applicants from closed school systems.

"We're likely to be more lenient with these boys," said Ben F. Cameron Jr., director of admissions for the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn.

"We hesitate to give aid and comfort to Mr. Faubus by accepting the boys he displaced, but we decided we could not vent our displeasure on the boys."

Cameron said his school has received applicants from three of the four communities which closed schools last fall—Little Rock and Charlottesville and Front Royal, Va.

Applicants will be considered on the basis of whatever high school record is available Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and special achievement tests in English and mathematics Cameron reported.

Officials of the College Entrance Examination Board said scores are not yet available for Scholastic Aptitude Tests administered last month. They said the tests would probably not show "effects of short term closings" but would begin to indicate shortcomings later if schools are not reopened.

Mother Gertrude Brady, registrar of Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart in Purchase, N. Y., said her school is "sympathetic to the predicament" of youngsters affected by school closings, and will "help them every way we can."

Admissions Director Helen McCann of Barnard College said her school will consider applicants on the basis of test scores alone.

Must Be Extraordinary

But Clyde Vroman, admissions director for the University of Michigan, which accepts 1000 out-of-state freshmen each year, said he would "just rule out" applicants from the closed schools unless they presented extraordinary qualifications.

"We don't want to encourage school closings," Vroman declared.

Admissions dean Eugene S. Wilson of Amherst College said applicants would be considered on the basis of tests and "how they spent their senior year."

A similar comment came from John S. Hafer, dean of admissions at Syracuse University.

"It isn't their fault that they aren't going to school," Hafer said.

Communities Held Capable Of Handling School Problem

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 27 (AP)—There is nothing wrong with U.S. high schools today that the communities themselves can't fix if they put their minds to it.

That is the gist of a report made today by Dr. James B. Conant after a two-year survey that carried him to every part of the country.

But Conant emphasized one point. Small high schools—those with less than 100 in the graduating class—can be satisfactory only at exorbitant expense. Their number, he said, must be drastically reduced through school district reorganization and consolidation. And, he added, nearly three - quarters of the nation's high schools fall in that category.

"Aside from this important change," Conant said, "I believe no radical alteration in the basic pattern of American education is necessary in order to improve our public high schools."

The Conant report came in a book, "The American High School Today" (McGraw-Hill) published today. Thousands of copies are to be distributed here to convention delegations of the American School Boards Assn. Conant is addressing the convention tomorrow. It was originally billed as a final report, but Conant has announced he will continue his survey for at least another year. His work is being financed by a grant from the Carnegie Corp. of New York.

There is nothing startlingly new in the Conant book. The educator and former ambassador has been hitting the high spots from the report in speeches all over the country during the past year.

His travels have shown him, he said, "there is no such thing as a typical American high school. Furthermore, it is impossible to draw a blueprint of an ideal high school. A school that would be highly satisfactory in a small industrial city would be unsatisfactory in many suburban areas, and vice versa."

Conant said he had one general criticism of the schools he has visited: the academically talented students, those generally in the upper 15 per cent of their class, aren't being challenged enough, don't work hard enough, and aren't offered programs with a wide enough range.

Conant submitted a list of 21 specific recommendations for strengthening public high schools within their present framework.

One was a basic course of studies to be taken by every student, including four years of English and three or four years of social studies. For the brighter students, the program would be considerably tougher and include four years of math and four years of one foreign language. The latter program would call for 15 hours of home work each week.

He also called for greatly expanded guidance and counseling programs, starting in the elementary schools.

The three requirements for a good high school he said, are: the best possible school board, a first rate superintendent, and a good principal.

Idea of Separate School for Superior Pupils Hit

Step Would Alter Social Structure, Is View

The theory that secondary schools should be geared to the intellectually elite alone was soundly rapped here Wednesday by the national chairman of the 1960 White House Conference on Children and Youth.

"I can't understand the warped theory that secondary schools should be geared to the intellectually elite alone," said Mrs. Rollin Brown of Los Angeles, Calif., the chairman.

"Such a step would change the nation's social structure and even the government," she said.

Mrs. Brown was addressing the regional white house conference meeting co-sponsored by the Louisiana Conference on Social Welfare and the Louisiana Organization for State Legislature. The one-day meeting was held in the Jewish Community Center.

NO SEPARATE SCHOOL

In an interview following her speech, Mrs. Brown gave the following views on high schools such as Benjamin Franklin for children of superior intellect:

"While I am definitely for giving the superior students superior courses, I feel that it can all be accomplished under one roof . . . another school is not necessary.

"Advanced classes could be offered for those students qualified. . . . If, for example, a student were poor in science but outstanding in English, he could attend the superior English course and an average science class."

Commenting that students should broaden themselves, Mrs. Brown, who is the immediate past president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, said that it's not a good idea for individuals to associate only with others of equal intelligence.

Higgins Speaks

"No one can go through life associating only with those of equal intelligence . . . an individual must learn to cope with this and understand others," she said.

"Neither do I agree with the tendency to over-emphasize the science to the point tha he humanities are literally ignored. This, too, is too confining on an individual," she added.

Mrs. Brown addressed the group on the history and background of the White House conference.

Lawrence Higgins, executive secretary of the Louisiana youth commission, also addressed the morning session.

Noting that some people question the reason for making services available during times of prosperity, Higgins quoted the average education level of four Louisiana parishes.

He said that in Orleans parish, the total average school years finished is 8.6 and of that total, he non-whie group averages 6.5.

Other Parishes

The other three parishes given were: St. Martin, total, 3.6, non-white, 1.0; Evangeline, total, 4.4, non-whie, .9; and East Baton Rouge Hotal, 9.8, non-white, 5.3.

"And more and more people are moving from the rural areas into the urban sections of the state" said Higgins.

Pointing out that the age groups under 18 and over 65 are increasing while the group from 18 to 64 is decreasing, Higgins said:

"We must recognize both that the group which we think of as the economic producing group is shrinking and that we will have to provide more services for those under 18."

May be Upturn

Higgins also said that the decrease in the non-white group of Louisiana's population has stopped and that there may be an upturn.

"We must raise the level of education and the available training," he emphasized.

Summarizing the subcommittee reports of the Louisiana advisory committe, Higgins said that the suggestions included dealing with school drop-outs, the child labor problem, child health and education.

Three workshops were held during the afternoon session. The moderators included Miss Naomi Gardberg, Mrs. Moise Cahn and Judge Leo Blessing.

Mrs. Mary Evelyn Parker, chairman of the Louisiana state advisory committee, presided.

New Negro School Due In Lowndes

The Times-Union Bureau

VALDOSTA, Ga., Feb. 18—Accord has been reached by the Lowndes County Board of Education on building one new Negro high school, but no decision was announced on when or where it will be built.

Under provisions of a bond issue, a consolidated Negro high school was included in the county's overall school building program. After the bonds were issued, several delegations appeared before the School board seeking two new Negro high schools, one in the northern section of the county and another in the southern section, instead of the single plant as originally planned.

A dispute arose between factions among the Negro population with some supporting the one school program in order to get a complete facility which would operate wide-range vocational classes and others supporting the two-school program.

As a result of the issue, the school board tabled further action on the matter. The threat of delay resulted in solid backing for the one school when delegations appeared before the board yesterday.

Today County School Supt. Clyde Meacham indicated that the matter was discussed further in executive session but no decision had been reached. He indicated the board wanted to study the matter further before making any commitment on the school construction.

Valdosta School Emptied After A Bomb Threat Call

VALDOSTA, Ga. — (UPI) — The Pinevale Negro high school here was evacuated Monday afternoon after an anonymous bomb threat was telephoned to the principal's office.

Less than an hour later, after Valdosta police were unable to find a bomb and the 470 students evacuated, a second call was received saying:

"You didn't find it, did you?" The caller then hung up said C. C Hall, Negro principal who took both calls.

Classes were resumed late Monday and police are investigating. Two white patrolmen have been assigned to guard the school Monday night.

Board Reneged

School Double-X Bared in Georgia

(Courier Press Service)

VALDOSTA, Ga.—Revelations of a double-cross of local Negroes by the Lowndes County Board of Education have been bared by Tenney Griffin, vice president of the local Valdosta Times.

According to Mr. Tenney, the school board managed to secure passage of an $800,000 school bond issue with the support of Negroes by promising the Negro leaders that a new high school would be built for Negroes, in every way equal to that for whites. The bond issue passed, but the new Negro high school has never materialized.

TIME AFTER time, Negro leaders have approached the school board to see what gives with the non-existent new high school promised them.

They have been given excuse after excuse, until now the situation has almost reached the crisis stage.

Negro leaders have conferred with attorneys relative to bringing suit against the school board, but fear to do so because the NAACP might step into the picture. The school board fears that possibility also, since it might lead to a desegregation suit.

Thus, a dilemma faces Lowndes County, for the bond money has already been over-allocated to white schools and there isn't enough to build a Negro high school.

What's to be done about it? Time will tell, but Negro leaders are hot under their collars over the way the school board "used" them and then failed to keep their much-heralded promises.—TWA.

School Terrorists Ousted In Chicago

Five students who have been expelled from Harper High school for attacking and pelting the sole Negro boy student there with eggs last week, will be given hearings in Family Court.

The youth, Theodore Reid of 1336 W. 64th st., has been a victim of spit-balling threats and blows ever since he enrolled at Harper on Feb. 2.

Several weeks ago three other boys who ganged him, were expelled from the school, but their case did not go to Family Court because the youth and his mother, satisfied with the action taken by the school principal and law authorities, would not press the case further.

Racial tension has been high at the school ever since Negro students began enrolling there several years ago. This tension and overt actions by the white students has kept Negro enrollment down although it is reported that a large number of Negro high school students live in the area.

Currently 15 Negro girls and the one boy attend Harper High. The two or three Negro boys who have enrolled each year, have been the victims of vicious attacks both at the school and off the school grounds and this has caused them to drop out or seek transfers to other schools.

The girls have withstood the attacks made against them and each year more girls have joined the few already there.

John T. McMahon, principal at the school, has said he will not tolerate racial violence in the school, and has sought the help of the Student Council in maintaining order at the institution.

Police are stationed at Harper to help keep order and prevent any serious attacks from occurring.

Negro Gets 4th Ind. Appointment

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ind.—A fourth Indiana Governor has named Charles E. Rochelle, principal of Lincoln High School, to serve on the state's highest education body.

Governor Harold Handley reappointed Dr. Rochelle as secretary-treasurer of the state Board of Education's General Education Commission. The 63-year-old education leader was first chosen to the post in 1947. His current appointment expires in 1963.

Nine Students May Not Return To High School

DES MOINES, Iowa — (UPI)— Nine students involved in a walkout at Amos Hiatt Junior high school here in an apparent racial-tinged dispute will not be permitted to return to classes at the school, School Supt. John H. Harris said Friday.

The nine may be permitted to attend other Junior high schools depending on their promises of good citizenship, he said.

Other students involved in the walkout Oct. 19 may not be allowed to return to classes at Hiatt, he said, but no action was taken pending further investigation.

Harris said six of the nine students who will not be permitted to return to Amos Hiatt were involved in a fight near the school grounds between white and Negro students Oct. 16 which is believed to have precipitated the walkout. The other three were regarded as ringleaders of the walkout, he said.

Sixteen students were suspended from classes after the walkout. Four were referred to juvenile court but their cases were referred back to school officials.

Small Institutions Given Low Rating for Deficiencies, Some Because of Pupil Loss

Louisville Ky C-J Mar. 2-
Wash. 3-18-59

By ALLAN M. TROUT
Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., March 17.—The State Board of Education Tuesday placed 44 small Kentucky high schools on emergency rating. Courier-Journal

These schools already were rated B. The new rating of BE (the E standing for emergency) is the lowest at which they can remain open under the law.

Nine are Negro high schools that have not been integrated, yet some have lost pupils to partial integration, thus reducing still further the standards of the Negro schools.

In other action at its regular quarterly meeting, the board:

1. Approved for State accreditation the four-year teacher-training program of Centre College for elementary and secondary teachers.

2. Approved for State accreditation the teacher-training course in library science offered by Kentucky Wesleyan.

3. Heard the good news that only 2,300 emergency teachers have been employed in the 1958-59 term, in contrast to 2,800 in the 1957-58 term. The reduction was achieved despite the gradual increase in teaching positions.

Deficiencies Blamed

Dr. Robert R. Martin, superintendent of public instruction and chairman of the board, explained that many deficiencies caused his department to recommend the emergency rating for 44 high schools. The chief factors listed included low enrollment, inadequate programs, and substandard buildings and equipment.

In addition, the Negro schools have been hurt by the confusion and indecisions of resistance to full integration. This group of Negro schools, with the new rating of BE, follows:

Dotson High, Caldwell County; Riverview, Fulton County; Rosenwald, Jessamine County; Rosenwald, Knox County; Booker T. Washington, Ashland; Mason, Lancaster; Million, Earlington; Dunham, Jenkins, and Rosenwald, Providence.

White schools given the BE rating are:

Forkland High and Parksville High, both in Boyle County; Lynn Grove, New Concord, and Hazel, all in Calloway County; Marrowbone, Cumberland County; Auxier, Floyd County; Buckeye and Camp Dick Robinson, both in Garrard County.

Farmington, Graves County; Dalton and Hanson, both in Hopkins County; Cordia and Knott, both in Knott County; Stinnett Settlement, Leslie County; Laurel, Lewis County; Chandlers Chapel, Logan County; Bristow, Warren County; Mackville, Washington County, and Slaughters, Webster County.

Also the following City high schools: Augusta, Cloverport, Williamstown, South Portsmouth, Van Lear, Stearns, Burgin, Carlisle, Ferguson, and Midway.

Also the following private high schools—St. James, Bracken County; Riverside Institute, Breathitt County; St. Bernard, Casey County; Our Lady of The Mountains, Johnson County, and St. Agnes, Union County.

The board also issued a warning to 10 Class A high schools. This means if deficiencies are not corrected within reasonable time these schools will be dropped to the rating of B. Schools thus warned were:

Paris High, Paris; Albany High, Clinton County; Martin High, Floyd County; Glendale High, Hardin County; Douglass High, Henderson; Holy Name High, Henderson; Tyner High, Jackson County; Flaget High, Louisville; Russell County High, and Simpsonville High, Shelby County.

Two Class A schools warned in the past were reduced to B rating by the board. They are Middleburg High, in Casey County, and Wolfe County High.

But the board upgraded two groups of schools. It moved Silver Grove High and Lewisport High from BE to B rating. And it raised three schools from BE or B to the rating of A—North Middletown, Bourbon County; Oneida Institute, Clay County, and Greenup High, Greenup.

Four Get A Ratings

Seven high schools, all to be absorbed next term in new consolidated centers, were given the rating of AT or BT (the T standing for terminated). Four are in Christian County—Crofton, Lacy, and Sinking Fork, all three BT, and South Christian, AT.

Two are in Edmonson County—Kyrock and Sunfish, both BT. The last is Fulgham High, Hickman County, BT.

The board gave rating of A to four high schools which, as the result of consolidations, were newly opened for this term—Bryan Station High, Fayette County; Franklin County High, Jessamine County High, and La-Rue County High. It gave the rating of B to newly opened St. Benedict High, Bullitt County.

Shreveport To Dedicate $1,500,000 School Sun.

The ultra modern J. S. Clark Junior High School, Shreveport, Louisiana, named in the honor of the late Dr. J. S. Clark, founder and President Emeritus of Southern University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, will be dedicated Sunday, January 25, 1959, 3:00 p.m. with Dr. F. G. Clark, present President of Southern University as Dedicatory Speaker.

This new educational institution, one of the most modern in the country, is located at Hearne Avenue and Ford Street, was constructed to accomodate 1500 Junior High School Students of 7th, 8th and 9th grades. It is staffed with 55, including a Principal, Assistant Principal, two Counselors, a Secretary and 49 classroom teachers.

Modern in all respects, this brick structure is built on a 30 acre site that cost $30,000; the Caddo Parish School Board provided a budget figure of $1,620,000.00; with a construction cost of $1,375,471.60, and an equipment cost of $162,000. William B. Wiener, Morgan & O'Neal were the architects and the Southern Builders the contractors.

Many of the outstanding Educators and Laymen of Louisiana cators and Laymen of Louisiana-Texas and Arkansas will share the platform with the guest speaker, Dr. F. G. Clark. J. K. Haynes, Executive Secretary of the Louisiana Education Association will introduce Dr. Clark; Dr. R. E. Brown will offer Dedicatory Prayer; Rev. J. A. Thornton and Rev. David J. Matthews will care for devotion and Spiritual Guidance; W. L. G. Abney, will review the life of the late Honoree as Portraits are unveiled; His Honor the Mayor Clyde E. Fant will extend Greetings on behalf of the City of Shreveport and R. H. White, Superintendent of Caddo Parish Schools will present the building to the citizenry. Bennie E. Bailey, Supervisor of Caddo Parish Schools will serve as Master of Ceremonies. Ernest B. Miller is the principal of the school.

Teacher Promoted To Department Head

BALTIMORE, Md.—Mrs. Mae Wright Allen, daughter of the late Dr. [illegible] Wright and Mrs. [illegible] of Baltimore, was promoted recently to the head of the English department of the [illegible] Junior High School, Baltimore. Mrs. Allen has been in the English department of the Baltimore public schools for many years. She is a member of Delta Sorority and a former Basileus.

Mixed, or not at all

BALTIMORE.

It appears that the seniors at Towson High School will have their all day outing after all.

Last week the plans for the affair hit a snag when class officers reported that they were unable to locate a beach which would admit everyone, including the ten colored students.

The 460-member class then voted not to have the outing at all rather than schedule it for a place that would not admit the entire class.

ON MONDAY, Gordon Fronk, class president, said several places had indicated a willingness to accept the entire class and an investigation would be made to determine which sites were suitable for a high school outing.

The question of the colored students was brought up at a meeting at an assembly when the outing committee, headed by Fronk, reported its inability to find a location that would admit everyone.

One of the colored students, Dave Bishop, a star on the basketball team, then suggested that if the class were not able to go as a unit that he was certain the colored students wouldn't object to being left out of the plans.

"He was shouted down," Fronk reported, "and the class voted unanmiously that if we couldn't all go, we wouldn't go."

Since that time, Fronk said, there has been no criticism of the action.

"The only thing we have gotten are compliments," Fronk reported. Asked how he felt about the action, Fronk said: "It was the thing to do."

Parents—finger principal

An Aberdeen Proving Ground electronic scientist, father of a 14-year old boy refused admission to a white Maryland high school, Friday startled spectators at a Maryland State School Board hearing with testimony that a colored school principal attempted to keep the child from enrolling in a white high school.

At the hearing in Baltimore, the father, George Pettit, employed by the government at the Aberdeen Proving Ground for 10 years, appeared before the State Board of Education accompanied by his attorney, Mrs. Juanita Mitchell, and testified under oath:

"I work in an integrated world. I live in an integrated country. I want my son to have a non-segregated education.

"We live in an integrated neighborhood. His playmates are white and attend the Aberdeen High School.

"I applied for a transfer for my son in the office of the principal of the Havre de Grace Consolidated school. Leon Roy, the principal, signed the transfer after an hour and a half conference.

"MR. ROY was irritable and appeared upset.

"He said everytime he has a good student the parents want to take them out of his school.

"He said he wanted the children to stay in his school with children of their own race. He said parents were not fair in taking the children out.

"He said he would make it possible for my son to get a scholarship if we would keep the child in his school.

"I refused and explained I wanted my child to be prepared. I wanted the best possible education for my child.

"Mr. Roy said he had given 30 years for his school. He said you can transfer if you want to but I bet you if your son graduates from the white school he will still be black.

"HE AND my wife and I had become intimate. We visited at his home and he said my kid was doing very good work. At no time did he say anything about my son's grades falling down.

"The first I ever heard of my son falling down in his work was when I learned that Mr. Roy recommended that the committee bar him from the Aberdeen High School because he was a poor student."

Also testifying that Mr. Roy, principal of the all-colored Harve de Grace, Md. public school, attempted to stop a student's transfer to the Aberdeen High School was Mrs. Styee Slade, wife of an Aberdeen Proving Ground employee whose daughter is now a senior at the Aberdeen High School.

Also under oath, Mrs. Slade said: "My daughter and I talked with Mr. Roy in 1958 when I went to apply to transfer her to the Aberdeen High School.

"He said he would see that she would be in line for a scholarship."

The occasion of the hearing in Baltimore by the State Board of Education came after Mr. Pettit and his wife, appealed to the board from the decision of the superintendent of schools of Harford County, denying the request of their son, Alvin Dwight, to transfer from the Havre de Grace Consolidated School to the Aberdeen High School.

MR. PETTIT made formal application to the Board of Education of Harford County between July 1 and 15, 1959, that his son be allowed to transfer from the 8th grade of the consolidated school, where he had completed the 58-59 school year, to the 9th grade at the Aberdeen school for the 59-60 school year.

Young Pettit was denied transfer after the committee High School, the director of instruction of the Harford Board of Education and the supervisor of the Aberdeen High School, reviewed his I.Q. test, records of other standardized tests and his record of school marks.

The unanimous opinion declared that the boy would be unable to make adjustment at the white school because of low intelligence quotient of 60, below average school marks, and unsatisfactory progress at the Havre de Grace school.

The State Board of Education set the Oct. 16 hearing in Baltimore after the attorney general of Maryland ruled that the board had a right to hear the case.

MR. ROY, head of the school 30 years and holder of an AB degree from Lincoln University, took the stand during the hearing.

Mr. Roy said: "I joined in the decision to disapprove the transfer of the Pettit boy.

"My conclusion was that he would have a greater chance at our school, based on IQ and grade placement as well. My school is adapted to meet the needs of the students. This school is better adapted to meet his (Pettit's) needs.

"I feel that he would be more successfully adapted."

"He allowed himself to become involved in a not too desirable clique, that may be the reason for his falling down in his grades."

UNDER questioning by Mrs. Mitchell, Mr. Roy gave the following answers:

Q: "Is it not true that the committee leaned toward your recommendation to bar this child?

A: I cannot say that.

Q: Did you recommend that this child be turned down?

A: I can't remember.

Q: Is it not true that you stated that he should remain in your school?

A: Yes.

Q: Is it not true that you stated that if he should remain in your school that you would get a scholarship for him?

A: There is nothing in writing. It is all a matter of words. I promised nothing.

Interrupted at this point by the chairman of the board of education, Mrs. Mitchell said "We are simply trying to show a pattern of what he has done in trying to keep the students away from the white schools.

Q: Is it not true that you told the Slade child that she could get a scholarship if she remained?

A: I did not promise anything. It is not in writing. It is all a matter of words.

Q: DID YOU not tell the father that his son was one of the best students, the only one to make the honor roll?

A: I do not recall.

Q: Did Mr. Pettit mention that he wanted his son to have a foreign language and a class in mathematics not given in your school?

A: He could have.

Q: Did you not say that the boy would always be black and that he had better stay with his people?

A: (no answer)

Q: Is it not true that you feel that, Mr. Roy?

A: No answer.

Q: IS IT not true that you fear you will no longer have a school there if you approve many transfers and students leave your school?

A: He is a below average student. He was below average when he came to our school. He dropped in his grades in our school. We felt that he was behind and would not succeed at Aberdeen.

Whites Give Negro Ovation After Protest

Defender Chicago Ill.
Date 6-27-59

FLINT, Mich. — Bigotry reared its ugly head in the Dye school system last week but was destroyed by a group of determined high school seniors, teachers and the school board.

Instead, a Negro educator, Dr Alvin D. Loving, who spoke at commencement exercises for Dye High school received a standing ovation when he got up to address the seniors.

Although the senior class voted to have the associate professor of education at Flint College of the University of Michigan as commencement speaker some months ago, protests against his appearing were not voiced until early last week.

Last Monday night seven adults appeared at a meeting of the Dye Board of Education and protested the Negro speaking. After arguing with the group for two and a half hours, the board voted unanimously to cancel the appearance of Dr. Loving because they feared there would be an attempt to break up the graduation ceremonies.

Hearing of the board's decision the following day, the students and teachers both were against their action. They urged the board to reconsider its earlier decision. Bowing to the wishes of the students and teachers the board rescinded its earlier decision and again asked Dr. Loving to speak.

Prefacing his prepared speech on "Democracy's Hope — You," Dr. Loving told the 1,000 persons who were present the night of commencement, "Nowhere but in America is it possible for one to receive a reception like I received tonight."

Laying aside a prepared speech, the class valedictorian. Beverly Newton, who preceded Dr. Loving praised her 61-member class for the stand it had taken in the controversy.

She told her class metes that they had acted maturely and they would remember the incident the rest of their lives.

She told her classmates that unable to finish her address. As she returned to her seat she was followed by a terrific round of applause and many others were in tears.

"I've seen people grow today," Levant R. Wheaton, Dye principal said to the audience and graduates.

When Board President Nevitt Cromer presented the diplomas he told the seniors, "Do not be afraid to make mistakes but when you make mistakes don't be afraid to admit them."

Earlier he had told the seniors "We made a hasty decision. At the time we thought we made the right one because we didn't want to subject Dr. Loving to any incidents that might happen. We didn't want to create any division in the community.

"Now I see the problem is greater than our community. My personal standpoint is to undo any harm we have done. You have been taught democracy and here, your own school board, has betrayed you."

The class said they knew the board was under pressure.

Virginia coed is surprised school's faculty integrated

By CLAY CLAYBOURNE

ATLANTIC CITY — Two southern students started a week - long visit to Atlantic City High School Tuesday by going on a field trip with a class that included a number of colored students.

"It didn't bother me at all," said Susanne Frederickson after the trip to the Atlantic County Courthouse in Mays Landing was over.

"It seemed just normal. I spoke to some of the colored pupils and they were friendly and nice."

The pretty brunette said her companion on the visit here, Jon Bailey, felt the same way.

The two Southerners, both 17, are pupils at Lane High School in Charlottesville, Va. Susanne is a member of the Lane Student Legislature, of which Jon is president.

THE TEENAGERS came here at the invitation of the Atlantic City High School Student Council, which is paying the expenses of their trip.

They are staying at the homes of local pupils.

"We're here to see how integration works," said Jon when the pair arrived Sunday.

"We want to see both sides of the story," said Susanne. Both say the traditional pride of Virginians is an important factor in the state's resistance to integration in the public schools.

They added that states rights is also an issue and that "the people of Virginia resent the Federal Government telling them they have to integrate."

REFUSAL TO admit two colored pupils kept the school from opening in September. Instead, most Lane pupils attended classes in churches, lodge halls and other meeting places.

The school reopened Feb. 4 when a Federal court approved its plan to operate integrated classes in September.

Both Susanne and Jon intend to go to college and do not think their chances have been hurt by the disruption in their public schooling.

Susanne, the daughter of an Army officer has lived in Virginia only eight months. Last year she attended an integrated government - operated school in Japan.

Jon, however, has known only the southern custom of segregation and this trip here has resulted in some surprises.

"YOU MEAN you have colored teachers here?" she asked in asonishment, when told there were colored instructors on the local high school faculty.

The southerners had a busy week.

Wednesday they were introduced to the student body at an assembly. Friday the pair joined the Atlantic City High School cheering section at a basketball game against Bridgeton.

Capping the visit was the Virginians' attendance at the Senior Prom Saturday night..

In explaining the purpose of inviting the Southerners here, Atlantic City High School principal, Samuel Gillingham said:

"This isn't a missionary movement to sell integration. This is a step in promoting understanding among schools of different regions of the country. We hope the program will grow."

High Schools Face Closings In Pay Row

By JOHN J. McCUEN,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Further steps looking toward a possible short closing of New York City's day schools in the teachers' salary dispute loomed today.

Leaders of the High School Teachers Assn. announced that the organization's executive committee will meet next Wednesday to consider applying in the day schools the "mass resignation" technique which closed the city's 16 evening high schools for the month of February.

Meanwhile, the New York Teachers Guild continued with its poll of teachers in the elementary and the junior high schools as well as the high schools in support of a one-day "work stoppage" to enforce demands for increased pay.

The HSTA executive committee meeting will take place Wednesday at 4 p.m. in HSTA headquarters, 130 W. 42nd St., according to President Emil H. Tron.

Mr. Tron said Harold Israelson, HSTA attorney, will outline for the group a course of action "based upon similar techniques" to those which closed the evening high schools and forced an increase in hourly pay rates for the evening high school staff, with official commitments for additional increases on July 1 next on July 1, 1960.

Mr. Tron said preliminary plans for Wednesday's meeting were decided upon at a conference of HSTA leaders late yesterday in Mr. Israelson's office.

According to Mr. Tron, there has been increasing demand from the day high school staff for "drastic legal action" to enforce the HSTA demand for salary improvement.

The HSTA, which has fought the single salary principle for the city's teachers since its introduction in 1947, is now demanding a $2000 annual differential for high school teachers above pay rates set for teachers in the elementary schools.

SCHOOL TO TRAIN LEADERS URGED

2 on Board of Education to Propose Center for Special Classes in Public Service

By LEONARD BUDER

The establishment of a special high school to prepare students for public service and civic leadership was proposed yesterday by two members of the Board of Education. The recommendation will be presented to the full board at its next meeting May 28.

Tied to the creation of the special school is a plan to set up an advisory commission of public leaders to assist graduates of the school. The aid of foundations and national and international organizations would be sought to help provide college scholarships and graduate fellowships to needy students demonstrating high promise.

The sponsors of the measure are Charles J. Bensley of the Bronx, chairman of the board's Committee on Buildings and Sites, and the Rev. Dr. Gardner Taylor of Brooklyn.

The new school would be established at what is now the Banjamin Franklin High School, Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive and East 116th Street. The school, built in 1942 at a cost of $3,500,000, has suffered declining student registers in recent years and there has been some talk of converting it into an elementary or junior high school.

Training Ground

The new Benjamin Franklin High School would be an initial training ground for future social scientists. The curriculum would be geared to the preliminary preparation necessary for careers in public service on municipal, state and national levels, and in such related fields as world trade.

"It is our thought," Mr. Bensley and Dr. Taylor said in a joint statement, "that the Benjamin Franklin High School may well also become the training school for young men and women who will seek their future in activities allied with the United Nations and international affairs."

The resolution will ask Dr. John J. Theobald, the Superintendent of Schools, to devise an "enriched" program for the Benjamin Franklin High School. The curriculum would cover studies in English, economics, human relations, world history and geography, social sciences, foreign languages and "other suitable areas of knowledge."

Selected Students

Admission would be open to selected boys and girls "irrespective of socio-economic or ethnic background." The admissions criteria, the sponsors said, should be established with the aid of outstanding educators and national leaders. The board members said:

"It is our intention to admit children not alone on the basis of I. Q., for we recognize that those children who come from socially and economically deprived environments have not been given an equal opportunity to develop their potentials.

"We also recognize that a test score solely in terms of I. Q. is not sufficient to discover the type of children who may possess this special potential and who will profit most from such instruction."

DECISION DELAYED ON HARLEM PUPILS

Parents Seek Transfer of Children to Schools Out of Negro District

By LEONARD BUDER

Supreme Court Justice Francis X. Conlon reserved decision yesterday in a case brought by a group of Negro parents from Harlem who are trying to have their children transferred to junior high schools in other neighborhoods.

In an affidavit, Dr. John J. Theobald, Superintendent of Schools, charged that the parents were seeking abolition of district lines on the junior high level.

If parents are allowed to choose the public schools their children attend, the Superintendent said it would result in "chaotic conditions."

About thirty Negro parents—including the five who instituted the action—and several children were in court yesterday.

Got Show Cause Order

The parents in the case, through their lawyer, Paul B. Zuber, last month obtained an order requiring Dr. Theobald to show why the children should not be transferred to Junior High School 141, in the Riverdale section of the Bronx, or J. H. S. 52 in the Inwood section in upper Manhattan. Both are predominantly white neighborhoods.

The parents said that the schools to which their children were assigned—136 and 139 in Harlem—"were segregated with student enrollments being 100 per cent Negro and Puerto Rican."

As a result, the parents said, their "children would not have an opportunity to interrelate with children of other ethnic groups, which in the opinion of educators is essential to a full and complete educational experience."

The parents also said that a class of intellectually gifted pupils that graduated last June from Public School 129 in Harlem had been assigned this fall to the Inwood junior high school, outside their regular district. The parents charged that their children were thus being discriminated against.

Tenney Speaks for City

In his reply, Charles H. Tenney, the Corporation Counsel, denied that the two Harlem junior high schools were segregated.

He also challenged the parent's statement on the value of interrelation with other ethnic groups.

Superintendent Theobald said in his statement that the special Harlem class had been permitted to go to the Inwood Junior High School to keep the class together, a procedure "applied to similarly intellectually gifted classes."

Since the start of the school term some Negro parents have boycotted the two Harlem junior high schools to protest the refusal to grant transfers.

Integrated Charlotte High To Hold White-Only Prom

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP)—The annual junior-senior dance for Central High School students will be held as a private event Saturday night, and school authorities will not invite the only Negro student for fear there might be violence.

Central principal Ed Sanders, announced Friday that the dance would not be held as a school-sponsored affair. Instead, he and Asst. Principal John Smith and their wives will be hosts.

Mrs. Edward Roberts, whose 17-year-old son Gustavus was one of four student assigned to white schools here in the fall of 1957, had written Police Chief Ernest Selvey asking for police protection for Gus and his date at the dance.

She said that, "On April 22 Gustavus was informed that students invited from other schools may start a disturbance if he attends."

Selvey relayed word from school officials to Mrs. Roberts that the dance would be held privately. He said he still will take "precautionary measures."

Sanders' announcement to the students said that personal invitations would be mailed to most of them and their guests, the invitations must be presented to gain admittance.

N.C. County Parents Ask 5 Transfers

Trustees' Questions Irritate Lawyer At Snow Hill Hearing

SNOW HILL, N. C. — Insisting that the Greene County Training School has a richer curriculum and more educational opportunities than Walstonburg High School, the county board of education on Friday turned down applications for transfer of five colored pupils to the latter school.

The decision came after an extended hearing in which the board chairman, Maynard Hicks asserted that its members had no interest in integration or segregation, but was concerned with "attempting to consider each application on its own merit and decide what is best for the child.

THE COMMENT was made when Mose Forbes, father of two children asking for transfer, told the board he wanted his children moved because "I oppose segregation. The Supreme Court said it was unconstitutional and I don't want my children at segregated schools."

Greene county school officials said that the training school is only six-tenths of a mile farther from the pupils' homes, and has 33 courses and 17 state-designated teachers, compared with 22 courses and four high school teachers at Walstonburg.

COUNSEL FOR parents of the five children indicated that an appeal would be filed with the board and that legal action may be launched.

The board met to consider the applications after postponing action on the requests at its meeting Aug. 3. The colored parents told the board at its first meeting they wanted the transferes because it was dark when the children went to school and when they returned. "We can't get any work out of them after dark," one parent said.

C. O. PEARSON attorney from Durham acting as spokesman for the parents, asked for an end to the hearing which he said "has become an inquisition."

The board questioned applicants about the distances children had to travel to school and details about the signing of the transfer requests.

THE BOARD, through attorneys K. A. Pittman and Walter Shepherd, said it was trying to determine if the applications were made in good faigh.

Pearson asked "assuming the board is acting in good faith and an application has a legal technical error, would the board turn down the applications?"

THE BOARD answered it was "not attempting to turn down any applications at present."

Durham School Suit Ruling Handed Down

News & Observer
Raleigh, N.C.

GREENSBORO (AP) — A federal judge Friday strongly criticized practices of the Durham School Board, but declined for the time being to order integration in two cases brought in 1958.

In a four-way ruling filed in Middle District Court, Judge Edwin M. Stanley held:

1. That administrative remedies under State law were not exhausted on behalf of Joycelyn McKissick and Elaine Richardson before Federal Court action was begun.

2. That the McKissick girl will be allowed 10 days to file a written motion requesting that the case remain on the docket "for the purpose of giving her an opportunity to adequately exhaust her administrative remedies."

3. That the Richardson girl is not entitled to the same privilege because there was "a total lack of proof" on her part as to "her residence, distance of any school in the Durham school system from her home, and other relevant factors . . ."

4. That the State School Board and its members were neither necessary nor proper parties to the action and the complaint against them should be dismissed.

Discussion.

Judge Stanley, who also entered a "discussion" on the suit, said the McKissick girl established during trial of the case that she lives less than 1½ miles from Durham High School and more than 2½ miles from Hillside High School, to which she was assigned for the 1957-58 year.

Two Negro students were assigned to Durham High School this week for the 1959-60 school year, but the McKissick girl was not included.

In his discussion, Judge Stanley declared, "Since the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that they had exhausted their administrative remedies under state statutes before applying to the Federal Court for injunctive relief and since they have failed to meet this burden, the court is not called upon to make a determination as to the reason the plaintiffs were denied reassignment. . . .

"However, the conclusions herein reached are not to be considered as my condoning deliberate practices on the part of school boards which result in the perpetuation of enforced segregation in public schools.

"The court heartily disapproves the method employed by the Durham City Board of Education in giving assignment notices, and particularly the delay in making assignments. Some of the resolutions adopted by the Board regarding the applications of these plaintiffs strongly suggest that reassignments were denied solely because on the race and color of the applicants.

"A different conclusion could easily have been reached had the plaintiffs performed the simple duties imposed upon them by state law before applying to this court for relief. . . .

Greene Board to Consider Negro Applications Today

SNOW HILL, N.C. (AP) — The Greene County Board of Education is to consider Monday the applications of five Negroes to attend the white school at Walstonburg.

The board deferred action at a meeting a month ago.

Among the applicants are Jonathan David Farmer, 18, and Edgar Lee Farmer, 16, sons of Mrs. Dora Farmer. Mrs. Farmer, president of the county Negro Parent-Teacher Assn., was a leader in the boycott of the county's Negro high school and five elementary schools last February. The Negro pupils stayed away from classes for four days in a demand for better facilities.

The board of education promised to sell a bond issue to improve Negro schools. During the last Legislature, enabling legislation was passed allowing the county to divert funds from another source for school improvements.

Durham Negro School:

Bomb Scare Brings Evacuatiton

DURHAM (AP) — More than 1,000 Negro pupils at Whitted Junior High School filed out shortly before noon Friday after an anonymous phone caller warned that a bomb was set to go off in 30 minutes.

D. M. Schooler, the principal, said he had no idea who made the hoax call or whether it was connected with the recent integration of three city schools.

Two Negro boys who were originally assigned to the all-white East Durham Junior High School were reassigned to Whitted the night before opening day when it was discovered they had moved into the Whitted School District.

Five Negroes entered three previously all - white city schools Wednesday. And a sixth, Larry Scurlock, registered at Durham High School Friday morning. He had been out of town on a summer job.

Mrs. M. A. Williams, a secretary, answered the bomb phone call.

"Tell Mr. Schooler that a bomb is in the school and will go off in 30 minutes," said the voice over the telephone.

Schooler got in touch with the police and City School Supt. Lew Hannen, who said the only thing to do was let the children go home.

After the pupils were out of the building, 10 policemen combed the school for 35 minutes and found nothing. The policemen were led in the search by Asst. Chief W. B. Julian.

Schooler said Friday night that he had cut in on a few classrooms at a time over the address system and asked teachers to dismiss the pupils. The building was gradually and quickly evacuated without any panic.

"It was too early just to call a fire drill," Schooler said. "I have 500-600 young children there who were in the school for the first time."

As Bond Election Looms

Negro Leaders In Greene Pledge School Strike End

SNOW HILL — Negro leaders pledged their efforts here Thursday to get 2,300 striking students back in school on Monday.

Their pledge came after members of the Greene County School Board reiterated their intention to seek corrections, including a possible bond election.

Negro spokesmen conferred with the Greene Board after students, who struck Tuesday, rejected a request at a mass meeting Wednesday night to return to school.

A Negro committee consisting of Mrs. Dora Mae Farmer, president of the Greene County PTA, Merritt Olds, Joe Edwards and Haywood Williams, school patrons was named to confer with the Greene County Board Thursday.

Statement.

They issued a statement after the Thursday meeting that parents would accept a resolution adopted by the board "and we have confidence that the Board will correct these conditions as soon as possible. We will work and do all we can to open school Monday morning."

"I must say at the conclusion of the meeting that this Board is the most honest Board I have ever met and I feel that you are as good as anybody in the United States," declared the PTA president. "We thank you for the way you have explained things to us and we appreciate it."

The Greene County Board's statement declared that it was restating a long-range building program adopted jointly with the State Board of Education in 1950 "for the improvement of school buildings and facilities in the county and since that time had been progressing with the program as fast as monetary limitations would permit."

They added the "long - range building program included the facilities that have been recently included as grievances and it is the intention and desire of the board to continue with this program as fast as possible."

The board also re-stated that "within the past two months both the Board of Education and County Commissioners have been jointterms of a bond election in order to provide additional facilities in the long-range building program."

"It is still the intention of the board, as it was prior to this incident," the statement declared, "to ask the County Board of Commissioners to call a bond election in the near future as the board advised the Commissioners first Monday, in order that the new facilities might be provided, including those as set forth in the needs of the Greene County Training School."

Greene County Boycott:

Hodges Sees NAACP Link

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI)—Gov. Luther H. Hodges said Thursday there is "much evidence" that the NAACP was involved in "part of the agitation" centering around the boycott of a Negro high school in Greene County.

Hodges told a radio network by telephone that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People helped with the "agitation" because of "certain demands they wanted."

Lack of Facilities.

The dispute around the Greene County Training School—the county's only Negro high school—centers on the lack of a gymnasium and adequate lunchroom facilities. Negro parents and pupils voted Wednesday night to continue a boycott until the board meets their demands for improved facilities.

Board members indicated Thursday they were willing to ask the Board of County Commissioners to call an election on a bond issue to provide funds for the needed facilities.

Hodges said he and State Atty. Gen. Malcolm Seawell "believe the NAACP is being too militant in this State. They have shown on many occasions that they want not to followe the laws of North Carolina, but would much rather agitate."

The Governor claimed the Negro organization wants the federal court "to assume the role of a local school board.

"The integration (of schools) we now have is not the result of court order or the NAACP, but came by action of our own local school boards conforming to the laws of North Carolina."

Hodges referred to limited integration of public schools in Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem during the past two school years.

Next Battleground.

Referring to speculation that North Carolina might be chosen as the next "battleground" in the integration fight, Hodges said "We don't know that the NAACP has so selected this State. The NAACP has been overactive in this State for a long time."

He said the three NAACP-sponsored desegregation suits instituted in Greensboro and Mecklenburg County this week might have been "timed . . . to coincide with the meeting of the General Assembly."

He speculated that the NAACP might have hoped that the Legislature "could be led to abandonment of our moderate course in favor of adopting one of massive resistance — which I think the NAACP would like which I don't think we will do."

The Governor added that the suits presented a "challenge" to North Carolina's Pupil Placement Act of 1955, "but not a threat."

"We are doing everything in our power to live under the law and work out our problem in such a way that we might continue to have public schools."

Carolina Negroes Continue Boycott Of Public Schools

SNOW HILL, N.C (AP)—Hundreds of shouting, defiant Negro students, holding out for better school facilities, decided Wednesday night to continue their boycott of schools in Greene County, in eastern North Carolina.

Student spokesmen said the county's 2,300 Negro pupils will ignore a county board of education order to reopen the six strike-bound schools Friday morning.

"We won't go back until the county gives us better facilities," the student leaders said.

The assertions came at a mass meeting of Negro parents and pupils. The meeting was called at the suggestion of the board of education in hopes of ironing out the problem. But nearly 300 students shouted down attempts by school officials and representatives of the Parent-Teacher Assn. to take a vote on whether to call off the strike. The session ended without any formal action being taken.

SCHOOL CLOSED

The strike began Tuesday when only two of 34 buses which carry the county's 2,300 Negro students to various schools made their rounds. County authorities closed the schools and took the buses away from their Negro student drivers.

Earlier Wednesday, a delegation of Negro parents and students met with the education board to outline requests for new and larger facilities at the Greene County Training School, the county's only high school for Negroes.

Among other things the delegation asked for a new gymnasium, a cafeteria and other facilities. The school has 485 high school and 651 elementary school children.

NO PROMISES

The board said the only way it could provide the facilities was by special bond election, and it could not promise anything at the present time.

School Supt. B. L. Davis said the board plans another meeting Thursday.

The county approved a $450,000 bond issue in an election last November. The money will be spent for a new white high school. Some sources said this may have prompted the strike.

County officials pointed out, however, that $1,165,000 had been spent on school construction in the county in the last 10 years, and that $622,172 of this went for Negro schools.

NO MIXING AT DANCE

Prom Is Private Affair To Exclude Only Negro

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Principal Ed Sanders and his wife will act as hosts for Central High School's annual junior-senior dance tonight, a by invitation only affair which will exclude the school's only Negro student.

Traditionally the dance is held at the school with student funds. Any member of the junior and senior classes may attend if the student has paid his class dues.

Sanders said the dance was changed to a private affair Friday after 17-year-old Gus Roberts, the school's only Negro student and a member of the senior class, announced his intention of attending the dance with a date. Gus has been at Central since 1957 when limited desegregation was started in Charlotte schools.

School officials, who conferred with some Negro leaders, decided trouble might occur. It was decided to make the dance private, and by invitation only. The site was changed to a community building owned by the city and Sanders said all dance ees would be returned to the students.

The boy's parents declined to comment.

Police Chief E. C. Selvey said he received a letter Tuesday from Sanders said all dance fees would Gus' mother, asking for police protection for her son at the dance. Selvey reelased his replying letter to her in which he pointed out the dance had been canceled.

"In the event your son at any time needs the protection of the Charlotte Police Department, I will personally see that he is accorded all the rights and privileges due him as a citizen of Charlotte," he wrote.

School Threat 'Hoax'

DURHAM (AP) — More than 1,000 Negro pupils at Whitted Junior High School filed out shortly before noon Friday after an anonymous phone caller warned that a bomb was set to go off in 30 minutes.

J. M. Schooler, the principal, said he had no idea who made the hoax call or whether it was connected with the recent integration of three city schools.

Two Negro boys who were originally assigned to the all-white East Durham Junior High School were reassigned to Whitted the night before opening day when it was discovered they had moved into the Whitted School District.

Five Negroes entered three previously all - white city schools Wednesday. And a sixth, Larry Scurlock, registered at Durham High School Friday morning. He had been out of town on a summer job.

Mrs. M. A. Williams, a secretary, answered the bomb phone call.

"Tell Mr. Schooler that a bomb is in the school and will go off in 30 minutes," said the voice over the telephone.

Schooler got in touch with the police and City School Supt. Lee Hannen, who said the only thing to do was let the children go home.

After the pupils were out of the building 10 policemen combed the school for 35 minutes and found nothing. The policemen were led in the search by Asst. Chief W. B. Julian.

Schooler said Friday night that he had cut in on a few classrooms at a time over the address system and asked teachers to dismiss the pupils. The building was gradually and quickly evacuated without any panic.

"It was too early just to call a fire drill," Schooler said. "I have 500-600 young children there who were in the school for the first time."

School's Mixing Delayed

N. C. Board Sets Further Meeting To Handle Case

SNOW HILL, N.C. (AP) — For the second time, the Greene County Board of Education has put off a decision on the request of five Negro students for transfer to a white high school.

"We must have further information from the children and their parents," said Walter G. Sheppard, Snow Hill lawyer advising the board Monday.

On his suggestion, the board set a meeting for Aug. 14 to handle the matter.

E. A. Pittman, another attorney for the board, asked that scholastic records for the children be produced at the meeting, and that evidence be presented concerning distances traveled by the students to school.

PRESENCE NEEDED

Pittman also said the children, as well as their parents, should be present. The children did not attend the Monday meeting.

Mrs. Dora May Farmer said children were sent 14 miles to school at Snow Hill. Transfer to Walstonburg, she said, would cut the travel to six miles. This would permit her sons to be home longer to help with farm work, the mother explained.

She also said better facilities at Walstonburg was a factor in the request for transfer.

CITE DISTANCE

Moses Forbes, father of two children seeking admission to the white school, and Theodore Edwards, whose step - son is one of those applying, also appeared before the board. They, too, cited distance as a factor in the applications.

Negroes staged a school boycott in Greene County last February as a protest for improved facilities. The boycott ended when the board promised to seek improvements for the Negro high school and five Negro elementary schools in the county.

Mrs. Farmer is president of the county Negro Parent - Teacher Assn. and was a leader in the boycott. Her sons, Jonathan David, 18, and Edgar Lee, 16, are among the five asking for admission to the Walstonburg white school.

Board's Offer Fails To End Pupil Strike

By CHARLES CRAVEN.

SNOW HILL—Striking Greene County Students remained defiant here Wednesday night and refused to return to classes.

The decision was made by the Students and their parents —numbering about 500 — at a meeting in the Greene Training School. The decision not to return to school was by an overwhelming standing vote. Some 2,800 Negro students gave notice they will remain away from classes because of dissatisfaction with what the county school board had to offer in the way of improved facilities at the high school.

There appeared to be no end of the strike in sight.

When student leaders aired grievances of poor facilities before the County Board of Education on Wednesday morning, the board told them it would promise them nothing — but added that the board members would give their cooperation toward obtaining improvements at the high school if the students returned to classes.

The main lack at the school, the students said, is a gymnasium. They also pointed to an inadequate cafeteria and library and a lack of needed classroom space and classroom working materials.

After meeting with the student representatives, the board issued a statement which said the only way the improvements could be had would be by a bond election. The board said the strike was "regrettable . . . because in the opinion of the board it had hurt the chances of a bond election carrying." The board emphasized it was "not in a position to promise anything at this time."

After the "no promise" session, the student representatives huddled in the corridor of the courthouse where the meeting was held. They then left the building for a time and reappeared with a request to see the board once more. This time they listed terms under which they would call off the strike. These were: (1) A place to play basketball now, (2) Some assurance of a gym, cafeteria, library, more classrooms and more things to work wth in these classrooms immediately. (3) More space outside if all are to stay on the same campus because it is too crowded. (4) A larger shop because the present one is too small.

Can't Make Promise.

Board Chairman H. Maynard Hicks reiterated the board's position—that it could "promise nothing."

B. L. Davis, superintendent of Greene County Schools, after the terms were read, told the delegation: "I don't think the request you are making is in a dictatorial manner. This morning, we expressed a desire to cooperate with you—but the board does not want to put themselves in the position of saying this or that . . . the board has explained to you that it has no desire to place itself on a jeopardizing spot . . . to say it will do this or that."

Some of the high school students and their parents stood around the Greene County Courthouse here while the four student representatives, the high school principal, L. H. Smith Jr., and the PTA president, Mrs. Dora Mae Foreman, met with the board.

All of the students, including their four representatives, would not say exactly how the strike got organized. They said that the school bus drivers last Friday received notes telling them the strike was to begin on Tuesday.

In compliance with the plan, the school bus drivers did not pick up any students as they drove over their routes. Only a few students were awaiting the buses, one driver said. This seemed to indicate that the strike was undertaken with the general knowledge of students and parents.

By Snow Hill Man.

Mrs. Aline Harper, who has a granddaughter in the elementary division of the Greene Training School, said the strike was called by an "important" Negro man who lives in Snow Hill.

Mrs. Harper said conditions at the Greene Training School were crowded and there is an acute need for a cafeteria. "We don't want to go to white schools or white churches," she said. "We just want equal schools . . . They're cooking and eating in one room."

One of the student bus drivers, Chester Pridgen, 19, said that "70 to 80 students crowd into a physics class."

Jimmy Barfield Jr., 17, also a student bus driver, said that there was not a class held that did not have over 50 students in it. "The little library is also used as a classroom," he said.

John Terry, 19, another student at the high school, said, "All of us can't get in chapel at the same time — some of us have to stay out."

G. W. Edwards, who has two children in the school, said: "The conditions are overcrowded. There is no facility for good preparation. And there's no playground facility." He said he was a farmer.

Other Contrasts.

The high school stood as the object of the controversy. However, contrasts were far greater with three of the Negro elmentary schools. Two of the Negro elementary schools, North Greene and East Greene, appear adequate. They are new and are of brick construction.

Three of the elimentary schools —Invitation, Jason and Best Chapel — are white clapboard heaps with peeling paint and broken windows. Each of these wooden schoolhouses is heated by a pot-bellied stove. The libraries have only a thin supply of dirty, thumbed volumes with little or no reference value. The rickety buildings themselves rear on the flat earth almost comically, like the backwoods school hovels some politicans love to recall as the rugged cradle of their intellectualism. But now they stand in sharp contrast with better school plants —but these are for whites.

The old buildings sag and slant like frontier structures of another century. The tilted, unpainted steps creak under weight. Black coal piles to feed the stoves sit bleakly in corners of the three school yards. Reference to the worn, packed dirt around the schools as "playgrounds" creates a travesty.

The disparity between the white and Negro high schools is not as great. But the Negro high school of brick construction, known as Greene Training School, is manifestly inadequate. This school combines both high school and elementary grades and has a total student population of some 1,136. The breakdown is 651 elementary; 485 high school.

To accommodate this load is a cafeteria that seats 36. Some 80 to 150 students a day are served there. The rest are sold sandwiches off the back steps.

None of the white schools is of wood construction.

Hearing Set.

When the bus drivers returned to the school after driving over their routes Tuesday, there was one bus that stopped and picked up several waiting students who apprently didn't wish to take part in the strike. When the driver, William Henry Suggs, 16, alighted from the bus, he was roughed up by two other boys, police reported. As the result of the incident Albert Lewis Jr. and Carl Edwards, both 16, were charged with assault. A hearing has been set for them at 10 a.m. Saturday before Magistrate Milton Brown.

The county approved a $450,000 bond issue in an election in November for a new white high school. Some sources said this may have prompted the strike.

County officials pointed out earlier, however, that $1,165,000 has been spent on school construction in the county in the past 10 years, and that $622,172 has gone to Negro schools.

Negro Students In Greene Return to Classes Today

SNOW HILL, (AP) — Greene County's 2,800 Negro students, whose four-day strike won assurance last week that authorities would try to get money to improve their schools, are to return to classes Monday.

The strike began last Tuesday and got into full swing Wednesday when 34 Negro student bus drivers refused to operate their vehicles.

Leaders of the boycott said they did not want integration, only improved facilities. Fifty - four per cent of school enrollment in this eastern North Carolina agricultural county is Negro.

Voters approved a $450,000 bond issue for a new white school last November.

Delegation.

A delegation of Negro parents met with the school board Thursday. The board said it would seek — as it had planned before the boycott — an early bond vote for improvement money, but did not specify an amount. It said that of $1,165,000 spent on schools in the past 10 years, more than half went for Negro schools.

It was understood that a bond issue for Negro schools would finance renovating and expanding Greene County Training School, the county's only Negro high school, and for a combination gymnasium - auditorium there. Some money might go for a new elementary school — there now are five — to care for some students at the high school, which has 1,136 pupils.

No Fanfare As 1st Negro Graduates

CHARLOTTE, N. C. — Central High school graduated its first Negro student during commencement exercises Monday.

The youth was Gus Roberts, 17, who enrolled in the previously all-white high school two years. No incidents were connected with the graduation.

Charlotte began a limited racial integration program in its schools two years during a period of tension. However, the program has run smoothly since that time.

Unlike Central High school here with its lone Negro gradute, Front Royal, Va's sole graduate from Warren County High school, was without classmates, and hence there were no commencement exercises.

When Warren County high was integrated last fall, all of the 1,000 white students boycotted it and since then has been attended by 21 Negro students.

However, because of this unwholesome situation, the Elks have pledged to give the graduate, they gather for their annual con- Ann Rhodes, a massive graduation Aug. 25 in Atlantic City when she will be presented the Elks' Class Award. The award goes to the Negro student who has made the most outstanding contribution to the community in the face of racial obstacles.

The plucky lass will also be given a $1,000 scholarship.

Negro Building Planned

SNOW HILL, (AP) — Greene County will build a combination gymnasium and auditorium at its Negro high school here, improvements sought by students who boycotted the school in February.

The board of education told its architect, William Coleman of Kinston, to advertise for construction bids at Greene County Training School.

The students ended their boycott after four days on the board's promise to study the possibilities of improvements sought by the students. The auditorium-gymnasium headed the list.

The boycott had started when 32 Negro students who drove school buses refused to take passengers to the school. Nearly all the county's 2,800 Negro students joined the boycott.

Though the board promised to study the requested improvements it pointed out there were no funds available then. However, the 1959 General Assembly enacted Greene County Rep. Herbert Hardy's measure which lets the county borrow money from the North Carolina Literary Fund for school construction.

HEARING ASKED IN HOLT CASE

Raleigh, N.C.

Attorneys For Raleigh Negro Student Appeal to Supreme Court

Wed 6-23-59

News and Observer Bureau
1255 National Press Building.

WASHINGTON — Attorneys for a Raliegh Negro student who seeks entrance to Needham Broughton High School have asked the Supreme Court to order an immediate trial of the case.

The attorneys charged that both the Federal District Court and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals erred in ruling that the student, Joseph Hiram Holt Jr., had not exhausted all State remedies available to him in his fight to enter the white high school.

They appealed to the Supreme Court to reverse the lower court decisions on grounds that sending Holt back before the Raleigh School Board would grant [illegible]

To Adjourn.

The Supreme Court is likely to adjourn for the summer next week, and probably will not decide until next fall whether to hear Holt's appeal. In several recent decisions involving Virginia and Arkansas, the high bench has refused to consider appeals where it felt the plaintiffs had not exhausted legal remedies provided by the State courts or administration.

The petition filed on Holt's behalf stated that the lower court decisions were "lending their judicial facilities and weight in aid of retardation of desegregaton of public schools and in aid of continued segregation of pupils."

Further, it claimed that the circuit court's decision weighted the constitutional rights of Negro pupils "with burdens of a futile, dilatory and racially discriminatory administrative remedy."

The petition said that Holt, who now attends J. W. Ligon Junior-Senior High School, had asked for reassignement to Needham Broughton, which is closer to his home.

The request was denied, according to the petition, because the school board declared the change would not be in the public interest.

School Student Councilmen Appear To Favor Mixing

Brian Killingsworth, 16-year-old Rivers High School junior, said a majority of secondary school students attending the recent conference of students held at Williamsburg, Va., are in favor of integration.

Killingsworth represented South Carolina at the Williamsburg meeting for the S. C. Assn. of Student Councils. He is president of the organization.

Another impression he has is that a majority of the students from foreign countries are prejudiced against this country.

The conference was attended by delegates from 44 states and 34 foreign countries this month. Both white and Negro delegates were represented.

He said the only students who were in favor of segregation seemed to be white students from the South.

And of the 34 foreign countries represented, only Iceland, Norway, the Philippines and Turkey had much praise for the United States, Killingsworth said.

Harry Golden, Charlotte editor, author and former convict and one of the feature speakers at the conference, was the only one of the eight speakers who spoke on racial problems in the United States. Golden is pro-integration.

Although Associated Press reports of the conference indicated that Golden voiced opinions in favor of integration, Killingsworth said he has the impression that Golden "seemed to be on our side. I have the impression that he believes the South has gotten a dirty deal."

He said he doesn't remember Golden stating in his speech which side of the racial issue he stands on. "He never came right out to say what he was for."

Killingsworth added, however, that Golden said Southern leaders, both white and Negro, should get together to talk about the problem, and he figures that something should be 'in the book' — in other words, laws — to carry out integration if it is going to be successfully carried out."

An Associated Press story from Williamsburg quoted Golden:

" 'Millions of warm hearted Southerners know racial segregation cannot be maintained, either on social or legal grounds, but the resistance of the few bigots must be overcome.' "

"The North Carolina editor said 'the people who seemed to create the problem of resisting' integration were the people who made the rules, the early Virginians. 'Yet they created the very instrumentality that allows Negroes to seek their rights,' he added, referring to the U. S. Constitution," the press release concluded.

The conference theme was "Individual Freedom: A Challenge to All Nations."

In regard to the foreign country delegates, Killingsworth said "They wanted to know why we in this country think we're so good when we have such a race problem."

Killingsworth said U. S. Rep. Dalip S. Saund of California, who was born and educated in India, spoke on the opportunities found in the United States and commended this country.

Killingsworth said he asked a girl delegate from India after the speech what she thought of Saund as one of her countrymen. "She answered that 'he isn't one of my countrymen.' "

The two officers were joined by Highway Patrolman J. E. Robinson.

They cut down the dummy which was stuffed with straw, wore an old leather cap, a faded work shirt, blue denim coveralls, socks and shoes.

Yards away the officers found emblem of a burning cross, emblems of the Ku Klux Klan, but said they found no persons near the scene.

Owings, on the upper and northern end of Laurens County, was the scene of an interracial incident a few weeks ago.

A 74-YEAR-OLD white woman was slain with a shovel near a barn on her place. Officers have charged a 16-year-old colored farm hand, Lawrence Childs, in the case.

Sheriff Wier testified at a coroner's inquest that the youth, now held at the state penitentiary in Columbia, told officers he had hit the woman after she reprimanded him for "sassing her."

S. C. High Schools Getting Larger

News & Courier Charleston, S.C. Sat. 6-27-59

With One Less High School

S. C. Gains 92,000 Pupils

COLUMBIA (AP) — South Carolina has one less high school and 92,000 more high school pupils than it had in 1949.

This was revealed in a State Department of Education survey report made public Friday.

The state high school supervisor, S. David Stoney, said more than 60 per cent of the high school pupils are in schools with enrollments of 500 or more. A decade ago about 40 per cent were in such larger schools.

All this was proof of the tremendous school consolidation program that got such a boost in 1951 with the start of the state-supported school construction program that is underwritten by the sales tax.

Only nine accredited high schools in the state have fewer than a hundred pupils, compared with 76 schools a decade ago. The number of high schools excluding junior high schools now is 365. The total was 366 in 1949.

There now are 45 junior high schools in the state, compared with 10 a decade ago.

Stoney said the change to larger schools "results in better programs of instruction for the majority of our high school studdents."

Enrollment in high school was 100,000 ten years ago. Today, it is just short of double that, at 193,000.

Stoney said consolidations of school districts, as well as of schools; the school consturction program; and increased enrollments are the big factors in the state's improved high school program.

News & Courier Charleston, S.C. Fri. 6-26-59

COLUMBIA (Special) — A study of South Carolina high school size has revealed that for the past year 61.5 per cent of the white students and 63.1 per cent of the Negro students were enrolled in high schools having a total enrollment of 500 or more, according to S. David Stoney, state high school supervisor.

The study showed a contrast in that 10 years ago only 37.2 per cent of the white students and 40.2 per cent of the Negro students were in large schools.

More than 80 per cent of all high school students are now in high schools having 300 or more enrolled, as compared with around 60 per cent 10 years ago.

Only nine of the total of 411 accredited high schools in the state now have less than 100 students. Together they involve only 696 pupils, or six tenths of one per cent of the total high school enrollment.

This compares with the 1949 figures of 76 of the 376 accredited high schools having less than 100 students each, affecting 5,111 pupils, or four per cent of the total high school enrollment.

The number of white high schools in the state has decreased from 299 to 268 in the past 10 years, although this figure includes junior high schools which have increased from 10 to 39. During the same period Negro high schools have increased from 77 to 143, including six new junior high schools.

"This decrease is the small high schools, with the increase in high schools with large enrollments and faculties, result in better programs of instruction for the majority of our high school students," Stoney said.

Enrollments have shown large gains in the same period, he pointed out. The number of white students enrolled has jumped from around 77,000 to almost 122,000. Negro high school enrollments have increased from 23,000 to almost 71,000.

"The study indicates that S. C. high schools are approaching the minimum size recommended by Dr. James B. Conant after his two-year, nationwide study of American high schools," Stoney said.

Dr. Conant's report of his study recommends that high schools with less than 100 in the senior class be eliminated. The recommendation is based on his opinion that fewer students than that means a limited program, with students having little choice in subjects to be studied, and fewer provisions being made for both gifted and slow learners.

The consolidation of school districts in South Carolina, the school construction program, and the increase in enrollments are the factors involved in the increased size of high schools, according to Stoney, who pointed out that with these larger student bodies, "The high schools are offering better programs in both college preparatory and terminal education studies.

"The sharp increase in enrollments which will continue over the next few years represents a challenge to educators to continue to improve high school programs. As a greater percentage of our school population remains in school through graduation, educational needs become more diverse, thus creating an even greater challenge for South Carolina's educators," Stoney added.

Negroes Ask Stadium Use For Schools

Courier Charleston, S.C. Sat. 10-3-59

Formal applications requesting permission for Burke and Immaculate Conception High Schools students to use Johnson Hagood Stadium were mailed to the Stadium Commission yesterday.

Burke is the city's only public high school for Negroes. Immaculate Conception is a Roman Catholic school for Negroes.

Both applications were signed by Reginald C. Barrett, J. Arthur Brown, both real estate men, and Christopher Gantt. Brown and Gantt have children in school. Barret does not.

The Negroes are seeking use of the stadium for all remaining home games scheduled during the football season by both schools.

The applications said the dates submitted can be adjusted to avoid conflicts with games already on the stadium schedule by changing to any day within the given week.

The Negroes have threatened to seek a court injunction closing the stadium to all activities unless permission is granted immediately for use of the facility by the Negro schools.

Both Brown and Barrett have said, however, that they hope the matter can be settled "amicably" out of court. They added a Spartanburg lawyer is drawing up the papers in preparation for filing the suit should legal action become necessary.

The applications, addressed to Col. D. S. McAlister, chairman of the commission, asked that a special meeting of the commission be called if the chairman cannot give an answer without a meeting of the commission.

The Rev. William G. McMenemy, principal of Immaculate Conception School, said he supported the request. "Both Negroes and whites use County Hall. I see no reason why the Negro students can't use the stadium. As I recall, Immaculate Conception students used it several years ago but that was stopped for some reason."

Both Barrett and Brown have pointed out that a state law makes the stadium available to any and all public schools and colleges in Charleston County.

There is no stadium in operation now in the city for the exclusive use of Negroes. Harmon Field and College Park both have been used. However, Harmon Field reportedly is in bad disrepair and unusuable because of fallen lights, lack of toilet facilities and seating. College Park has been leased by the Charleston White Sox baseball organization and is available only on payment of a rental fee of $200 per game.

Considerable discussion of a playing field for Burke High School occupied members of District 20's board of trustees at the Sept. 9 meeting. The trustees decided to investigate the possibility of obtaining Harmon Field from the city and improving it for use by Burke students.

No decision has been reached on the proposal, but the Negro group has stated emphatically it would not be satisfied with Harmon Field.

CLINTON TO REBUILD DYNAMITED SCHOOL

Special to The New York Times.

CLINTON, Tenn., Jan. 17—The dynamited Clinton High School will be rebuilt. The project will use what is usable of the old building and add a new wing at a cost of about $500,000.

The project was approved by the Anderson County School Board at a meeting that rejected another proposal to build a new school at a cost estimated at $900,000.

The new wing, to be connected with the old building by a covered passageway, will have thirteen classrooms, a cafeteria and a shop.

The old building, which accommodated more than 800 students, had been overcrowded. The empty building was shattered by three explosions on Oct. 5.

Since then, contributions for the rebuilding have come from school children and others over the United States and from other countries. These, together with insurance and Federal aid, give the school board more than $150,000 toward rebuilding. Much free labor and materials have also been pledged.

Students of the Clinton High School now go by bus to a building at Oak Ridge, six miles from Clinton, to attend classes in which integration continues.

Pupil Paddlings Arouse the Ire Of Six Mothers

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP)—The fury of six mothers was turned full blast on a high school principal Tuesday after he paddled 11 pupils who tried to start a school cafeteria boycott.

Two of the angry parents took preliminary steps toward swearing out assault and battery warrants against John Barnes, the principal.

Sessions Court Judge Willard Dixon called an informal closed-door conference to hear their complaints and those of the other protesting mothers.

Necessary.

Barnes readily admitted spanking 11 Bartlett High School boys. He said the stern action was necessary.

The trouble boiled up when the principal carried out a threat to shut down the soft-drink machine in the cafeteria after it became clogged up with lead slugs.

In reprisal, Barnes said about 20 boys tried to organize a boycott of the cafeteria. When their efforts failed they left the school grounds without permission.

Each of the boys who were caught was given seven stiff licks with a maple paddle.

Barnes claims that the punished pupils were given their choice of taking the paddlings or bringing their parents to school.

One irate mother however denied that the youngsters had any choice.

"He (Barnes) told them they could take their seven licks immediately or come back after a three-day suspension and take them then," Mrs. George B. Scott said.

Clinton School Being Rebuilt

CLINTON, Tenn., July 27 (AP)—Construction has started to rebuild dynamited Clinton High School, Anderson County School Supt. James A. Newman said today.

The school, racially integrated in 1956 under Federal Court orders, was wrecked last Oct. 5 by three pre-dawn dynamite blasts. It was the first state-supported high school in Tennessee to mix the races.

The rebuilding job will cost some $662,000, Newman said. "We think for the money being spent on this building it will be the most comfortable, functional and modern plant of its kind," he said.

The old building was erected in 1928. After the blast, classes were moved to vacant Linden Elementary School in nearby Oak Ridge. Newman said the Oak Ridge school will be used until the new building is finished. Target date is August, 1960.

In addition to completely rebuilding damaged sections of the structure, a new section containing 11 classrooms will be added.

ASSAULT WARRANTS DENIED

Judge Rebuffs Parents Angered At Paddling of Sons by Principal

MEMPHIS, Feb. 24 (AP)—Angry parents were rebuffed today when they demanded assault warrants against a high school principal who paddled 14 students and has three more to go.

Sessions Judge Willard Dixon said whacking errant students is not probable cause for an assault charge—that the boys needed it and the principal was within his legal rights.

The judge called the informal conference to hear the complaints of six mothers and a father who came up fighting mad after their sons were punished for trying to start a school cafeteria boycott.

Dixon cited a 1944 ruling by the State Supreme Court, which said school teachers have—to a reasonable degree—the disciplinary rights of parents while the child is in their care.

A mother argued that the punishment, though perhaps deserved, was too severe. The judge said he didn't think so.

"You should have seen my boy's rear end!" cried Mrs. George B. Scott.

The judge was unmoved. "I have seen my own rear end after similar incidents," he said.

The trouble boiled up when principal John Barnes of Bartlett High carried out a threat to shut down the soft drink machine in the cafeteria after it became clogged with lead slugs.

In reprisal, Barnes said about 20 boys tried to organize a boycott of the cafeteria. When their efforts failed they left the school grounds without permission.

Barnes said the boys who were caught were given a choice:

Either bring their parents to school for a chat with the principal, or take a paddling—seven whacks on the stern with a maple paddle about 12 inches long, 3 inches wide and ⅜ths of an inch thick—and nothing more said.

The principal said three more boys were paddled today and he still has three to deal out. He was solidly backed by George Barnes, head of the county board of education.

"The board recognizes the Supreme Court rule and charges its principals to observe it," he said.

Segregationists Lose

High Court Refuses To Act on Contempt

WASHINGTON (ANP)—The United States Supreme Court has refused to review the contempt conviction of six persons charged with interfering with desegregation at Clinton High School in Tennessee during the 1956 racial disorders there.

This group was convicted for helping John Kasper to try and block school desegregation in that city.

By so doing, the lower court found th[illegible] in violation of a court inju[illegible]n against interference by congregating in a threatening manner and intimidating 12 Negro students, thus keeping them from entering school.

IN ADDITION to these charges, they were also found guilty of attacking a clergyman who sought to escort the children.

A Federal judge had issued an injunction against segregationist John Kasper and others, and their agents, serving representatives . . . and all other persons acting in concert with them "to prevent their interference with the desegregation order."

Kasper, who has served one contempt sentence for causing trouble at Clinton, was also convicted and sentenced to six months for this indictment. His separate appeal is still pending before the high court.

Knoxville Rejects Negro Applicants

Twelve Refused School Admission

From Press Reports

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 2—Twelve Negro children were denied admission at three city all-white schools when they went there and attempted to enroll today.

City Schools Supt. Thomas N. Johnston said three Negroes applied at Mountain View School, seven at East High and two at Fulton.

"All were refused admission because the Board of Education has not yet changed its policy of separate but equal schools," Johnston said.

The two who tried to register at Fulton said they did so because electronics courses were not offered at Austin High, a Negro school.

Johnston said a program in electronics had been planned for Austin and would have begun today if a teacher were available.

Johnston said there were no "incidents" at the schools. "Those Negro children and their parents were treated with the utmost respect and courtesy," he said.

In the neighboring state of North Carolina, Winston-Salem and Durham opened integrated schools today, the last of seven such school systems in North Carolina to begin classes this year without serious incident. The openings followed the orderly pattern of the other five systems.

Five Negroes attended three predominantly white schools in Durham and seven attended two schools in Winston-Salem.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Determined Clinton Rebuilding School

By DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—It was just two years ago yesterday that Russia scored its greatest scientific victory over the United States by launching the first Sputnik. It weighed 400 pounds. In the interim Russia has launched one weighing 3,000 pounds. Our largest weighed 50 pounds.

At that time it was said that Russia occupied outer space, while the United States occupied Central High School in Little Rock.

One year later, Oct. 5, 1958, the United States suffered a different kind of defeat when the Clinton High School in Tennessee, which had bowed to a court order to admit nine Negro children, was almost completely destroyed by three well-placed charges of dynamite.

There were those who said at the time that Russia's earlier conquest of outer space was not as disastrous as the fear which gripped many communities as bombs damaged a total of some 80 schools, churches, synagogues and homes.

In Clinton, a little town of about 6,000 tucked away in the hills of eastern Tennessee, the school board had met on Oct. 4 to consider a new junior high school. Next morning they awoke to find the senior high school gutted. The town needed two schools instead of one.

On the morning of the explosion, people came out in the early dawn in their pajamas wondering what had happened. They saw the schoolhouse they had worked so hard to build and still had not entirely paid for. It was in ruins. Strong men wept.

But the strong men of that community also showed more determination in combating hate than scientists have sometimes shown in conquering outer space. That day, a Sunday, the Clinton school board determined that not one day of school should be missed. Regardless of the vengeance of dynamiters, they decided, school must continue. It did. School moved to nearby Oak Ridge; people pitched in to scrub floors, move desks, and not one day was lost.

No Help in Washington

It was only after locating the children in Oak Ridge that the Clinton school board went to Washington to see President Eisenhower. They were philosophical at first about the fact that he was "too busy" to see them. But after getting only piddling promises of help from his assistants and learning that he took that afternoon off and left shortly thereafter for three days of playing bridge with Cliff Roberts, his investment banker; George Allen, the White House jester, and Alton Jones of Cities Service, they wondered whether the President placed bridge-playing ahead of children.

"When we were forced to integrate," said Judge Yarnell, "the government gave us no protection. They said the protection of the school and the children was a local problem. Now when our schoolhouse is blown up, again Washington says this is your problem. It isn't fair."

However, a lot of other people decided it was their problem. Contributions began pouring in from all over the nation, especially from school children. They found that it cost five cents to buy a brick for the new schoolhouse, and hundreds of schools all over the country collected a nickel each from their children to rebuild the Clinton school.

Other people, including the AFL building trades who offered their labor, Mayor Richardson Dilworth of Philadelphia, Station WCHB in Detroit, Nelson Rockefeller in Albany, Sen. Estes Kefauver and a whole cross-section of the United States, chipped in to help make the rebuilt schoolhouse in Tennessee a symbol of American determination to combat terror.

As of today, the Clinton schoolhouse is being rebuilt. The children are still going to school in Oak Ridge until it's finished. But the work is progressing. Some more money could be used to do the job up right, and anyone wanting to help can write direct to the Clinton schoolhouse, Clinton, Tenn.

But the important fact is that although we still may be behind Russia in the conquest of outer space, the American people are determined not to lag behind Russia in the conquest of terror.

Meany's "Equal Opportunity"

George Meany, who, during the recent AFL-CIO convention hurled some vitriolic language in the direction of Philip Randolph, head of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will lunch with a group of Negro leaders today to patch up their differences.

The luncheon is taking place partly as a result of the fact that the National Urban League, dedicated to equal opportunity for Negroes, had been planning to honor Mr. Meany at its annual "equal opportunity" dinner in November. But suddenly it found that Mr. Meany was reported at the AFL-CIO convention to be against equal opportunity for Negroes.

When Randolph, the only Negro vice president of the AFL-CIO, moved that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen be ousted unless they admitted Negroes to membership within six months, Meany opposed the resolution.

And in a fiery interchange that followed, he told Randolph: "Who the hell appointed you as the guardian of all the Negroes in America?"

Since Meany had already accepted the invitation to be honored at the Urban League dinner, the league found itself in an embarrassing position. However, Meany was eager to patch up his differences with Negro leaders and is meeting with them at luncheon today.

Ceremonies

Well Attended

PRAIRIE VIEW — Prairie View's new high school building was dedicated Sunday, March 15, in ceremonies attended by both Waller Independent School District and College officials.

President E. B. Evans delivered the dedication address declaring that the school serves a two fold purpose, 'a center for teacher training and a community high school.' He said that there are very few schools like it. The Prairie View School is administered cooperatively by an independent school district on a state college campus.

Waller school board president Henry E. Kegerall officially turned the school over to the principal, faculty, teacher and students. Principal H. T. Jones assigned a student, Curtis Wood Jr who is president of the Junior class, to make a speech of acceptance.

Superintendent T. Holleman introduced board members who were present, including C. W. Phillips, vice president and David Southard, secretary and their wives.

Other program participants included Mrs B. A. Thomas, elementary school principal, PTA president C. L. Ward, representative of the Prairie View Boy Scouts, Dr A.N. Poindexter, The Girl Scouts, Mrs L. F. Holmes and student vocal group

Court Orders Va. County To Integrate By Sept

RICHMOND, Va. — Reversing a seven-year integration delay granted Prince Edward County, Va., a federal appeals court Tuesday ordered the county to integrate its public schools next September.

In rendering the decision the Fourth Circuit of Appeals said the possibility of violence must be ignored and the white high school be desegregated at the time ordered.

The court also said "immediate steps" must be taken to integrate the elementary schools in the county.

Prince Edward is a rural county in the southern part of Virginia. It is heavily populated by Negroes and was one of the original defendants in the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation ruling.

White Group Seeks To Buy High School

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (UPI) — Warren County white residents launched a drive Thursday to buy the country's only high school, now attended solely by 21 Negroes, and use it as a private school for white students.

The transition procedure, requiring a local referendum, was set up by Virginia's new "freedom of choice" anti - integration program.

It would evict the 21 Negroes who gained admittance to the school by federal court order and turn it back to approximately two white students who have boycotted the 30 - classroom building in favor of private makeshift classes since the Negroes entered last February.

The high school is valued at about one million dollars although it cost less than half that to build.

The move was launched without consulting the Warren County Educational Foundation which has operated private classes for the county's white teen - agers since Warren County High closed last September under Virginia's now - defunct "massive resistance" laws.

In another segregation development, two more Negro women applied for admission Thursday at Georgia State College in Atlanta, a white school. Seven others sought admission papers earlier in the week, and two Negro men sought application at Georgia Tech.

Georgia State earlier this year was ordered in federal court not to reject applications of Negroes solely because of reasons of race.

Under present state law, any state - supported school ordered integrated would automatically be closed.

Ask County To Operate Classrooms

Even Those Working For Education Fund Back Public System

FRONT ROYAL, Va. — More than 80 per cent of the 29 white teachers serving as instructors for the Warren County Educational fund in its boycott of Warren County High school are to against selling the school and turning it over to any private group for operation.

This was revealed here last week when 110 of the county's 116 white teachers signed a statement calling for continuance of public schools in the county. The statement was circulated and made public by Leslie C. Young, president of the all - white Warren County Education association.

A MAJORITY of the student body of Warren County High, which was closed last September when integration was ordered and boycotted by white parents when re-opened in February, has been attending the fund's makeshift classes during the entire school term.

A group of Warren county residents spurred segregationist leaders, now seeks to have the school board abandon public education and sell the school buildings as surplus so they can be used by private organizations.

Q. D. GASQUE,, county superintendent of schools, last week spoke to 600 persons at a meeting sponsored by white PTA groups of Front Royal.

He said that he was opposed to having school appropriations made on a month-to-month basis, as permitted in the Perrow package of laws aimed at containing or eliminating integration. This legal device would permit quick abandonment of a community's public schools,

Virginia Unit Says High School Pupils Are Badly Advised

One Third of Talented Fail to Go to College, Almost Half of Non-Talented Are Dropouts

By Erwin Knoll
Staff Reporter

About one third of Virginia's "academically talented" high school students do not go to college and almost half of those who are not talented do not finish high school, according to the Virginia School Boards Association.

In a new study called "The Virginia High School Today" the Association suggests that many Virginia youngsters may fail to reach their full potential in adult life because high school guidance and training programs are inadequate.

The study was prepared by a committee headed by Bernard Joy, a member of the Arlington County School Board. It is designed to help Virginia school administrators gauge their programs against the recommendations of James B. Conant's recent report on "The American High School Today."

The Virginia survey studied school records of 1337 high school graduates who had scores of 115 or higher on the California Test of Mental Maturity, a standard index of academic potential.

"From an ability standpoint," the report notes, "these graduates are a very select group, but one third of them did not go to college.

"Is this because they did not take the courses they should have taken in high school?"

Compared to Conant's recommended program for capable students, "Virginia students fall considerably short," the report states.

A majority did not complete Conant's recommended minimum program of four years of mathematics, four years of one foreign language, three years of science, four years of English and three years of social studies.

Among students who do not fall into the academically talented category, 44.6 per cent dropped out of high school before graduation—a percentage which "is larger than it should be," the study finds.

Many took no high school program which would prepare them for an occupation.

Virginia high schools would have to add 343 full-time counselors to meet Conant's standard of one counselor for every 300 students, the report points out.

Only 26 high schools in the State meet that standard now. No full-time counselors are employed in 229 high schools, and 357 schools have one counselor for every 300 to 600 students.

The report cautions, however, that "valid judgments about American secondary education can be made only on a school-by-school basis."

The State's larger high schools, such as those in nearby Northern Virginia, fared better in the survey than the smaller schools in Virginia's rural sections.

Girl Who Was Only Graduate Honored By Cong. Powell

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Ann Rhodes, the lone senior among the 21 Negro students at Warren County High School in Virginia stopped over in Washington on her way to New York where she was honored.

While in Washington she was the guest of Congressman Adam Clayton Powell. After meeting a group of reporters in the Congressman's office Thursday the 17-year-old Virginia girl departed for New York.

Miss Rhodes did not graduate because she was short of one credit lost during the closing of the Warren County school over the desegregation issue. After loosing several weeks in school the entire group of Negro students, who were shut out of the school, was brought to Washington by a special committee who raised funds to pay their tuition. They entered Washington schools during the middle of the first semester.

The Warren County school was opened at the beginning of the second semester by court order, but the white children continued their school year in private schools set up to take care of their education. The Warren County School, thus, became all Negro.

Warren Refuses to Delay Admission Of 4 Arlington Negroes to Stratford

Chief Justice of the United States Earl Warren refused yesterday to delay the admission of four Negro students to Stratford Junior High School in Arlington.

The decision means that three Negro boys and one girl, all 7th graders, will join the 1070 white students at Stratford when the school opens Monday morning.

Arlington officials, anticipating Warren's ruling, have taken elaborate precautions to avoid disorder and confusion in the school and surrounding area.

Warren handed down his decision at 2 p. m., just three hours after attorneys for the Negro children filed their rebuttal to the Arlington School Board's plea for a delay.

In a 2-sentence ruling the Chief Justice held that the plea for a stay did not meet "the test of extraordinary showing required in these circumstances."

In an 11th-hour appeal filed Friday night, School Board Attorney Frank L. Ball argued that it was not in the best interest of students or teachers to permit transfers in the middle of the school year.

Attorneys for the children replied yesterday that the School Board had not made an issue of the February date when it was set by Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan in September and had not raised the question until desegregation appeared "imminent."

Attorneys Frank D. Reeves, James M. Nabrit III, Otto L. Tucker, Oliver W. Hill and Spotswood W. Robinson III argued that "every day that these respondents are required to remain in the Negro school they are being subjected to an admittedly inferior educational environment."

Warren County Supervisors urged to Keep High School Closed. Page A-23

The four Negro children, all formerly enrolled in Hoffman-Boston Junior-Senior High School, are Ronald Deskins, Lance D. Newman, Michael G. Jones and Gloria D. Thompson. They will be assigned to two of the 12 7th grade sections at Stratford.

County Manager A. T. Lundberg told the County Board yesterday that police will take "every step necessary to preserve peace and order" around the school.

More than 50 officers will be stationed around the school early Monday, Lundberg said. About 25 radio-equipped vehicles of the County's Public Service Department have been assigned to supplement police equipment if needed.

School Board and County property around the school will be posted with "no trespassing" signs and access will be limited to students, school personnel and others who have official business with the school.

Lundberg announced that parking will be banned from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on school days on the following streets: N. 23d st. from Lorcom lane to N. Randolph st.; N. Randolph st. from N. 23d st. to Lorcom lane; Lorcom lane from N. 23d to N. Randolph sts.

Pedesrains and moving traffic will be permitted "unless conditions at the time dictate otherwise." Lunberg said.

School in Virginia Remaining Closed

Arlington and Norfolk Quiet In Second Integrated Day

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI)—Twenty-one Negro students plunged quietly into the routine of classwork with whites Tuesday in Norfolk and Arlington, but Warren County announced it was not feasible to reopen its integration-closed high school.

The token integration of seven schools in Arlington and Norfolk proceeded as peacefully as it began Monday with Norfolk showing a slight increase in the enrollment of three high and three junior high schools.

William J. Phillips, commonwealth's attorney for Warren County, advised NAACP attorney Oliver W. Hill in a letter the county school board had decided it would be impractical to reopen the county's only high school before next September.

SCHOOL REMAINS CLOSED

Twenty-two Negroes had been ordered enrolled in the high school at Front Royal last fall. It was closed under the state's now-stricken "massive resistance" program.

Phillips said the board, which held a long closed session Tuesday in Front Royal, felt the administration difficulties involved would be "tremendous."

He also cited the fact that 26 members of the Warren County faculty resigned to go to work for a private foundation which is expected to continue to teach about 1,000 displaced white students.

EVASION DOWNGRADED

Phillips said the board was not trying to evade the federal court integration order but was seeking to "provide for the logical and orderly transition of all students who will be housed in Warren County High School next year."

The board's decision to keep the high school closed came as Norfolk and Arlington completed a second orderly day of integration in their schools.

Quiet crowds which gathered Monday were absent. Reduced bands of white helmeted policement watched over the arrival of four Negroes at Arlington's Stratford Junior High. Plainclothesmen kept watch while 17 Negroes calmly filed into the Norfolk schools.

Few To Attend Mixed School

Warren County Pupils Vote For Private System

FINANCING IS STUDIED

By The Associated Press

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 13. — There is a possibility only a handful of teachers and students will be present if Warren County's only high school reopens on an integrated basis Wednesday as ordered by a Federal judge.

Pupils who have been attending private, segregated classes since the school at Front Royal was closed under the now defunct massive resistance laws last fall have voted almost unanimously to stay with the private schools even if Warren County High reopens.

And a mass meeting of about 1,000 county citizens voted unanimously Thursday night to ask the Warren County Educational Foundation to continue with the private schooling. At present, the foundation holds the contracts of 26 of Warren County high's 42 teachers.

The foundation will meet Monday to decide whether to go on with the private classes. Whether these 26 teachers would remain with the foundation or return to the public high schools was uncertain.

Pupils in the private school program were given questionnaires Thursday to take home to their parents. These asked whether the parents wanted private or public schooling until June.

Of the 763 questionnaires distributed, a spokesman said, 549 were returned Friday. Of these, only four expressed any desire to return to the public school.

Federal District Judge John Paul earlier this week ordered the school to reopen Wednesday and to admit 22 Negroes assigned to the school under an earlier desegregation decree. A plea that the integrated reopening be delayed until September will be made Monday in Baltimore to Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Should Warren County High reopen with Negroes enrolled, it will be the fourth locality in Virginia to grudgingly operate integrated schools.

Twenty-one Negroes completed their second full week of integrated classes today in six schools in Norfolk and one in Arlington. In Alexandria, nine Negroes rounded out three days of integration in three schools.

GETS CITIZENSHIP AWARD—Ann Rhodes, seventeen, the only remaining senior at the integrated Front Royal, Va., high school, shaking hands with Sen. Kenneth B. Keating yesterday at the Tenth Annual Citizens Achievement Day celebration at Seventh Ave. and 125th St. Miss Rhodes was honored after her home school board failed to certify her for graduation.

Only Negro Girl Senior in Warren County

Snubbed in Virginia, Is 'Graduated' Here

By Joel Seldin

New York more than made up for Front Royal, Va., yesterday with probably the most impressive "graduation" a single high school student ever had. There were two Senators, two Representatives, a police commissioner, a "name" band and a parade at 125th St. and Seventh Ave. all for Ann Rhodes, seventeen.

Sens. Jacob K. Javits and Kenneth B. Keating, New York Republicans, used the occasion to promise that they will press for stricter civil rights legislation. Reps. Emanuel Celler and Adam C. Powell made similar promises. Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy spoke and "Count" Basie's band played.

And all because Warren County, Va., after deciding to turn its high school over to twenty - one Negro students rather than accept the Supreme Court's order to integrate, also decided that Miss Rhodes, the only remaining senior, was one credit shy for graduation or a diploma.

Sen. Keating called it "the shame of Virginia" and Rep. Celler said: "We give her our diploma, a diploma of approval." Actually it was not a diploma but a citizenship award, a gold statuette, for her courage and determination in fighting for her rights.

The story really begins last year when the Negro students, tired of traveling twenty-five miles to a school in Berryville, Va., got a court order directing the segregated Warren County High School to take them in. At first the school, in Front Royal, was closed completely and the white students attended "private" schools while the Negro students went to school in Washington.

White Students Graduated

Then, in February, the 1,000-student high school was reopened for the twenty-one Negroes alone and they attended for a total of sixty-nine school days. This, with the thirty-nine days of school in Washington, was still fifty-two short of the requirement and the school board ruled that Miss Rhodes had only fifteen of the sixteen credits necessary for graduation.

But the Warren County Education Foundation, which operated the "private" schools, had declared in a statement that with regard to its students "special recognition should be given to the graduating class in view of the difficult circumstances with which they were confronted during this school year." The ninety-seven white seniors, who also had a short school year, were all graduated.

Miss Rhodes was faced with the alternative of attending a summer school, if she can find one that will take her, or repeating an entire year in high school. She wants to attend college.

Into this impasse stepped Rep. Powell, who had organized a Citizens Achievement Day celebration ten years ago and has continued it annually. Miss Rhodes was declared an "honored guest," was granted an award and the whole day's festivities were centered around her. It was a whale of a "graduation."

FREEDOM OF CHOICE . . . NO. 1

Three Schools in Virginia County—

Take Your Pick

By HAROLD DAVIS
Atlanta Journal Washington Correspondent

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Oct. 10. Although it was and is painful, Gov. Lindsay Almond's freedom-of-choice school plan is being made to work in this mountain town.

Front Royal's 15,000 citizens live in the shadow of the Shenandoah Mountains and in the curve of the Shenandoah River. The whites — 95 percent of them, anyhow — favor total segregation.

Last year, to preserve school segregation, they watched unblinkingly while their high school—Warren County High — was picketed, and then they set to work organizing a private institution of their own, running it in church parish halls, downtown buildings, the town Youth Center and in the Confederate Museum.

Since last year, however, the legal roof has fallen in on Virginia. The old Dominion's massive resistance laws were killed by both federal and Virginia courts; the General Assembly, by a narrow margin, substituted a new plan.

GOVERNOR ALMOND and a 40-member committee of the Legislature which drew up the program gave it its name—the Virginia "freedom of choice" plan.

Now, for the first time, it is possible to see how it works in practice.

Front Royal's people are mountain people and they are stubborn. Of 15,000 residents, only about 1,240 are Negro, a far smaller proportion than in many parts of Virginia.

When integration was ordered in August, 1958, the stubbornness took over. The town shouted a loud, "No," and set up private facilities to teach the children.

This year, with freedom-of-choice in operation, three kinds of high schools are running here, and everybody has a choice of what kind he wants to attend. (All elementary schools are still segregated.)

WARREN COUNTY High School is open and integrated with 20 Negro pupils and 600 whites.

A Negro institution—Criser High—is open and running with 109 Negro students.

A private institution—all white—is operating with 456 pupils. It is named the Warren County Educational Foundation High School, but its directors are seeking a more suitable and euphonious name. They are considering calling it John Singleton Mosby High in honor of the famous Confederate raider who once operated in this area.

With these three clear-cut choices in full operation, anybody in the county, white or black, can elect the type school he wants to attend.

FIRST, about the all-Negro school (Criser High)—it was just completed. A majority of the Negroes evidently still prefer it.

Warren High School (integrated) sits on a high hill overlooking the town. County School Superintendent Q. D. Gasque says it is going to have the best year it's ever had.

"No, sir, there's been no trouble at all," he said. "I haven't even heard of any name-calling. The Negro children are staying pretty much to themselves."

Everything is running normally, Mr. Gasque says, except that the school has abandoned physical education classes and social functions because of the "unusual and difficult" situation that could develop.

The 20 Negroes (originally 21, but one dropped out voluntarily) are spread throughout all grades, so there is no concentration in any one class.

FIVE are in the eighth grade, three in the ninth, seven in the tenth, three in the 11, and two in the 12. Of the 20, eight are boys and 12 are girls.

Because part of the high school's usual enrollment elected to go to the all-white private school, the pupil-teacher ratio at Warren High is very good — about one teacher to every 15 pupils.

The private school, of course, is the institution that is most talked about and most written about. It is a dramatic thing to see a town's citizenry excited about a project, and the foundation (private, segregated) high school has wide popular support.

It was literally fashioned by the hands of its backers.

Last year when there was clearly a first-class emergency, many of the churches of Front Royal allowed their parish halls to be used as school rooms. But this year, with the public school open for those who want to use it, the emergency is not regarded as so acute.

The Front Royal Baptist Church, by a vote of 107-86, decided not to let the foundation use its parish hall again. The Methodists took a similar position.

SO THE FOUNDATION decided to rent facilities.

On the outskirts of Front Royal is a large restaurant and club called the Virginia Gentleman. In its rear are many sprawling rooms, and the foundation made a contract for use of the space.

The patrons of the school moved in with hammers and saws and nails and put up partitions where needed and installed desks and blackboards.

There are 16 classrooms for 456 pupils, with a small campus in the rear enclosed by a wall. Also in back, four new rooms are under construction and, when they are finished in a matter of days, the eighth grade which now meets at the Legion Hall will move over to the Virginia Gentleman. Then the entire private school will be in one compact location.

It is unmistakably makeshift, but usable.

"We have a wonderful faculty," says the principal, Glen E. Sunderlin, who retired last year from a 24-year career of work in public schools.

"We are teaching about the same curriculum as the public high school, and the cooperation of the high school has been very good.

"It's a free country, you know, and parents can send their children where they want to send them."

LAST YEAR'S efforts in setting up a temporary private school made this year's task easier. Already on hand were desks, blackboards, tables and chairs—most of them donated last year by sympathetic individuals and companies both inside and outside Front Royal.

Mr. Sunderlin, speaking to his student body the first day of school, told the youngsters they were there "through free choice in a free country."

He cautioned against discussing the merits of public and private schools. "We don't want any friction," he said.

"We are going to be just a little bit better. But being better, we are not going to Lord it over anybody or shove it down their throats."

The foundation, in picking its faculty, was careful not to raid the teachers of Warren High. Instead, it placed advertisements in the Richmond newspapers and enlisted the help of superintendents in surrounding counties in finding teachers seeking employment.

Q. D. Gasque

G. E. Sunderlin

TRANSPORTATION for the private school pupils was easy. Under Virginia's freedom-of-choice laws, pupils at private institutions may ride to school on public buses through a special arrangement.

The laws also helped with many problems.

Of course, the financing of the public high schools—the all-Negro Criser and the slightly integrated Warren—is done by public money.

Pupils at the private foundation school also get public funds through tuition grants. Each student gets $220 from the government to be used for attending the private facility, and the board of directors charges the $220 in tuition.

Hugh D. McCormick, a lawyer who heads the private foundation and who presides over the meetings of its 15 directors, says he thinks the $220 yearly charge will be enough to pay day-to-day expenses.

LATER in the year, he says, it may be necessary to conduct a special fund-raising campaign to collect between $15,000 and $20,000 to pick up loose ends.

In rent the foundation is paying $10,000 this year, and is contributing $7,500 toward the construction of the four new classrooms. (In future years, the foundation may stop renting and build a school.)

Mr. McCormick expects any money campaign to go over the top. "Our patrons are united in this thing," he says.

However, the running of three high schools in the county, each of a different kind, causes deep anguish among certain people who have strong preferences for one particular kind or another.

2 Accept N. J. Invitation

Virginia Pupils To See Integration In Action

By United Press International

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. — Two officials of the student council of a Virginia high school have accepted an invitation to observe student relationships at an Atlantic City high where one-third of the 2,000 students are colored.

It was announced Sunday that John Baily and Frances Rhodes, president and vice-president respectively of the student council of Lane high school in Charlottesville, will visit the week of March 1 for observing and taking part in regular and extra curricular activities.

CITY OF Charlottesville submitted a plan to a federal court in Harrisonburg, Va., designed to integrate its classes next September. Charlottesville's school board had been ordered to admit 12 colored pupils to Lane high and one of its elementary schools. A delay was granted by a federal court after the city pledged to proceed with its plan to desegregate in September.

Barbara Costello, student council president at Atlantic City high, said the invitation was the idea of Richard Williams, 17, a white senior and council member. She said the trip will be financed by the student council treasury.

Diploma Doesn't Come For Lone Negro Senior

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (AP)—The sole senior among 21 Negroes at Warren County High School here won't win the diploma she had coveted next month because she has one too few credits for graduation.

Ann Rhodes, 17, learned the bad news officially yesterday from the county school board, which decided it could not waive a state requirement of 16 credits for graduation. Miss Rhodes has only 15.

PROMISED SCHOLARSHIP

Already promised a $1,000 college scholarship by Negro Elks, Miss Rhodes is hoping she'll be able to pick up the needed credit at summer school, but it seems unlikely there will be one at Warren County High. The county thinks there wouldn't be enough students to justify the expense.

The girl also has another alternative, which was pointed out by the school board. She can take a "high school completion" examination offered by the state and, if she passes, claim a certificate which would be the equivalent of a high school diploma.

Miss Rhodes says she won't decide about taking the state exam until she knows for sure about the summer school.

She and her 20 schoolmates enrolled at Warren County High last February when the school, closed since September under Virginia anti-integration laws, was reopened on a "desegregated" basis.

Not a single white child appeared for enrollment, so the Negro youngsters, taught by a staff of 10 white faculty holdovers from the 1957-58 session, have had the 1,000-pupil-capacity school all to themselves.

WHITES IN PRIVATE SCHOOL

The white children were enrolled last fall in a private high school operated by the Warren County Educational Foundation and stayed there when the public high school reopened on the collapse of the state's massive resistance laws.

Miss Rhodes' shortage of credits stemmed from the fact that her senior year was interrupted by the integration controversy. If she had put in the normal session of 180 days of classroom work she would have had 17 credits. Instead, she will have had only 108 days when the session ends in June.

Negro Rebuffed In Attempt To Mix School

GALAX, Va. (UPI) — Galax school officials said a Negro girl was refused admission to the all-white Galax High School Wednesday. They also disclosed that eight Negroes had applied for admission to the school.

School Supt. Marvin Sutphin said Wednesday the girl showed up at registration at the school to apply for the 11th grade. It was the second integration attempt in southwest Virginia.

Officials said six requests for admission to the school came from Negroes living in nearby Grayson County which sends its white high school students from one district to Galax high.

The two other applications were made in the behalf of two daughters of Robert Lee Brooks of Galax.

Sutphin said one of the Brooks girls attempted to register. He said he told her he had received no word from the state's Pupil Placement Board which makes classroom assignments under Virginia law.

The girl attended school in Plainfield, N.J., last year.

School officials said the eight applications came in shortly after school ended last June and were sent to the state placement board. Spokesman for the board in Richmond acknowledged receiving two applications but said they came in too late for the board to act on at its meeting this month.

Galax is located on the Grayson-Carroll County line and has an estimated 100 Negro students. It does not have a Negro high school and sends the pupils to Wytheville, 40 miles away.

Segregationists Calm

VIRGINIA

Norfolk Integration Has Bred No Trouble

Special To The Herald

NORFOLK, VA. — Despite forewarnings of explosive racial tension, the first three weeks of desegregated classes in six junior and senior high schools here have produced no serious trouble.

There were a few taunts at first aimed at the 17 Negroes admitted to the formerly all-white schools when they re-opened Feb. 2.

But the orderliness of the long-feared and long-fought integration was never really threatened.

Why?

Observers here credit the peace to actions by state and city officials, by the school board and white student leaders, by prominent citizens — and by the segregationists themselves.

Against the background of a three-year battle against classroom mingling of the races, the calm transition would seem unlikely without considering the feelings of a city that went without schools for four months.

THE CLIMATE OF RESISTANCE to court-ordered integration started building up in Virginia in 1956. That was the year the first desegregation suits were brought — and the year "massive resistance" was born.

Virginia enacted laws which said any desegregated school would be closed. In the fall of 1958, the state did close Norfolk's schools in the face of federal orders to integrate.

During the long fight, the Federal District Court here was repeatedly warned of the danger of desegregation. The warnings came from the Norfolk School Board and later the City Council. There were anonymous letters and telephone calls warning of violence.

Just two weeks before desegregation finally occurred the City Council, ignoring the wishes of the school board, announced it would close all secondary school classes by withholding operating funds if schools were reopened under integrated conditions.

But then federal and state courts swept aside the resistance laws and the fund cut-off plan. The six schools closed four months before by the state were going to reopen. Integration was at hand.

It was then, too, however, that Norfolk citizens decided they had had enough of wrangling and of no schools.

The City Council, encouraged by a petition by 100 of Norfolk's most prominent business and professional men, declared that no violence would be tolerated.

Student leaders of three of the high schools faced with desegregation ran an advertisement in the newspaper calling for a quiet acceptance of the Negro students. An "interested citizen" put up the money.

TWO OTHER DEVELOPMENTS perhaps figured in the calm reopening. Segregationists had set up tuition classes for students of the closed schools, and these were to continue even though other emergency classes were to disband.

Meanwhile, Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., besides promising to use the full force of the state to maintain order, had the legislature repeal the compulsory attendance law and appropriate money for tuition grants.

The grants are for students who prefer to attend segregated private schools or public schools outside Norfolk.

Norfolk Superintendent of Schools J. J. Brewbakers favored these measures. If normally he would oppose them, under the circumstances he believed they relieved tensions.

The school board had no desire for students with strong segregationist feelings to attend a school against their wishes.

The prolonged closing of the six schools, with their 10,000 students forced to scramble for an education, also may have contributed to the orderly desegregation.

This is the way Police Chief Harold Anderson sees it:

Many parents had worried for months where the family's next high school graduate was coming from. So relieved were they to see the schools reopen that integration be damned.

Norfolk act robs 7,200 of school

NORFOLK, Va. — "The council action leaves me in sort of shock."

Mrs. W. T. Mason, a prominent civic leader and one of many stunned Virginians here Tuesday, gasped those words unbelievably after the Norfolk City Council ousted 7,200 more children from school by voting to cut off operating expenses of all city secondary schools, effective Feb. 1.

The council action, aimed at escaping integration, increases Norfolk's list of schoolless children to 17,200.

AT THE same time, it closes the sole white junior high school open in the city, shuts down three colored high schools, padlocks the seventh grades in 22 white elementary schools and closes 10 colored elementary schools.

It is one of the most sweeping acts to avoid integration that the state has witnessed. Six white high schools affecting 10,000 pupils, have been closed since last September under Virginia's massive resistance laws.

Observers here surmised that the council took the drastic action in the belief that the state's massive resistance laws would crumble under court tests scheduled this week.

The fund curtailment is tantamount to closing the schools. The colored schools were shut down apparently in retaliation for white schools being shut.

NORFOLK MAYOR W. F. Duckworth said the action means all secondary schools would be closed. It was Duckworth's resolution that the council acted on.

The council move came just as Federal and state court tests on the constitutionality of the massive resistance laws were to be held.

Two attorneys who brought the Federal court suit attacking the validity of the Virginia laws were present at the council meeting.

One of the lawyers, Edmund D. Campbell of Arlington, declared the City Council action would be tested by law.

"IT CLEARLY violates the state constitution and the City Charter," Mr. Campbell asserted.

The most immediate public reaction was that "severe economic damage" would be done by the council action, which went far beyond the expectations of many persons.

The council resolution says the city will pay off teacher contracts in effect on Feb. 2.

Norfolk city fathers voted six-to-one in approving the resolution that will curtail school funds.

Supreme Court Hits Arlington

Ordered To Reconsider 26 Negro Transfers

CAROLINA PLAN UPHELD

By Staff Correspondent

RICHMOND, Va., March 19.—A United States Appeals Court ordered Arlington County, Va., Thursday to reconsider the applications of 26 Negro pupils who were denied admission to white schools in the Washington suburb.

At the same time, the fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals again upheld the North Carolina pupil assignment plan which provides for gradual school integration on the basis of local decisions and conditions.

The North Carolina plan had been upheld by Federal courts previously as constitutional on its face. It provides for remedial action and appeals through state courts, but Federal jurisdiction is maintained if racial discrimination is a factor in assigning pupils.

Must Follow Steps

The Appeals Court told Negroes seeking admission to white schools in Raleigh and Montgomery County, N. C., that they must follow steps prescribed by the North Carolina statutes before asking a Federal court to order integration.

The court ordered the Arlington School Board, however, to take immediate action on the 26 Negro applications and told Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan to make sure that any of the group qualified for transfer be admitted to white schools by next September.

The effect of the three rulings was to tell Southern localities that assignment plans would be considered valid unless it were shown they were used to thwart integration.

Different Criteria

Evidence showed the Arlington School Board had not judged white students' transfer application under the same criteria as those of Negroes, the court said. It said the North Carolina cases could not be judged until assignment procedures were shown to be discriminatory in practice.

The 26 Arlington Negroes were among 30 turned down there. Judge Bryan ordered the other four be admitted and they have attended the previously white Stratford Junior High School without incident since Feb. 2.

The court said the school board and Judge Bryan both had probably been overly cautious because of Virginia's "massive resistance" laws which automatically closed integrated schools. The laws have since been ruled unconstitutional by both the Virginia Supreme Court and a Federal court.

Arlington Told To Review Ban On 26 Negroes

Court Says School Closing Law Hampered Transfer Decision

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

A Federal appeals court directed the Arlington School Board yesterday to restudy the applications of 26 Negro pupils denied admission to schools for white children, now that Virginia has no school closing law.

In another opinion, the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals again upheld the North Carolina pupil assignment plan. It stated that Negroes first must exhaust administrative remedies set up in the plan before seeking relief in Federal courts.

The decisions were handed down in Richmond. In its 430-word Arlington opinion, the Court did not invalidate specifically the standards of the pupil assignment plan used by the School Board to screen Negro applicants last September.

Nor did the Court reverse the Federal District Court opinion of Judge Albert V. Bryan who upheld the rejection of the 26 pupils.

The School Board originally rejected 30 Negro applicants but Judge Bryant ordered four of them admitted to Stratford Junior High School where they have been attending since Feb. 2.

Court Cites Reasons

But the Circuit Court, in telling the School Board to take another look, cited two seasons why the School Board action should not be accepted as a precedent for future assignments:

• Virginia's law closing desegregated schools, invalidated by State and Federal courts in January, was in effect when the School Board rejected the applications and Judge Bryan supported it.

"With this threat hanging over them," stated the Circuit Court, "neither the County School Board nor the District Court could act with the same freedom and independence as they can now."

• The Negro pupils were subjected to tests which white applicants for transfers were not—the main contention by attorneys for the Negro pupils in their arguments before the appeals court.

The School Board has since adopted a policy subjecting all applicants for transfers to the same tests, regardless of race.

The Circuit Court directed the School Board to restudy the applications soon so that any dissatisfied pupils can ask Judge Bryan for a review before the September school term.

Appeal Held Unlikely

The School Board will confer with its attorneys to discuss a possible appeal of the Circuit Court decision—a move held unlikely by Chairman Robert A. Peck.

Peck said the Board, instead, probably will consider the rejected applications along with all other transfer applications for the next term.

Unless some facts affecting the 26 rejected pupils have changed, Peck said, he assumes the Board will reject them again. He added, however, that each pupil will have another school year in his record, which might change the Board's decision.

L. Lee Bean, Board member, agreed and said he was not influenced by the school closing law when he voted to reject the applications.

On the other hand, James G. Stockard said he maintains now, as he did in September, that attendance areas and overcrowding are the only standards which can be applied without racial discrimination.

The Arlington plan also includes standards involving academic achievement, adaptability and pyschological problems.

Negroes Ask Lynchburg School Shifts

LYNCHBURG, Va., June 10 (AP)—The City School Board has been asked to admit two Negro children to white schools—one for the summer school term and one to Robert E. Lee Junior High School next September.

Superintendent Paul M. Munro said the two applications are the first to be received here.

He said F. D. Harris asked yesterday that his daughter be admitted to the eighth grade at Robert E. Lee. Munro said the application would be sent to the State Pupil Placement Board in Richmond. The application to attend summer school has already gone to the State agency, he added.

The summer school request was made by M. W. Tornhill Jr. for his son, Murrell W. Thornhill III, a student at Robert S. Payne School. The request asks that he be allowed to study sixth grade arithmetic at John W. Wyatt School.

School officials said John W. Wyatt "might be" a few blocks nearer to Thornhill's home than Dunbar High School, where summer courses are offered to Negro pupils. But actual travel time on a bus would be about the same, they added.

WHITES BOYCOTT—When Negro children (21 of them) attended the 1,200 capacity Warren County High school in Front Royal, Va., because of a Federal court order, the schools approximately 800 white students did not attend classes. Private classes run by a local foundation were set up for the white students. In photo, teacher Audrey O'Niel instructs Negro students in typing after school reopened, Feb. 18.

Negro Girl Still Wants High School Diploma

FRONT ROYAL, Va., May 30 (AP)—"I want a diploma, not a certificate."

Ann Rhodes, 17, set this objective today in the wake of the Warren County school board's decision that it could not buck the State's minimum credit requirements and give her a high school diploma next month.

The girl is the only senior among 21 Negroes attending the Warren County High School here. She and her schoolmates enrolled in February when the formerly all-white school, shut for six months to avoid integration under the State's now-defunct massive resistance laws, opened to students of both races.

The white students stayed away, most of them choosing to continue their studies in classes arranged by a private educational foundation.

Ann, who scored As and Bs in high school, missed the first semester because of the integration controversy. The half-credits she will receive for her work since February will bring her high school total to 15, one shy of the 16 required by the State for graduation.

The school board decided yesterday it couldn't graduate her with 15 credits.

"I'm sorry I won't get the diploma." Ann told a reporter today, adding that she "sort of expected" the school board's ruling.

"I would like to take summer school somewhere else, but haven't made any definite plans," she said. "Mother is kind of let down by all this."

There isn't much chance of a summer session at Warren County High. Present thinking by school officials is that there wouldn't be enough students to justify the expense.

Ann ruled out one alternative— taking the State's high school completion examination —because it would mean a certicate attesting to her qualifications and not a diploma.

"I will have to make arrangements starting Monday," said Mrs. Annie Hhodes, Ann's mother. "I'm going to talk to Mr. James Duff, principal of Warren County High, about the situation."

Of the school board's decision, Mrs. Rhodes said:

"They did what they thought was best. I was a little disappointed and so was Ann."

Ann has been promised a $1,000 college scholarship by the Negro Elks.

Front Royal School Loses Final Appeal

employes of the American Viscose Corp. plant.

At the hearing in Judge Sobeloff's chambers here, School Board Attorney William J. Phillips pleaded for court permission to keep the school closed until September.

He recalled that, in a September hearing before the judge, he could not promise whether or not the School Board intended to begin desegregation if granted a delay until next September.

"But now I can answer in the affirmative," he said.

"We're defeated on integration," he said. "We realize that. But our stand now, sir, is that it is the feeling of the School Board and the people of Warren County that the children, having been once upset this year, should not be subjected to the disservice of transferring them back to the high school." He said the School Board would pay the tuition for the 22 Negro applicants in the Washington, D. C., schools they have been attending.

At another point, Phillips said:

"I will be frank to tell the court that 22 Negroes will show up on Wednesday and maybe five or six whites."

He said the School Board has 14 or 15 teachers left out of the high school's staff of 40.

Sobeloff said he had sympathy for the School Board's problem. But he said:

"I am going to say . . . that the spectacle of empty school buildings and unoccupied teachers ought to be terminated."

He said that refusal to reopen the school would violate the Jan. 19 ruling of the State Supreme Court of Appeals which called Virginia's "massive resistance" laws, including the school closing law, unconstitutional.

"I'd like to be flexible," said Sobeloff "if you have a comprehensive desegregation plan.

"But it is fairly obvious that the longer this continues, the more demoralized teachers will be, the more injury to pupils, both white and Negro, and the more difficult it will be to comply with court orders."

Spottswood W. Robinson III of Richmond, attorney for the Negro pupils, summed up their case this way:

"What has really happened here is the School Board is about to abdicate its constitutional duty to an expression of white parents not to open the school until September.

"Constitutional rights cannot be subjected to the public in this matter . . ."

Judge Sobeloff upheld an order of Federal District Judge John Paul who last Tuesday ruled the School Board must reopen the high school.

Desegregation began in Virginia on Feb. 2 when 21 Negroes entered white schools in Arlington and Norfolk. On Feb. 10, nine Negro pupils entered white schools in Alexandria. Warren County will be the first rural community to begin desegregation in Virginia. It has 3300 white pupils and 320 Negro pupils.

In other developments:

• In Alexandria, Marshall J. Beverley, candidate for the Democratic nomination to the State Senate, said he favored a "pupil preference" program (a system of Negro, white and desegregated schools) if the study commission of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond "doesn't come up with a plan to stop all integration."

• The Norfolk and Danville chapters of the segregationist Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties announced plans for meetings to protest desegregation, similar to those already held in Southside and Northern Virginia.

• Federal District Judge Sterling Hutcheson refused to delay a hearing of the Richmond desegregation case beyond its scheduled March 10 date.

• In Norfolk, enrollment at the six schools reopened on a desegregated basis Feb. 2 reached 7159, compared with the 6360 on hand when they reopened and the 9950 expected last fall.

Few White Pupils Expected

Warren County Loses School Appeal, Judge Orders Integration Wednesday

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

BALTIMORE, Feb. 16—The Warren County School Board failed in a last ditch effort today to keep its only high school closed for the rest of the school year.

Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to postpone a lower court order requiring the School Board to reopen Warren County High School in Front Royal Wednesday on a desegregated basis.

The School Board said it would comply. Warren County will be the fourth Virginia community to begin school desegregation.

But it was apparent that only a few, if any, white pupils would enter the high school when it reopens along with the 22 Negroes who brought the desegregation suit.

Some of the high school's 1044 white pupils have been attending private classes since state law closed the school six months ago to thwart desegregation. Others are attending schools outside the County and 100 have attended no school.

After Sobeloff's ruling, the Warren County Educational Foundation announced formally that it would continue the private classes for the rest of the school term.

Duncan Gibb, Foundation president, said all 26 teachers agreed in a meeting today to continue the private schooling. The teachers resigned from public teaching positions in the high school to teach for the Foundation.

Gibb pointed out that parents of children in the private classes had voted 598-5 to continue them, and that 1000 residents at a mass meeting last week had voted in favor of keeping the private classes in operation.

The Foundation has $120,000 in cash and pledges, Gibb said, enough for operation for the remainder of the term. Some $1600 weekly is guaranteed by contributions of union

Another Virginia School Is Ordered To Integrate

When Negoes Show Up Tomorrow, Whites Might Remain In Private Front Royal Classes

Baltimore, Feb. 16 (AP)—Warren County, a community of 15,000 segregation-minded persons in northern Virginia, was ordered by a top Federal Court Monday to open its high school to Negroes.

The School Board said it would comply. It promised to reopen its high school at Front Royal Wednesday. But first indications from Front Royal were that no more than two dozen or so students—mostly Negroes—would show up. The rest would remain in the private school system already in operation.

Have Made Full Round

Twenty-two Negroes applied for admission to Warren County High last spring. Their applications have made the full round of courts. Monday's decision by Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was, in essence, the final legal course.

William J. Phillips, attorney for Warren County School Board, said he was confident that no more than the 22 Negro students or a half dozen or so white students would appear at the high school.

"The people there don't want integration," Phillips said, "and they're not going to have it."

Later he made this generalization:

"It's not a question of integration of schools. It's not a question of integration of races. It's the bastardization of races which we feel will result from this integration."

Warren County was ordered last September 8 to integrate its high school, with about 1,000 pupils.

Proceedings Reinstituted

The County appealed to Judge Sobeloff within a week to overrule the U. S. District Court's order. Sobeloff refused.

After Virginia's massive-resistance law was declared invalid by both State and Federal courts last January 19, attorneys for the 22 Negro students at Front Royal reinstituted Federal Court proceedings. Last week U. S. District Judge John Paul upheld the original integration order, and Monday's opinion by Judge Sobeloff upheld Judge Paul.

In Virginia, five communities have fought integration. Norfolk, Alexandria and Arlington have gone through the same legal steps taken by Warren County, and have also been ordered to integrate their schools. All have, without particular incident.

The one exception was Charlottesville, which was granted a delay in desegregation until next September, providing its outlined plan of full desegregation was approved by Judge Paul. That plan is due before Judge Paul by next Wednesday.

Beauty Course Out, So Negro Students Quit

FRONT ROYAL, Va.—(AP)—Two of the 23 Negroes admitted to the previously all-white Warren County High School have dropped out because they could not take a course in cosmetology.

The drop-outs leave the student body at 21. No whites have entered the formerly 1,000-pupil school.

Supt. Q. D. Gasque said Joyce Henderson, an 11th grader, and Elizabeth Dean, a senior, notified school officials they are leaving because they can not get the course they want in beauty treatment.

Warren County High has never offered such a course, Gasque said. All courses regularly offered by the school are available, he said.

Both girls plan to return to schools they were attending in Washington and New York while Warren County High was closed for five months under Virginia's now-defunct massive resistance laws. Neither girl was in school Friday.

The other 21 Negro pupils — 13 girls and eight boys — attended classes for the second day. Nine teachers are on duty.

White students failed to show up Wednesday for enrollment when the school opened on an integrated basis under Federal Court order.

An estimated 780 of the white students are attending segregated classes conducted by a private group, the Warren County Educational Foundation, in buildings scattered across this northern Virginia town. Warren High is the only high school in the county.

In Richmond, state education department officials said cosmetology courses are offered at five state schools, and Virginia State College at Petersburg, a Negro institution.

SCHOOL TO REOPEN

Integration In Schools Voted Down

Virginia Parents Want Makeshift Classes Kept

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 13 (AP)—Written ballots showed Friday that Warren County parents voted, 545 to 4, to keep their children in private, makeshift classes rather than send them to an integrated public high school.

The Warren County Education Foundation, which sponsors the tuition-free classes, announced the results of ballots taken home by students and counted Friday.

Duncan C. Gibb, foundation president, withheld official announcement that his group would stay in business. It was obvious, however, that the private classes would continue.

To Await Court Ruling

Gibbs' announcement was held up until a hearing in Baltimore Monday before federal appeals Judge Simon E. Sobeloff, who will rule on a request from the County for a delay in a lower-court edict that the County's only high school, closed since September, open next Wednesday on an integrated basis.

The School Board has announced it will open the school as ordered unless Sobeloff grants an unexpected delay, raising the prospect that the 22 Negroes might enter the schoolhouse alone.

Nearly 800 of the 1,050 white high school students in the county have attended the foundation's private classes since last fall.

The foundation is supported entirely by private donations.

$30,000 Fund to Help Students Attend Segregated Classes at Front Royal

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Sept. 12 (AP)—The Warren County Educational Foundation said last night it has more than $30,000 in a sponsorship fund for students unable to pay their tuition for private, segregated high school classes this fall.

The Foundation also extended registration for classes in its private school until further notice.

An additional 100 students registered yesterday, making the Foundation's total enrollment 455. Desegregated Warren County High School, already in operation, has a total enrollment of 404.

Classes at the private school are scheduled to begin Sept. 21.

In a related development, it was disclosed Friday that Warren County High may be required to offer physical education classes for white and Negro children in grades 9 and 10.

The County School Board voted Thursday to abolish physical education, subject to the approval of the State Department of Education. County authorities said they would emphasize health education in place of physical education.

In Richmond, Davis Y. Paschall, state superintendent of public instruction, said that under new regulations of the State Board of Education, students must take the equivalent of 2½ years of health and physical education in grades 8 through 12.

Paschall said he had not been notified officially of the Warren County School Board's action. He said it appeared the State Board of Education would have to act on the matter.

Budget Action Keeps Warren Schools Open

Assures Operation Of Public, Private Classes Until June

By ALEX B. PRESTON
Staff Staff Writer

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Oct. 1.—Continued operation of integated Warren County High School—as well as all other public schools—through next June was assured today with the restoration of the county's budget appropriations on an annual basis.

The Board of Supervisors, after a public hearing at which a return to "public harmony" in the community was urged, last night rescinded its quarterly appropriations for the three months ending yesterday and placed the county's operations on a full year's program.

The action came after the four-member board was deadlocked in a 2-2 tie. The court-appointed tie-breaker, Howard Duncan, had to be summoned by the sheriff to break the impasse.

The effect of the supervisors' action is to appropriate for the remaining three-quarters of the fiscal year, beginning today, the balance of $678,703 for public schools, and an additional $116,088 to pay for State and locally supported scholarships for education of children who object to attending Warren County High School.

20 Negroes Enrolled

Twenty Negro children are enrolled under Federal court order at the public high school along with 401 white children. Private segregated classes are being conducted for 451 white children by the Warren County Educational Foundation in a restaurant here and appproximately 100 other white children are attending public schools elsewhere.

Last May 29 the supervisors, again with the tie-breaker deciding the issue, agreed on a compromise quarterly appropriation plan after two members attempted to finance schools on a month-to-month basis and two others, who favored continued operation of public schools, wanted appropriations made for at least a half year.

Under Virginia's anti-integration program, localities may appropriate on a month-to-month basis so funds can be cut off whenever inforced integration occurs or, as with Prince Edward County, they may refuse to put up any money for school operations.

The public hearing was attended by a number of Educational Foundation supporters working for private schools.

Scholarships Asked

The Rev. Carlton Blankenship, pastor of Rivermont Baptist Church and a foundation member, asked the supervisors to guarantee private school scholarships, amounting to $220 for each child, by appropriating $80,000 for this purpose through next June. He did not oppose placing public schools on an annual financing arrangement.

John G. Bowman of Front Royal said "peace and quiet" would be restored to the community if the uncertainty of quarterly appropriations was eliminated. He did not object to the private scholarship request of Mr. Blankenship, but added:

"If the board is going to provide funds for priavte education for the rest of the year, it should do the same for public school pupils and then all this feuding can be forgotten."

Supports View

Dr. Elizabeth Sherman also supported this view. She said a full year's appropriation "would give a feeling of security to everyone, regardless of which school was chosen by parents.

The only opponent of annual appropriations who spoke was Mrs. Cleveland Jones, who waved a tax bill for $309 on two pieces of property.

"I am opposed to appropriations for two high schools" (Warren County High and Criser High for Negroes), she said, adding that those who do not object to integrated instruction could attend the Negro school.

Frank Nesbitt rejoined, "Mrs. Jones has sent several of her children through public schools. Now that they're all grown up, this is a good time for her to stop paying her tax bills."

H. E. McVay, plant manager of the American Viscose Corp., the industrial mainstay of this area, also backed annual appropriations. He said "it would be a very good thing for the community."

Gasque Jubilant

County School Supt. Q. D. Gasque was jubilant after the supervisors' final action. He was forced to operate the white high school last year with only 21 Negroes attending after approximately 1,000 former students boycotted it and remained in private classes. He had told the supervisors earlier:

"Recognizing the importance of educating all children in Warren County, the School Board reaffirms its belief in the necessity of operating public schools as a part of the 'freedom-of-choice' plan enacted by the 1959 special session of the General Assembly."

Supervisor Frank Stoutamyer of Front Royal, made the motion to restore annual appropriations, and Chairman E. M. Bowen of Cedarville District seconded it. Supervisors George Baggarly of South River District, and Samuel Esteppe of Fork District, opposed it.

VIRGINIA WIDENS ITS INTEGRATION

Mixed Classes Begin Quietly at Warren County High and in Charlottesville

By LEONARD BUDER
Special to The New York Times.

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Sept. 8—School Integration began in Warren County today. There were no incidents.

A total of 282 white students and twenty-one Negroes attended classes at Warren County High School on the first day of the new school year.

The county school superintendent, Q. D. Gasque, said he was quite pleased by the initial enrollment. He said he expected attendance by white students to pick up as the term progressed.

Officials had said earlier that they did not know whether "two or 200" white students would appear today. Last February, 800 white students boycotted the county high school to attend private classes operated by a citizens' group, the Warren County Educational Foundation.

The public school's enrollment then consisted of twenty-one Negro students admitted under Federal Court orders.

Warren County High School was closed for the first half of last year under the state's anti-integration laws, which are now defunct. The school normally has an enrollment of 1,000 students.

he private foundation also started registering students for its classes, but no preliminary figures were announced. Registration will continue through Friday.

Both white and Negro students reported that the first day of integration here had been relatively uneventful. They also said there had been no conversation between the races.

Town policemen, aided by a deputy from the county sheriff's office, took up posts outside the red-brick Colonial-type school building more than an hour before classes were scheduled to start at 9 A. M.

The school is situated on a hill, not far from the center of town, and the police blocked all approaches to the school at the foot of the hill. At 7:55 A. M., the driver of a car that was directed away from the school shouted at police: "You better guard those coons this morning."

The total of twenty-one Negro students caused some surprise at first, because only eighteen had registered. However, Mr. Gasque said later that the three additional Negroes were eligible to attend because they had been parties to the original court case.

At a news conference later in the day, Mr. Gasque said there would be a curtailment of the athletic program this fall. He said that the school was now too small to compete against its former opponents.

He also said there would probably be a curtailment of the athletic program this fall. He said that the school was now too small to compete against its former opponents.

He also said there would probably be a curtailment of some social activities, such as dances, as well as health education classes. He declined to give reasons.

While the twenty-one Negroes attended Warren County High School, 107 other Negro students went to the county's newly built Negro high school, which opened for the first time today.

Charlottesville Quiet

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Sept. 8—Twelve Negroes walked into two previously all-white schools here today without disturbance.

White students greeted their arrival with little outward concern. No adults, other than newsmen, were on hand. A few city policemen directed traffic and patrolled on motorcycles.

Three Negroes entered Lane High School, the city's only white high school. Nine enrolled at Venable Elementary School, near the University of Virginia in a well-to-do residential district.

Vote Slated Tonight On Area Youth Code

By Dorrie Davenport

Staff Reporter

Montgomery County teenagers have recently been battling some problems mighty enough to stump much older philosophers.

When is a party crasher not a party crasher and what makes an open house open? How long can you stay in a parked car without parking and what, precisely, constitutes a public display of affection?

The questions came up for debate when the Committee on Youth Guidance and Fitness of the Montgomery County Council of Parent-Teacher Associations met with student council presidents to study teen-age problems in social behavior.

Guided by replies from more than half of the 21,000 questionnaires they sent senior high students and their parents, the council leaders and the Committee drew up a proposed parent-youth code to be voted on tonight by the entire P-TA Council.

The percentage of youngsters answering the questionnaire was more than double that of their parents, but the answers were often so similar it was hard to tell who was 15 and who was 50.

On the big question of deadlines for dates, most of the teenagers voted for 12:30 a.m., only a half hour later than the midnight limit generally approved by their elders.

Holding hands in public is fine, all but a few diehards agreed, but anything else constituting "a show of affection in public" was voted in poor taste. It's also unseemly to leave one party in search of another if the first is a flop.

Party crashers were banned, but no youngster at an open house can be called a party crasher because, by definition, an open house is open to all comers of the same age group.

The codemakers found that in lower Montgomery County open house parties are not liked because "they frequently result in property damage, cause annoyance to the neighbors and the host and sometimes culminate in police action."

Smokers, the proposed code suggests, should indulge only with the consent of their host, and adults should see to it that the Maryland law against serving alcohol to a minor is strictly enforced.

"Joy riding" and "parking" were both ruled out, with proper interpretation of the controversial terms prudently left up to the individual.

About 16 per cent of the parents and 28 per cent of the students who answered the questionnaire replied that they saw no use for a code.

"We don't want to be told how to bring up our kids," said one parent, while some felt that well behaved youngsters don't need a code and that others won't obey one.

Desegregation Reversal Is Denied Warren County

Judge Paul Rules Board Lacks a Plan

By Susanna McBee
Staff Reporter

HARRISONBURG, Va., Sept. 3 — Federal Judge John Paul refused today to rescind his 1958 ruling under which 18 Negroes will be admitted to the Warren County High School when it opens on Tuesday.

The Judge told County school officials they had not shown good faith in planning for desegregation. He added that the completion this month of the $500,000 Criser Elementary-High School for Negroes won't change the situation.

Commonwealth's Attorney William J. Phillips asked Judge Paul to cancel his order, because the new Negro high school is "adequate, well-staffed and has a thoroughly run curriculum."

He also said the School Board did not yet have a plan for desegregation but is considering one.

Phillips indicated afterward that a hurried attempt to draw up such a plan might be made by the School Board Friday night for presentation to Judge Paul here Saturday. The Judge said he would be glad to study it, but doubted a desegregation plan could be made overnight. He said there is a "grave question" that Criser High has equal facilities to those at Warren High.

Earlier, Phillips had argued that the Warren County School Board could not legally assign Negroes to the white school because under existing state law assignment powers are vested in the State Pupil Placement Board.

Judge Paul replied, "So far as this court is concerned, you are not under it (the Pupil Placement Board) now." He went on to criticize the Board, saying:

"The Pupil Placement Board, in the manner it is being administered, is so plainly discriminatory and unconstitutional . . . that is harly needful to consider it."

Judge Paul's remarks were an indication what his decision would be Saturday in the Charlottesville school case. The Charlottesville School Board has admitted a total of 12 Negroes to white schools under its desegregation plan. But the 12 were rejected by the State Placement Board. The local board on Saturday will ask Paul for guidance.

Judge Paul also reminded Phillips that the court was assured in February that Warren County High School would reopen this fall on a desegregated basis.

"But you have not prepared a plan," the Judge said. "You come to court merely asking that the injunction be dissolved . . . Things are not being advanced at all in Warren County . . . The School Board has never committed itself to a policy of desegregation."

Phillips argued the Board was "suddenly and abruptly forced to integrate." Paul reported, "You've had a year now to formulate a plan . . . I certainly wouldn't feel justified to . . . allow the School Board to drift."

Oliver W. Hill, attorney for the 18 Negroes, said, "It is very apparent that the basic idea of desegregation has not been accepted in Warren County."

Another Blow In Integration Fight Dealt to Virginia

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—School desegregation next Tuesday in Charlottesville and Warren County became a virtual certainty Saturday as the authority of the Virginia Pupil Placement Board suffered another body blow in the courts.

In Harrisonburg, U.S. Dist. Judge John Paul told Charlottesville school officials they must enroll 12 Negroes in two white schools despite orders to the contrary from the three-man placement board.

He said the directive of the placement board, which under state law is vested with sole authority for the assignment of all pupils, "is without any validity whatsoever" and is "plainly unconstitutional."

Warren County, meantime, apparently lost its last chance to prevent the enrollment of 18 Negroes in Warren County High School at Front Royal when its school board failed to submit a desegregation plan to Judge Paul.

The judge last Thursday had refused to dissolve an injunction requiring admission of the Negroes to the previously all-white school, largely on grounds that the county had presented no orderly plan for desegregation.

Charlottesville and Warren County are among four Virginia localities now prepared to desegregate 13 schools next Tuesday.

Twenty-one Negroes are to be enrolled in seven white or predominantly white schools in Norfolk. Nine Negroes are to be admitted in three schools in Alexandria.

Desegregation will be nothing new for either Norfolk or Alexandria. Six secondary schools were desegregated in Norfolk last February. Three simultaneously were desegregated in Alexandria.

Ignores Order.

The Norfolk School Board decided Saturday to ignore a pupil placement board order that two Negro pupils who attended white schools last session be assigned to Negro schools for the 1959-60 session.

White man refused entry at Walker

RICHMOND

A Richmond white man was denied admission to a bricklaying course at Maggie L. Walker High School.

It marked the city's first case of public school integration in reverse.

The man sought to enroll in the evening school bricklaying course, the only one offered in city public schools. He was told to return the next day and was then informed that he must apply to the State Pupil Placement Board.

(In recent weeks, Federal district courts have ignored the Pupil Placement Board, the last vestige of the outlawed massive resistance machinery. Federal courts have assigned colored pupils to white schools when local school boards refused to do so.)

HOWARD H. CARWILE, local attorney who favors public school desegregation, made this comment on the matter:

"We have here the ridiculous situation of a white applicant being denied admission to a colored high school purely on racial grounds. According to this logic, a colored applicant cannot be denied admission to a public white school solely because of race, but a white applicant can be denied admission to a colored public school solely because of race.

"How can the segregation laws be void on one day and valid on the next day? Such a stupid stultification the world has never seen."

Though several cases are pending in the Federal courts Richmond's public schools are still rigidly segregated.

Galax High Will Admit Negro Girl

ROANOKE, Va., Nov. 9 (AP)—A 16-year-old girl now attending school in New Jersey may be the first to break the color line in Western Virginia public schools.

Marvin Sutphin, superintendent of Galax schools, said Rita Lee Brooks has been notified she can enter the all-white Galax High School on Jan. 19, 1960, the day the second semester opens.

Floyd County is scheduled to admit 13 Negroes to white schools Jan. 25, the start of its second semester.

Rita Lee Brooks was ordered admitted to the white school by Federal District Judge Roby C. Thompson. He also ordered the admission of the 13 Negroes to Floyd County schools. Thompson rejected an application from Rita Lee's sister, Hilda Jane Brooks, to enter Galax High, as she is attending a Negro school about 300 yards from her home.

Judge Thompson noted that the younger girl has a Negro junior school to attend while Rita Lee has no Negro high school available in Galax. Rita Lee is attending school in Plainfield, N. J.

Appliances of 18 Negroes to enter the white Pulaski High School are expected to be forwarded to the State Pupil Placement Board is the near future. All 18 now attend Christiansburg Institute, according to Pulaski County Supt. Frank J. Critzer.

Galax, Va., Will Take Negro Pupil

Jan. 11-1959

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — A 16-year-old Negro girl now attending school in Plainfield, N.J., will be admitted to previously all-white Galax, Va., high school Jan. 19, the Galax school superintendent said Monday.

Rita Lee Brooks has been notified she can enroll that date as the second term begins, Marvin Sutphin said.

She would be the first Negro admitted to a white school in western Virginia. Integration in Floyd County is expected five days later.

Judge Roby C. Thompson of the Western District of Virginia ordered her admission "on or before the beginning of the second semester..." Galax has no Negro high school.

Thompson also ordered Floyd County to admit 13 Negroes to its white schools at the beginning of the second term, Jan. 25. They will be admitted, Floyd Supt. James Combs said earlier.

ARLINGTON ORDERED TO TAKE IMMEDIATE ACTION ON NEGRO APPLICATIONS FOR SCHOOLS

Court Charges Different Criteria Used For Races

By WILLIAM B. MEAD

RICHMOND, Va. — (UPI) — A U. S. appeals court Thursday ordered Arlington County, Va., to reconsider the applications of 26 Negro pupils who were denied admission to white schools in the Washington, D. C., suburb.

At the same time, the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals again upheld the North Carolina pupil assignment plan which provides for gradual school integration on the basis of local decisions and conditions.

The North Carolina plan had been upheld by the federal courts previously as constitutional on its face. It provides for remedial action and appeals through state courts, but federal jurisdiction is maintained if racial discrimination is a factor in assigning pupils.

The appeals court told Negroes seeking admission to white schools in Raleigh and Montgomery County, N. C., that they must follow steps prescribed by the North Carolina statues before asking a federal court to order integration.

The court ordered the Arlington School Board, however, to take immediate action on the 25 Negro applications and told Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan to make sure that any of the group qualified for transfer be admitted to the schools by next September.

Evidence showed the Arlington school board had not judged white applications under the same criteria as those of Negroes, the court said. It said the North Carolina cases could not be judged until assignment procedures were shown to be discriminatory in practice.

The 26 Arlington Negroes were among thirty turned down by Arlington. Bryan ordered that the other four be admitted and they have attended the previously-white Stratford Junior High School without incident since Feb. 2.

The court said the school board and Bryan had both probably been overly cautious because of Virginia's "massive resistance" laws which automatically closed integrated schools. The laws have since been ruled unconstitutional by both the Virginia Supreme Court and a federal court.

Lone Negro Is Senior Class In White-Boycotted School

By WILLIAM JOHNSON
Associated Press Staff

FRONT ROYAL, Va., March 28. — A girl sits by herself in a classroom designed to accomodate 30. She listens intently to the instruction of her teacher.

This lone girl is a Negro. She is the entire senior class of Warren County High School — a school occupied a year ago by 1,000 white pupils.

Now the total enrollment is 21 — all Negro.

Eight teachers, a librarian and Principal James S. Duff are the staff.

"The program of instruction is practically an individualized program," says Q. D. Gasque, superintendent of Warren County schools.

"Seven pupils is the largest class we have," says Duff.

Warren County High, in rural North Virginia, has been operating on the present basis since Feb. 18. It opened then after being closed since last September under Virginia's now-defunct resistance to integration laws.

Had No Negro High School

Unlike many other Virginia localities, Warren had no high school for Negroes. Any Negro seeking an education above the elementary grades was taken at county expense to regional Negro high schools elsewhere.

A Federal court ordered the school to admit 24 Negroes. Under state law, since invalidated, the school was closed to prevent race mixing.

When the school reopened in compliance with a Federal court order, 22 Negroes registered. But not a single white child that day or since attended classes.

More than 700 of the white pupils are attending private, segregated classes in several buildings scattered about this town of 9,000. One reason they give for not returning to Warren County High is that they don't want their education interrupted a second time in one year. Reopening of the school came after the new semester started.

"We're giving all the standard high school classes the pupils requested," Duff says. "The most popular is English. We have five taking biology and six taking general science, the only science courses they asked for."

"We don't operate the cafeteria," Gasque says. "All of our cafeterias are self-supporting."

When the school was ordered to reopen, the 26 teachers who had signed up for the private classes stayed where they were. One had taken a job in another county. Of the 15 who remained on the county pay roll, five were reassigned to other schools.

Town Now Calm

Duff and Gasque say there have been no disciplinary problems.

When the Negroes entered the school for the first time, a number of white persons gathered and watched. They were kept from entering the school grounds by barricades and armed police.

Today, there are no crowds.

The superintendent says it is impossible to estimate total cost of keeping the school open.

Last year, he says, $200 was our total cost of operation per pupil."

From the time the Negroes entered school Feb. 18 until the end of the semester in June, Gasque says, salaries will total $35,000 — a per pupil cost of $1,666.

Under construction is a new half-million-dollar combination elementary and high school for Negroes.

Although county officials are reluctant to predict what may happen next fall, some feel that some Negro pupils will go to the new Negro school.

The white pupils will be back in Warren County High next fall, they believe, but there may be a sprinkling of Negroes among the student body.

SCHOOL'S ONLY SENIOR IS GIRL

21 Negro Students at Front Royal

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (AP)—A girl sits by herself in a classroom designed to accommodate 30. She listens intently to her teacher.

This lone girl is a Negro. She is the entire senior class of Warren County High School — a school occupied a year ago by 1,000 white pupils.

Now the total enrollment is 21 — all Negro.

"The program of instruction is practically an individualized program," says Q. D. Gasque, superintendent of Warren County schools.

"Seven pupils is the largest class we have," says Duff.

Warren County High, a white-columned brick building atop a hill in this rural northern Virginia area, has been operating on this basis since Feb. 18. It opened then after being closed since last September under Virginia's now-defunct massive resistance to integration laws.

SCHOOL CLOSES

Unlike many other Virginia localities, Warren had no high school for Negroes. Any Negro pupil seeking an education above the elementary grades was taken at county expense to regional Negro high schools elsewhere.

A federal court ordered the school to admit 24 Negroes. Under state law, since invalidated by Virginia and federal courts, the school was closed to prevent classroom race mixing.

When the school reopened in compliance with a federal court order, 22 Negroes registered. But not a single white child that day or since attended classes.

More than 700 of the white pupils are attending private, segregated, make-do classes in several buildings scattered about this town of 9,000. One reason they give for not returning to Warren County High is that they don't want their education interrupted a second time in one year. The reopening of the school came after the new semester started.

ENGLISH POPULAR

"We're giving all the standard high school classes the pupils requested," Duff says. "The most popular class is English. We have five taking biology and six taking general science, the only science courses they asked for."

School starts promptly at 9 a.m. with a homeroom period. Then, as in any other public high school in the state, the pupils attend six periods of 55 minutes each.

"We don't operate the cafeteria," Gasque says. "All of our cafeterias are self-supporting; we don't spend tax money for them. We couldn't afford to operate a cafeteria for that few.

"We have milk for them. But they bring their lunches from home."

For the teachers, it's a new experience too. Last year, when all 12 teachers were on hand, the pupil-teacher ratio was approximately 27 to 1. Now it is 2.1 to 1.

When the school was ordered to reopen, the 26 teachers who had signed up for the private classes decided to stay where they were. One teacher had taken a job in another county. Of the 15 who remained on the county payroll, five were reassigned to other schools.

MORALE IS HIGH

Morale among both pupils and teachers is high, Duff says.

The superintendent says it is impossible to estimate the total cost of keeping the school open for the 21.

Last year, he says, "220 was our total cost of operation per pupil."

From the time the Negroes entered school Feb. 18 until the end of the semester in June, Gasque says, salaries will total $35,000—a per pupil cost of $1,666.

"But," Gasque says, "the teachers were on the payroll and would have to be paid whether there were 21, or 1,000 or no pupils in the school."

Under construction and scheduled for occupancy next September is a new half-million-dollar combination elementary and high school for Negroes.

Judge Says Federal Courts Avoid Constitutional Rulings

By GLENN ROBERTSON
News and Courier Staff Writer

Federal courts avoid passing on the constitutionality of a case if there is some other basis of judgment, Dis. Judge Albert V. Bryan of Virginia said here yesterday.

"All legislation carries with it a presumption of legality," he continued, "and if there is any basis for conclusion it must be sustained."

Otherwise, the Virginia Federal Judge indicated, the courts—federal and state—would be passing on every piece of legislation that is passed.

Judge Bryan is in Charleston for a special term of Federal Court.

Under appeal now is an order signed by Judge Bryan ordering four Negroes enrolled in Stratford Junior High School in Virginia for the semester starting Feb. 2.

Commenting on the increased activity in recent years of the federal government, Judge Bryan said all three branches of the government are now touching the individual.

"This was not the case many years ago," he said, "but now we have minimum wage laws, social security—and other ways in which the federal government is coming to the individual."

With the increasing functions of the legislative branch of government, he said, there is a similar increase in the judicial functions.

The 59-year-old Judicial officer emphasized that the U.S. Supreme Court has a right to hear cases by choice. One of the reasons, he said, so many of the segregation cases have gone to the high tribunal is that there have been contradictory rulings in two different circuits. The Supreme Court, he continued, is also very likely to hear cases of a procedural nature.

The judge, who has the physique and manner of a man in his middle forties, was high in his praise of the South Carolina Supreme Court.

"South Carolina has a very strong state bench," he said.

"You can judge a judge much like a professor—by his writing, his comparative thought and his research," he continued.

Judge Bryan was quick to dispel the idea that Federal Judges don't have bosses. His immediate superior is Judge Simon E. Sobeloff, head of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit.

Turning to the "enchanting city of Charleston," Judge Bryan said, with tongue in cheek, "I'm expecting Mrs. Bryan to get arrested for vagrancy—the way she has been poking around the gardens and houses in your lovely city."

Judge Bryan was appointed to the Federal Bench in 1947. He and Mrs. Bryan have two sons—one a doctor and the other a lawyer in Alexandria. His home is in Alexandria, where he has his offices.

10 Teachers Instruct Them as 800 Whites Continue Boycott in Virginia

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Feb. 19 (UPI)—Twenty-two Negro students started their first day of classes in integrated Warren County High School today with ten teachers in a building designed for 1,000 students. All white students again boycotted the school.

The Negroes arrived in private cars. No spectators, except newsmen and police, were [illegible].

The fourteen girls and eight boys were divided in groups—sometimes as small as two and three—to receive their instructions in the county's only high school building.

Meanwhile, 800 white children continued classes downtown in a private segregated school system using churches and other buildings.

Q. D. Gasque, Superintendent of Schools, said the million-dollar high school could operate "indefinitely," but he could offer no guarantee how efficient it would be. He said some classes were so small, teachers could teach two or more groups in the same room.

Mr. Gasque estimated that it would cost $31,538 to operate the high school the rest of the semester. But most of that amount would have to be paid anyway, whether the school was open or closed, because of teachers' contracts and building maintenance.

The private school system was started after Warren High was closed by state law when a Federal court ordered it integrated. Although the law was ruel unconstitutional and the school was reopened for registration yesterday on an integrated basis, white parents decided to keep their children in the private system.

Warren County Leaders Meet To Settle Desegregation Crisis

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 19—Officials of the American Viscose Corp., the textile union and Warren County thrashed over the school desegregation problem at a private meeting here today.

After two and a half hours, they emerged with a statement that disclosed nothing except they will meet in Washington on Thursday and once more on Friday here.

The discussion was attended by 18 persons in the Union Hall here.

In a related development, 250 more high school pupils signed up on the last day of registration for private segregated classes contemplated by the Warren County Educational Foundation, bringing the 2-day registration total to 461 applicants—far short of the 650-700 figure set by the Foundation as necessary for operation of the scoohl.

The Foundation announced it would extend its registration to Friday and Saturday and announce on Monday whether it will attempt to operate a school.

Registration at the Warren County High School totalled 309 whites and 18 Negroes after a 3-day registration period.

Virginia's "massive resistance" laws shut down the 1000-pupil white Warren County High School last September to avoid desegregation. When it reopened in February, only the 22 Negroes under Federal court order entered the school.

Some 800 white pupils continued classes provided by the Foundation and financed largely through voluntary payroll deductions of union members at the American Viscose Corp. plant here.

When the battle over segregated private schooling versus public desegregated schooling developed again recently, the American Viscose Corp. became active in attempts to bring harmony to the community.

The company, hard-pressed to persuade supervisory personnel to work at the plant here because of the school uncertainties, told the union it would not agree to another payroll deduction plan for private schooling.

George C. Horst, director of corporation's industrial relations, was instrumental in calling today's session which representatives of the union, company, school board, Town Council, County Supervisors and Foundation attended.

Aside from the uninformative statement, the participants were close-mouthed. It is known that a compromise offer to attorneys for the Negro children at Warren County High School was to be discussed.

This proposal called for the recommended withdrawal of the 18 Negroes and their enrollment in the newly completely Ressie Jeffries School for Negroes in exchange for a complete desegregation program starting with the 12th grade next September.

So far, however, Oliver W. Hill, Richmond attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People who represents the Negroes, has said he will do anything reasonable to avoid further litigation other than recommend withdrawal of the 18 Negroes.

Fairfax Board Endorses Secrecy on Integration

Post Thurs. 8-20-59
Washington, D.C.
P. 1

By Muriel Guinn
Staff Reporter

The Fairfax Board of County Supervisors gave the School Board a vote of confidence yesterday after the School Board explained at a joint meeting why it adopted a secret desegregation plan.

The vote came as a sharp about-face on the part of some supervisors who earlier attacked the plan Monday as "possibly illegal" and premature.

Two Democrats, Board Chairman Stuart T. DeBell and Thomas S. Gray, voted against the motion of confidence. They said it implied approval of a plan which in reality does not exist because the School Board has no power to adopt it.

The Supervisors' motion said: "This Board has confidence that the School Board understands its responsibilities and will exercise sound judgment in the performance of its duties without action at this time by this Board." It was adopted, 4-2.

School Board Chairman Samuel S. Solomon told the Supervisors that the School Board met to consider a desegregation plan when it learned that 26 Negro pupils planned to sue to enter white schools. The suit is to be filed this week.

He said the School Board had in mind that other communities had suffered a hodgepodge of placement because school boards had no plan and the assignment of Negroes to white schools was handled by courts.

Solomon said the School Board adopted its plan to be prepared in case the County Supervisors decided to take over pupil placement March 1 under the Perrow Commission "freedom of choice" legislation.

It was decided to keep the plan secret, he said, because if it were "torn apart and argued in the papers" it would lose its effectiveness in court.

Supervisor Anne Wilkins charged that Monday's Republican statement rapping the plan implied that Republicans did not approve of local pupil assignment.

Supervisors A. Claiborne Leigh and William H. Moss emphatically denied this, saying they feared premature action might upset the "delicate" balance of power in the General Assembly. They pointed out that Arlington had lost its elected school board when it advanced a desegregation plan.

Gray questioned Solomon sharply on whether the School Board was acting within its authority. He asked how the School Board expected to bind its successors.

"They can always revoke us," replied Solomon. "We've revoked our predecessors and even ourselves on occasion." But the question drew a concession from School Board member Robert F. Davis that the plan "possibly should be called a statement of intent."

192 Register for Private Classes

Post & Times Herald
Washington D.C.
8-18-59

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 18 (AP)—The Warren County Educational Foundation today registered 192 pupils for the proposed second year's operation of segregated private high school classes.

The 3-day registration aimed determining whether an "overwhelming majority" of white high school pupils want to attend private classes.

Each of the 192 students woh applied to attend the private school today was required to agree that they would pay the $200 tuition fee in advance of enrollment.

Foundation officials have indicated they will go ahead with plans to run the school a second year if as many as 650 to 700 students register. Currently the Foundation lacks the necessary funds, teachers and firm space commitments to operate the type of school it conducted last year.

County school officials wound up a 3-day registration period at the Warren County High School yesterday, enrolling 298 white students along with 18 Negroes.

The public high school had an enrollment of 1050 when it was closed last September to avoid court-ordered desegregation.

When the State laws under which the school was closed were declared unconstitutional by State and Federal courts, the school reopened in February to both white and Negro pupils. However, only a score of Negroes showed up for classes. The whites stayed away, with more than 600 taking classes with the Foundation.

Q. D. Gasque, County School Superintendent, said school officials hope to operate the public high school in the fall, even with the limited registration. Gasque said he had "more than enough" teachers.

The actual enrollment at the public high school may be less if the Foundation operates its school again. Some students reportedly registered at Warren County High as a hedge—in the event it was the only facility operationg.

Public school officials had ben disappointed by the registration turnout Friday and Saturday. They "felt better" about the turnout of 186 white students yesterday.

The 18 Negroes who registered were covered by the Federal court desegregation order.

Only 65 Whites at School Once Housing 1000

New Orleans, La.

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (AP) — Only 76 students, 11 Negroes and 65 white students registered Friday for fall term classes at Warren County High school.

The figures were released Friday night by Warren county school superintendent Q. D. Gasque.

Police were not stationed at the large hilltop schoolhouse which in past years has housed more than 1000 students. But a police patrol did go through the grounds at intervals.

Only about half a dozen townspeople showed up as spectators. It was the first of a three-day registration period.

VOTE FOR PRIVATE SCHOOL

The previously all - white school, ordered to desegregate last fall, was closed instead by Virginia's massive resistance laws. The laws were tossed out early this year by the state supreme court.

Warren High then reopened, in February on an integrated basis. But only 22 Negroes turned out for classes. The white high school students remained in a private school set up by the Warren County Educational Foundation.

Last night, a mass meeting of Warren citizens voted by about 1500 to 5 to continue the private school this year. Machinery to conduct a registration was set in motion.

Parents who asked to remain unidentified said Friday they were sending their children to register for the public high school, but would enter them in the private foundation if it opens again this fall.

TUITION LATER

Hugh D. McCormick, president of the Warren County Educational Foundation, said parents registering children for the private high school will not have to pay tuition at the time of registration. Next Tuesday and Wednesday are the days scheduled for the private school's registration.

Meanwhile, enrollment at the new Ressie Jeffries combined school, a Negro school for both elementary and high school students, took place here without incident. Gasque said 39 Negroes enrolled.

Warren registering private school pupils

News
Birmingham, Ala.

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 19—More private school registration and an unexplained meeting were scheduled today as Warren County continued to grapple with its school segregation problem.

Three hundred twenty-seven pupils, 18 of them Negro, have registered for classes to begin Aug. 31 at the public Warren County High School, which had an enrollment of 1050 before it was closed last September. When the school reopened in February to both whites and Negroes, only 22 Negroes showed up. The whites stayed away.

The private Warren County Educational Foundation, which provided free classes for more than 800 Warren County High School students last school year, conducts its second and final day of registration today.

Two hundred eleven students signed up yesterday and pledged to pay $220 tuition each when and if the foundation school resumes. The foundation had said it would consider a total registration of 650 to 700 a mandate for operation of the school.

Virtually all groups vitally concerned in the county school problem were asked to be represented at a meeting this afternoon.

Boycott Is Ended At Warren High

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 14 (UPI)—Warren County High Schoo, boycotted by its entire white student body last February after it was desegregated, today quietly began registering white and Negro students for the new term.

It marked the first time that both Negroes and white entered the huge school, the only white public high school in the county. It was closed last fall to nullify a Federal court desegregation order but reopened in February with 21 Negroes as its entire student body.

Robert A. Wood, newly-named principal of the high school, said the registration went "very orderly and mannerly" with no incidents inside the school.

A few reporters and an occasional curious passerby watched from outside the building. By the end of the day, 11 Negroes and 65 white students had registered, according to School Supt. I. D. Gaique. Registration continues through Monday.

Classwork is scheduled to begin Aug. 31 and it appeared, on the basis of the opening registraiton, that the high school would become actually desegregated for the first time.

Warren County thus would follow Norfolk, Arlington and Alexandria in token integration. Another 12 Negroes also are scheduled to enter schools for white pupils next month in Charlottesville, Va.

The private Warren County Education at Foundation, which operated makeshift classes for the approximately 800 white students who boycotted the high school, opens registration for another term Tuesday. A mass rally last night overwhelmingly endorsed a resolution asking the Foundation to determine if enough students would again attend the private schools to make it feasible.

A Foundation leader, Charles Leadman, said a meeting of white and Negro leaders would be called within about 10 days to try to persuade the Negro students not to return to the white school but attend a new $500,000 Negro high school which opens here Aug. 31.

Oliver W. Hill Chief Counsel of the Virginia National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said in Richmond he would be "happy to attend" the meeting and "make every effort to work out some reasonable solution to the problem."

Virginia town again faces 'mixing' crisis

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 15—(AP)—A test of this Northern Virginia community's sentiment on desegregation may come Saturday as bi-racial registration continues at predominantly white Warren County High School.

Eleven Negroes and 65 white youngsters signed up for the 1959-60 session Friday as the two races appeared together on the school grounds for the first time since the segregation controversy began last September. The registration took place calmly.

While the number of white registrants seemed small in comparison to the 1050 eligible to attend the school, County School Supt. Q. D. Gasque said he expected a larger turnout Saturday when parents won't be working.

The 11 Negroes who registered were among the 21 who attended the high school last year, Gasque said. They were the only students who attended classes when the school was desegregated in February.

Warren County High was closed last September under now-defunct massive resistance laws struck down by federal and state courts. White students in February chose to remain in a private school set up by the Warren County Educational Foundation.

At a mass meeting here Thursday night, more than 1500 county residents voted overwhelmingly to continue the private school this year. Registration for it is scheduled next week.

THERE WERE two othr developments, both involving Charles E. Leadman, business agent for the local Textile Workers Union.

Leadman said a petition seeking to declare the public high school surplus and to sell the property probably would be filed in the Circuit Court office here Saturday.

Leadman also said a meeting of various community officials and representatives of the Negroes seeking admission to white schools will be held next week.

Tuition Grant Forms Mailed to Fairfax Parents

Evening Star
Washington D.C.
8-12-59

Virginia tuition grant application forms began going out in the mail yesterday to Fairfax County parents.

The County School Board originally had received only 25 application forms from the State, but the board had received more than 100 requests for the applications. The board asked the State for 250 more forms. The forms were delivered yesterday.

Under new State law, parents can request the $250 tuition grants for children to go to any public or private nonsectarian school anywhere in the country. The aim of the law is to ease the impact of integration.

School officials have explained that tuition grants would be paid only when children are enrolled and attending a school. Only half the money will be paid at the first of the school year. The balance will be paid at the end of five months.

Court Bar to More Closings Of Norfolk Schools to Be Asked

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 14 (Special)—Two attorneys said today that they will seek a Federal court order to stop the City Council from closing secondary schools here.

Attorney Archie L. Boswell of Norfolk said that he and Attorney Edmund D. Campbell of Arlington would make the move this week before Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman.

Boswell said that he and Campbell represent white parents and children who would be ousted from schools if the Council's action becomes effective.

The two attorneys already represent 26 white parents and pupils ousted from six secondary schools in September when state law shut them down to thwart desegregation.

The attorneys have attacked the constitutionality of the state law in a suit scheduled to be decided by a three-judge Federal court—including Judge Hoffman—on Monday. Boswell said they would attack the new school closing threat as an "evasive scheme" barred by the Supreme Court.

The State law has ousted 10,000 white pupils here. In November, City Council placed school appropriations on a month-to-month basis. On Tuesday, it voted 6-1 to cut off funds for all secondary schools beginning in February.

The Council apparently assumes the "massive resistance" laws will be invalidated, and chose to shut all secondary schools to maintain segregation until the General Assembly enacts a new program.

Most School Board members declined to comment on the Council action, except to point out it was taken without their knowledge. One member, Willis P. Ballard, noted that Norfolk voters had defeated a proposal to petition the Governor for the reopening of the closed schools.

"Abondoning schools is inconceivable to me," said Ballard, "but apparently that is what the people of Norfolk want."

The Rev. James Brewer, chairman of the Norffolk Committee for Public Schools, called the Council action "retaliatory, negative and destructive." James G. Martin IV, who heads the Tidewater Educational Foundation which operates segregated private schools, said it "reflects the desires of the people."

Some persons saw the Council's school-closing action as an effort to force the Negro applicants to white schools to withdraw in the face of pressure.

But J. Hugo Madison, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he was sure the 17 Negroes would not withdraw.

Closing the rest of the secondary schools would oust 2000 more white pupils and 5300 Negroes.

Mrs. W. T. Mason, above, is one of the leaders in the fight to keep Norfolk schools open. She is shown after she pleaded in vain with the city council not to cut off funds for secondary schools.

Arlington Brief Upholds Negro Screening Plan

RICHMOND, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Arlington County School Board yesterday defended the assignment plan used to screen Negro transfer students in a brief filed with the United States 4th Circuit Court.

The court next Wednesday will hear arguments on an appeal of a lower court decision in the Arlington County school desegregation case. United States District Judge Albert V. Bryan upheld the school board's refusal to transfer 26 Negro students to white schools. However, he ordered four other students admitted to the all-white Stratford Junior High School next month.

Adaptability Test

In reference to its program for testing the adaptability of transfer pupils, the school board said in its brief:

"It is a historical fact that the history of the administration of schools will disclose that many students have been suspended or expelled because of lack of adaptability and failure to accommodate themselves to their surroundings and their instruction."

Five of the Negro pupils were refused transfers to white schools because they failed the adaptability test. The other transfer applications were disqualified because the Negro students failed to pass other tests administered by the school board.

In defense of its adaptability test, the Arlington School Board said:

"The Supreme Court's integration decision was entirely motivated by the premise that education of the individual Negro child would be improved by eliminating racial dstinctions with regard to entrance in the school system.

Decision Cited

"The Supreme Court did not, however, say that a child should be entered in a specific school where such entrance, instead of improving its educational opportunity or advancement, would definitely retard and adversely affect it.

"Such a construction would be a contradiction of the very basis of the integration decision. No individual child should be forced to stand upon an asserted civil right when such enforcement would tear down his own educational advancement."

When the appeals court reviews the case, the school board will be defending that part of the decision denying transfers to the 26 students, but will be attacking that part directing the integration of Stratford Junior High.

Opening Doubtful For Warren High

But Board Authorizes '59-60 Budget

By PAUL HOPE
Star Staff Writer

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Jan. 9.—The possibility of Warren County High School being reopened during the current school term seemed remote today—unless at court direction.

Members of the county school board and the school superintendent said yesterday they would hesitate to reopen the school immediately even if the State's anti-integration legislation falls in the courts.

However, the board has authorized preparation of a new budget which contemplates the school's being open for the 1959-60 school year.

The State's massive resistance legislation is being tested in State and Federal courts. A decision on whether the laws are constitutional is scheduled January 19 by the State Supreme Court of Appeals.

Nine Schools Closed

Nine schools, including Warren County's only white high school, have been closed under the State laws to avoid federally ordered integration.

Warren County Supt. Q. D. Gasque noted that many persons expect the State laws to be declared unconstitutional, thus leaving Virginia localities without any law forbidding them to operate integrated schools.

"I would seriously doubt the advisability of opening the school at that moment unless ordered to and we had no recourse," said Mr. Gasque. He said it is possible, however, that plaintiffs in desegregation suits may seek Federal court orders to reopen the schools.

"We would know too little about the events that might follow," he said. "My first concern in this entire affair has been the children, and before uprooting them from their present school facilities I would want to know what would be continued."

He said if the school were reopened the students might have to be shifted again if the State makes further anti-integration moves.

Many Attend Private Classes

Most of the students displaced by the closing are attending private classes in makeshift facilities. Duncan Gibbs, chairman of the Citizen Education Committee sponsoring the classes, said most parents are satisfied their children are receiving an adequate basic education in the temporary classes.

School Board Chairman E. T. Shiner raised the possibility that State school funds might be tied up at least temporarily as a result of the January 19 decision. Mr. Gasque said the county could not operate the school for the rest of the year without State funds.

"We just don't know what position we would be in," Mr. Shiner said. "I think it would require many conferences and legal advice just to tell where we stand.

"The children have made adjustments. I believe it would be unwise to move them again."

Other board members indicated agreement.

Drawing Up Budget

Mr. Garque said he is drawing up a 1959-60 budget which will include provisions for "a full complement" of teachers for the high school. More than half the high school's teachers terminated their contracts with the public school system to teach in the private classes. Most of them are expected to return when the high school is reopened.

The board approved a teacher salary increase of $100 in each pay bracket for the next year, bringing the scale to a $3,200 minimum and a $4,300 maximum.

Meanwhile, a State racial investigating committee conducted a hearing yesterday in Front Royal to determine circumstances surrounding the filing of a desegregation suit in Warren County.

State Senator Earl A. Fitzpatrick of Roanoke, who presided over the hearing, said the purpose was to determine whether the suit may have involved "the unauthorized practice of law for any other crimes" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or any of its affiliates, or the "unprofessional conduct by any lawyer associated with the suit."

Mr. Fitzpatrick said the hearing "was well worthwhile" and that the witnesses were "pretty straightforward."

NAACP Attorney S. W. Tucker of Emporia, Va., termed the hearing "hogwash." He and his brother, Otto L. Tucker of Alexandria, represented four of the five Negro witnesses.

Before the meeting, S. W. Tucker said there "is no doubt the NAACP supports litigation to which it is not a party—I don't know why the State has to spend thousands of dollars to find out something everybody already knows."

A Start on Desegregation

The United States Court of Appeals has effectively ended any efforts to postpone the admission of four Negro students to Arlington's Stratford Junior High School next month. At the same time a three-judge Federal court in Norfolk has put a crimp in the benighted plans of the City Council to close other schools there. Whatever the effect in Norfolk, the decision in respect of Arlington is appropriate, for of all the communities in Virginia Arlington probably can adjust to this limited desegregation with the minimum of difficulty. Governor Almond himself, despite his intransigeance, has acknowledged the probability of desegregation in such cases. Because of other court decisions this week, Arlington is legally free to comply with the Court of Appeals order without the threat of state retaliation in closing schools or cutting off funds. We hope that county officials will be guided accordingly and will announce plans to move ahead in good faith.

PEACE REIGNS IN VIRGINIA INTEGRATION—Six students, two white and four Negro, leave Stratford Junior High School in Arlington, Va., after the first day of integrated classes. There was no sign of disorder either here or in Norfolk, where 17 Negroes were admitted to six secondary schools, as the state replaced massive resistance with token integration. The Arlington school was protected by 15 carloads of policemen.

A Few Students Stage Walkouts

Richmond, Va. —After years of "massive resistance" to integration, Virginia finally conceded Monday as 21 Negro students were enrolled in formerly all-white schools in Arlington and Norfolk.

The Negro students entered home for tossing firecrackers the schools quietly at both the out of the window and one Stratford Junior High School in white girl was sent home for Arlington and in the six junior remarking about the principal. and senior high schools in Norfolk. Four Negroes enrolled in Arlington with 17 enrolling in Norfolk.

Violence Absent

Violence was conspicuously absent as police stood by with riot equipment in Arlington and every school in Norfolk had police present.

The four students at Stratford — Ronald Deskins, Michael Jones, Lance Newman and Gloria Thompson, — were escorted to their seventh grade rooms by volunteers.

One white girl, Joann Potts, arrived at the school, learned the Negroes were present, and immdiately walked out.

"I am not going back in there until they get those niggers out," she said.

Blames Communists

Another man, identifying himself as Andrew Kirk, Sr., said that he was keeping his daughter out of the school. He indicated that the Communists were behind the integration movement.

A few students also picked up their books and left the schools in Norfolk when they learned of the Negro students' presence.

Arlington officials reported after classes that a woman made an anonymous telephone call about noon saying that a bomb had been planted in the school timed to go off at 1:30. When a quick search failed to turn up a bomb, the authorities ruled out evacuating the building.

Four Sent Home

Three white boys were sent

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond indicated that he was "most gratified" that the transition was orderly.

Oppostion to integration is still rampant in the Virginia Legislature.

"This," said Delegate Sam E. Pope, "is one of the blackest days Virginia has faces since Reconstruction."

Senator Mills E. Godwin said, "The rape of our Constitutional rights is an accomplished fact."

John T. Brewbaker, superintendent of Norfolk schools, in commenting on the lack of violence and, disturbances, said:

Should Be Proud

"Virginia and the entire nation should be proud of the manner in which our city has shown the fine caliber of its citizens."

To further prevent disturbances, police in both cities will stand by indefinitely and Arlington has put a ban on any events in the school at night, including civic and P-TA activities.

Although there was an absence of overt friendship between the white and Negro students, Lewis Cousins, the student admitted to Maury High in Norfolk, said he "made a few friends, mostly in the halls."

U. S. Judge Orders End Of Pupil Assignments By Race

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — (UPI) — A federal judge ordered the Alexandria school board Wednesday to stop using race as a factor in assigning students. He scheduled a report by Jan. 26 on what action is taken on 14 Negro applications for white schools, but did not order integration.

In Norfolk, Attorney Archie Boswell, representing a group dedicated to keeping public schools open, said he would ask federal court to enjoin City Council from closing Norfolk's entire secondary school system as planned to avoid integration.

U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan issued an injunction against the Alexandria school board on behalf of 14 Negro students, ordering an end to racial discrimination in school assingments. He did not however, pass on the validity of the city's pupil assignment plan, which considers such factors as mental maturity and academic achievement in considering transfer requests.

Bryan said the injunction would become effective Feb. 2, the start of the second school semester, pending "the application of fair, just and valid administrative assignment rules and regulations."

The suit was filed when the 14 Negroes were turned down last August in their bid to enter five white schools in this suburban city, located just across the Potomac river from Washington.

Bryan turned down school board requests that he dismiss the suit and that he convene a special three-judge court to rule on it.

Boswell, who said he probably would file his injunction request this week, stated it would be based on grounds that Norfolk City Council violated the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution when it voted 6-1 Tuesday to close all grades in the city above the sixth if the state's anti-integration laws are overthrown as expected in pending court tests, due for rulings this month.

The six white junior and senior high schools in the city, Virginia's largest, have been closed since last September under Virginia anti-integration law and their 10,000 students attend makeshift classes, go to school in other localities or have dropped out of school.

The city's planned action would also close Norfolk's Negro high school, two Negro junior high schools and seventh and eighth grade classes in 23 white and Negro elementary schools, locking an additional 7,000 students out of their classrooms.

School Board Acts in Week In Alexandria

Special Session To Study Cases Of 14 Negroes

The Alexandria school board, forbidden by court order to make assignments based on race, will hold a special session next week to pass on the applications of 14 Negro students who seek to enter four white schools.

The meeting was called after Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan yesterday told the board it no longer can assign students to schools on the basis of race. His order is effective February 2.

If the school board determines that any of the 14 students qualify for immediate admission under a seven-point criteria plan approved by the board last fall, the Negro students will be eligible to enter the white schools February 2.

Decisions Due Next Week

Under present Virginia law, any white school which admits a Negro student automatically is closed. This already has occurred in Norfolk, Charlottesville and Front Royal. Constitutionality of the State's "massive resistance" laws is being challenged in the State Supreme Court of Appeals. In addition, the closing law is before a Federal court. Decisions in both cases are due next week.

In issuing the anti-discrimination injunction, Judge Bryan gave the board until January 26 to notify the court and the pupils' attorneys, Frank D. Reeves and Otto L. Tucker, as to which of the 14 children qualify.

The board reportedly already has decided on the qualifications of the various applicants, but has not yet taken formal action.

Disposition Prepared

In response to a question from Judge Bryan at an open, pre-trial hearing last week, Commonwealth's Attorney Earl F. Wagner said the board already has a disposition sheet prepared on each of the applicants. He added, however, that final action by the board still is needed.

Mr. Wagner said yesterday the board will meet "sometime next week." The exact date has not been set, he said.

After ordering the injunction, Judge Bryan told the board that in screening the students on an individual basis, it must use "fair, just and valid" criteria. After January 26, he said, he will hold a new hearing if Mr. Reeves and Mr. Tucker are not satisfied with the board's decisions.

If the assignments are disputed, then Judge Bryan would have to pass on them individually, a situation which could advance the possibility of integrated schools until next fall.

Among the assignment criteria the board plans to use are proximity of residence to the nearest school, availability of space at the nearest school, mental capacity, achievement records and social adaptablity.

Before ruling on the injunction request, filed by Mr. Reeves last fall, Judge Bryan denied a school board motion for dismissal of the Negroes' complaint and for setting up a three-judge court to pass on the constitutionality of Virginia's pupil placement law.

Asked if he thought the injunction ruling would mean integration this spring, Mr. Wagner said "No one knows." Attorney General Harrison echoed Mr. Wagner's reply. School Supt. T. C. Williams and school board chairman Robert C. Howard declined comment.

Other officials, however, said any complaint on the part of Judge Bryan or the students' attorneys over the board's criteria findings possibly would delay integration "at least until next fall."

Four Schools Specified

The 14 Alexandria students have requested admission to Francis Hammond and George Washington High Schools and Theodore Ficklin and Patrick Henry Elementary Schools.

CUTOFF OPPOSED BY NORFOLK PTA

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 15 (AP).—The Granby Elementary School PTA has voiced opposition to city council action cutting off funds for all public school classes above the sixth grade.

It came as the first resolution by any Norfolk group opposing the action taken by the council Tuesday.

After the monthly meeting, which was attended by a standing room only crowd estimated at 450, parents of seventh-grade pupils at the closed school organized emergency tutoring classes.

The tutoring classes, to be held at the Episcopal Church of the Ascension, will get under way on February 2, the date set by council for closing classes above the sixth grade.

Alexandria Negroes Seek Court Redress

The parents of 14 Negro students, whose applications to Alexandria white schools were denied Monday by the School Board will contest the rejections in Federal Court, one of their lawyers said yesterday.

Attorney Frank D. Reeves said he would file a "motion for further relief" today with a memorandum of points protested by the applicants. Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ruled on Jan. 14 that the Board could not use racial discrimination in assigning pupils.

The motion will ask Judge Bryan to reverse the Board's action, which the Board said was based on its new pupil placement plan. The 14 were rejected for two to four reasons, including proximity to the school, overcrowding, academic achievement, and mental or emotional stability.

It is expected that Judge Bryan, who will have to rearrange his heavy spring docket to hear the case, will use the same procedure that he did in the Arlington desegregation case.

In that case he reviewed the Arlington School Board's rejection of 30 Negro applicants with its five-criteria assignment plan. His decision said the Arlington School Board could not probihit the entry of four Negros whom it had rejected on the "adaptability" criterion. The Judge ordered the Board to admit them next Monday to Stratford Junior High School.

Alexandria Set To Desegregate

Norfolk and Arlington entered the second week of peaceful school desegregation yesterday, and Alexandria got ready to join them today.

City and school officials in Alexandria predicted a calm beginning of desegregation. Nine Negro pupils will enter three formerly all-white schools.

Five of the pupils have been enrolled in Ramsey Elementary School with 692 white students, and two others will attend Ficklin Elementary School with an enrollment of 327.

These will be the first Negro pupils to be enrolled in white elementary schools in Virginia's public school history.

Two other Negro pupils will enter Hammond High School with an enrollment of 1332.

The Alexandria desegregation movement first began in July, 1955, when a group of Negroes voted to petition the School Board to begin compliance with the Supreme Court's school decisions.

Last August 11, 14 Negro pupils applied to enter white schools, were turned down and took their case to Federal court. Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan ruled last Wednesday that nine of the 14 should be admitted. The School Board failed in attempts to obtain a postponement of the order.

While officials expected no incidents, they took precautionary measures. Police Chief Russell Hawes cancelled all leaves for his 110-man force and guided them through a "refresher course" in maintenance of order.

Police on duty at the schools will wear normal equipment and reserve units will be on call. School grounds will be restricted to faculty and pupils, with parking prohibited on adjacent streets.

Norfolk and Arlington began desegregation a week ago without incident after a special General Assembly session was told by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond that it could not be prevented. The Governor said he would tolerate no disorder.

In Norfolk yesterday, enrollment was 7018 in the six secondary schools in which 17 Negroes were enrolled, compared to 6360 on the first day of desegregation. The schools, with 9950 enrollment, had been closed by State law since September.

In Arlington, four Negroes quietly attended Stratford Junior High School. Attendance was normal, as it had been since desegregation began.

Despite Virginia integration—

Deep South still set against mixing

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The start of racial integration at seven public schools in Virginia apparently didn't cause much of a stir among Southern political leaders who spoke out on the subject.

Reactions were as varied as the feelings among the people of the region, with Deep South states still determined to resist and the governor of one border state pleased that some progress was being made toward school integration.

Generally, there was little to indicate that the end of massive resistance in Virginia, a spiritual leader of the former Confederacy, might have any marked effect on other tsates determined to maintain the South's traditional way of life.

Gov. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina said public schools in that state would remain segregated.

GOV. ORVAL E. FAUBUS of Arkansas said he remained "unalterably opposed to forcible integration from any source."

Heber Ladner, Mississippi secretary of state, said yesterday:

"It is a sad commentary when the states cannot govern their own education progr which was the intent of nding fathers. To me, to e U. S. Supreme Court i pon the sovereign states a concept so foreign to our American way of life is one of the most dangerous developments in this century."

Sam Engelhardt, Alabama state Democratic chairman, said he was certain the Virginia move "doesn't indicate any weakening on our part. And we must face these things realistically—in Alabama there would be bloodshed." He said this would be true in any section of the state "and we're just not going to integrate, period."

HOWEVER, the Rev. Martin Luther King, who led the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott by Negroes, said that peaceful integration of schools in Virginia showed that such a transition could be made without violence.

At Tallahassee, Fla., State School Supt. Thomas D. Bailey credited Virginia's orderly transition to integrated schools at Norfolk and Arlington in part to the impact of several months without schools.

He said the repeal of the compulsory attendance law and the provision for state grants to parents who wanted to withdraw children from integrated schools had served to lesson tensions.

BUT THE GOVERNOR of South Carolina said it was "apparent that those not interested in the education of all citizens of Virginia have used a technicality to force integration."

Warren Rejects Delay

Arlington to Integrate; Almond's Plans Enacted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice Earl Warren refused Saturday to delay the scheduled admission Monday of four Negro pupils to a white junior high school in Arlington, Va.

School officials said they expect no disturbances when the school is integrated. It has more than 1,000 pupils.

The school board of Arlington, just across the Potomac River from Washington, had asked Warren for a delay in admitting the Negroes to Stratford Junior High.

The board contended it was not in the best interest of students and teachers to permit transfers into the school in the middle of the school year.

Warren acted swiftly. His ruling that the board had not shown a need for extraordinary action came less than three hours after taking the request under consideration.

The order from the chief justice backed lower court rulings.

Arlington School Supt. Ray E. Reid told newsmen, "I think there will be a smooth transition." He said all pupils—Negro and white—will be required to enter the school building Monday without congregating outside.

Police will block off an area half a mile wide around the school grounds, officials said. Only teachers, pupils and school employes will be permitted to pass the police lines.

The four Negro children have met some of their future classmates at informal social gatherings during the past several days. The latest of these gatherings was a small party last night.

School officials said the four Negroes got about average grades in achievement tests.

The four Negro pupils scheduled to enter the seventh grade are Ronald Deskins and Michael Jones, both 12, and Lance Newman and Gloria Thompson, both 13.

Arlington is one of two Virginia areas—the other is Norfolk—under orders to enroll Negro pupils next week, breaching the state's "massive resistance" policy.

Meanwhile, at Richmond, the Virginia General Assembly Saturday accepted the inevitability o some racial school integration Monday and enacted Gov. J. Lind say Almond Jr.'s program to les sen its impact.

A last-ditch fight by a strong Senate group to close the state's pocketbook to areas where schools integrate collapsed in the Senate Finance Committee. Almond's supporters beat the effort to go beyond his recommendations by a 12-7 committee vote.

Wins Approval.

The full Senate then approved the governor's key requests which already had passed the House—a three-million-dollar fund for $250 tuition grants for children who won't attend integrated schools, and repeal of the compulsory school attendance law.

Both houses planned to return Monday to be on hand when the first public school racial integration in Virginia's history takes place in Norfolk and Arlington County. They also have several legislative matters left on the calendars.

Gov. Almond signed the three key bills of his program at 4:30 p. m. and commented: "I am very deeply grateful with the response of the General Assembly to my recommendations."

The governor said he wanted to assure the parents of children in Arlington and Norfolk that tuition grants for private schooling will be made available to them promptly. He said any delay would be brief.

ARLINGTON'S STRATFORD JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL NEARS INTEGRATION

Arlington School Gives Impression Of Alcatraz

By ARTHUR EDSON

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — On this day at least, the White House became the second best guarded spot in the Washington area.

The most heavily guarded was Stratford Junior High School, scene of Virginia's first public school integration. Norfolk also integrated, but its classes started a little later.

Any stranger who wandered here on this cold, beautiful day would have thought he had stumbled on Alcatraz, Southern style.

Police were everywhere. All looked ready for trouble. A few wore sidearms. Most carried billy clubs, some of which looked brand new, as if bought just for this occasion.

Officers were stationed so that they blocked each approach to the school; others roamed by squad car and motorcycle.

And yet, the complete picture managed to be festive as well as ominous.

To understand why, let's thaw out a few frigid notes jotted down on this historic occasion:

Arrived literally at crack of dawn. Found police there far ahead of me. Large black dog, tail waving excitedly, came over and sniffed hospitably.

Decided to leave this, the eastern entrance, and mosey around to main entrance on the north. Police barred short cuts, so had to take the long way around.

Lots of comment about how Arlington, across the Potomac from Washington, isn't a true Southern community, how many of the county's residents are from the North and West, how many work for the government and hence are accustomed to integration in one form or another.

Got to thinking maybe Stratford isn't typical of Arlington. Homes around school tend to be large and well-groomed.

Reached front entrance. More police, more newsmen and photographers. Those who lived in neighboring houses seemed to enter into spirit of the thing. "May I use your phone, mam'am?" "Yes, but I've got two requests in ahead of yours."

Police barricade is set up so that school is the length of a football field away. Couldn't find anyone who knew which entrance the four Negro youngsters would use.

At 7:55 the first white pupil arrived. Prim little thing. Looked like teacher's pet, the kind that dusts a mean eraser. Marched by without a look to right or left. Dogs everywhere. Counted five scampering gaily about. Neighborhood women now out with their cameras, busily taking pictures.

Integration In Arlington Discussed

Admission of four Negro students to Arlington's Stratford Junior High School will "constitute something of a significant advance in social adjustment" but shouldn't be confused with desegregation of Washington schools, District Superintendent of Schools Carl F. Hansen said yesterday.

Hansen said that in terms of scope and total involvement of the community, the admission of four Negroes to Stratford is much less than Washington integration. In the context of what has been happening in Virginia, however, it is more significant, he added.

Hansen declined to evaluate the new Virginia school program. He did say that Virginia Gov. J. Lindsay Almond appears to have modified his program to permit some integration, which, Hansen said, was "only realism."

Hansen, interviewed on the WTOP-TV program City Side, said that District high school students have to score higher in National Merit Scholarship tests than students in many states.

Because the District is allotted relatively few scholar- qualifying is higher than other states. The District had 25 students in the scholarship semi-finals last year, but if it had Arkansas' cut-off score, it would have had 117, Hansen explained.

Pupil Transfer Barred If Arlington Integrates

The Arlington School Board has ruled there will be no automatic shifting of white students to avoid integrated classes if four Negro students are admitted to Stratford Junior High School on February 2.

The board also announced hat any student who creates a disturbance at the school will be suspended automatically.

The statement, made last night after a conference with the county board, outlined procedures to be followed to operate Stratford with "a minimum of disturbance" if the school opens on a desegregated basis.

The school board meeting before about 500 residents at Washington-Lee High School said that admission of the four Negro students:

". . . Will not automatically constitute a valid reason for transfer of students to another junior high school or for transfer of students from one section to another within Stratford."

Resolution Adopted

In addition to the point dealing with suspension of disorderly students, the board said that persons permitted on school property would be limited to students, school personnel and parents with legitimate school business.

An appeal of Alexandria Federal Court Judge Albert V. Bryan's ruling that four Negroes be admitted to Stratford was argued Wednesday before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. A decision has not yet been handed down.

Last night, the board formally adopted a resolution approved at a Monday night conference that it stands ready to operate Stratford on a desegregated basis if Judge Bryan's order is not postponed or overruled.

The only member to vote against the resolution was James G. Stockard, who said:

"The resolution before us makes the board look like a small band of guerrilla warriors who, stripped of all weapons except their pea-shooters, still fight on."

Regret Expressed

Mr. Stockard objected to the would be tolerated. They repeated statements made earlier that efforts will be made to keep public schools open and operating in Arlington.

ARLINGTON MAKES INTEGRATION GAIN

12 More Negro Pupils Are Enrolled Without Trouble

Other States Quiet

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1— Racial integration was increased today in near-by Arlington County, Virginia, without incident.

Seven new Negro students joined the four who were enrolled last February under heavy police guard in Stratford Junior High School. Today only enough extra police officers to control the increased traffic on the opening day of school were called out.

Washington-Lee High School admitted four Negroes, the first group to be enrolled there. Two entered the tenth grade, one the eleventh and one the twelfth.

A Negro boy, Robert A. Eldridge 3d, the son of a detective on the Washington Police robbery squad, succeeded in his third annual attempt to enter Patrick Henry Elementary School, which is within walking distance of his home. He entered the sixth grade, after having scored near the eighth-grade level in tests given last spring.

Last year he was sent to an integrated private school by members of the Arlington Unitarian Church, to which his parents belong. This church has been active in pressing for Negro civil rights.

Admission of these Negroes to Arlington Schools was made possible by changes in the Virginia school laws, permitting localities to adopt their own attendance laws instead of making compulsory the "massive resistance laws" operating from Richmond, the state capital.

Estimated enrollments at the three integrated schools were Washington-Lee, 2,460; Stratford, 1,050, and Patrick Henry, 600.

The Arlington school board, in an order last week, barred the parents or junior and senior high school pupils from the grounds of Washington-Lee and Stratford schools. The board warned that any pupil creating a disturbance would be suspended.

The board also adopted a new attendance law permitting students to stay out of desegregated schools. The compulsory school law for ages 7 to 16 still holds, but puipils may seek enrollment in segregated schools or turn to private schools if they choose.

Schools in Fairfax County, Virginia, opened today with no integragtion. The State Placement board has turned down twenty-six Negro applications, and a court injunction to set this ruling aside is being sought.

Negro Mothers Protest

TAMPA, Fla., Sept. 1 (AP)— Picketing by Negro mothers in protest against the erection of portable classrooms for their children kept pupils away from a school at Port Tampa today.

Grant Brinson, the principal, said seventy-seven children had been expected for the start of classes at the Port Tampa Elementary School for Negroes. Four teachers crossed picket lines but none of the pupils entered the buildings.

The county school board created the school last week by moving four classrooms to the site. In previous years Port Tampa Negro children were transported to schools in Tampa.

One Negro in White School

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 1 — Charlotte public schools opened today with only one Negro student in previously all-white schools. Delores Fanne Waterman entered Garringer High School with 1,500 white students.

This is the third year of token integration. Three years ago three students attended previously all-white schools, last year four attended white schools and this year Miss Waterman is the lone Negro student in a white school. The city school board denied the appeals of eight other Negro students seeking admission to white schools today.

There were no incidents as Miss Waterman entered Garringer today.

No Trouble at Carolina School

GOLDSBORO, N. C., Sept. 1 A dozen Negro students began classes at Meadow Lane Elementary School here today in the first racial integration in Wayne County's school system.

There were no incidents.

The school, near Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, has approximately 985 pupils in grades one through eight. Many of the pupils and all of the twelve Negro students are children of airmen on duty at the field.

Warren Kills Hope For Mixing Delay

Virginia To Integrate For First Time Monday

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Chief Justice Earl Warren tersely rejected Saturday a request by the Arlington, Va., school board to postpone school integration which has been ordered to begin Monday.

His brief order denying the stay means that four Negro youngsters will enter Stratford Junior High when the school, previously all - white opens Monday morning.

The school board had made a last - ditch appeal to the Supreme Court to delay the move which will mark the initial racial integration in Virginia schools. Warren, after overnight study of the petition denied the postponement request.

His rejection was contained in a two sentence announcement handed out by the court clerk.

"Upon consideration of the memorandum in support of the application and of the opposition thereto, I conclude that the test of extraordinary showing required in these circumstances by Magnum Import Company versus Coty, 262 U. S. 159, 164, has not been met.

"The motion for recall and stay of mandate of the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit is denied."

Stripped of legalese, this meant that Virginia's long, stubborn fight against school integration had been dealt a major, and perhaps mortal, blow.

Norfolk, Va., schools, which have been closed by action of Gov. J. Lindsay Almond since September, also are under federal court orders to admit 17 Negro students on Monday.

Charlottesville schools had been under orders to integrate Monday but were granted a 20-day stay.

The integration moves in Virginia came swiftly after the State Supreme Court earlier this month threw out a series of "massive resistance" laws written by the State Legislature.

School boards in both places have pledged to open the schols, integrated if necessary, if given an opportunity.

The four Arlington Negro students, along with twenty-six others, were turned down last summer by the county school board on the basis of a locally administered assignment plan. Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan of Alexandria, Va., ordered four of the students admitted, however.

Lower Court Upheld

"We are in accord with this finding, for it is clear that the transfers were denied on the basis of race," the Circuit Court said.

Norfolk's locally adopted plan of "massive resistance" was killed in the same order which destroyed Virginia's school-closing law.

The three-judge Constitutional court, the same one that knocked the heart out of the state's "massive resistance" laws, prohibited Norfolk authorities from carrying out their plan to shut down Norfolk's entire secondary school system. the move would have left more than 17,000 children without public schooling.

The court enjoined Norfolk from "engaging in any evasive schemes or devices looking to the cut-off funds for schools or grades affected by the mixing of races or the closing or elimination of specific grades in such schools."

The order also permanently enjoined Gov. J. Lindsay Almond jr. and other state and local officials from ever again closing a school to avoid integration.

The injuctive order against Norfolk was tacked on to what was expected to be merely a formal declaration of Monday's ruling.

The Circuit Court of Appeals deferred ruling on Judge Bryan's refusal to order Arlington to admit twenty-six other Negroes to white schools. The court, in its brief opinion, said it had not had an opportunity in the two days since the case was argued to review the grounds on which the Arlington school board rejected the students.

The Arlingon county board and school board met in joint session last night and pledged to 500 Stratford school parents that the school would be kept open, regardless of the Circuit Court's opinion, and would admit the Negroes if ordered to do so.

A four-point resolution also ruled out the possible transfer requests from white Stratford students, declaring that disapproval of integration was no grounds for transfers.

Arlington School Superintendent Ray Reid was given instructions to do what he deemed necessary to maintain the operation of Stratford. The two boards voted to suspend automatically any student creating a disturbance at the school and, in effect, bar newsmen and others not on school business from Stratford.

Gov. Almond spent the day conferring with legislative leaders to complete plans for a special commission to draft new anti-integration measures. A special session of the General Assembly will follow.

Integration Is Ordered In Virginia

U. S. Courts Bar Further Delays

By United Press International

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 23.—Two high Federal courts late today struck down legal maneuvers of Arlington County and Norfolk to postpone public-school integration.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld an order directing Arlington County, the big suburban area just outside Washington, to admit four Negro students to a white junior high school Feb 2.

A few minutes later, a special three-judge Federal Constitutional panel sitting in the same courtroom killed the Norfolk City Council's plan to close its entire secondary school system to avoid integration.

Blow to Segregationists

The double-barreled decisions apparently doomed the last hopes of the two Virginia localities to circumvent integration.

ARLINGTON SEEKS INTEGRATION STAY

Asks Warren to Bar Negroes From Classes Monday— Delay Held Unlikely

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30 — Attorneys for the Arlington County, Va., school board asked Chief Justice Earl Warren today to stay a lower court requiring admission of four Negro children to a white junior high school of Monday.

The Chief Justice gave lawyers for the Negroes until 11 A.M. tomorrow to file a response to the school board's papers. There will be no oral argument.

In all likelihood Chief Justice Warren will rule on the stay some time tomorrow. The expectation of both sides is that he will deny it and that the first step toward integration in Arlington will proceed as scheduled Monday.

Authorities in Arlington, which is a suburb across the Potomac River from Washington, went ahead today with their plans for Monday. They have taken great precautions to avoid any incidents at the affected school, Stratford Junior High.

No one but teachers, pupils and school employes will be allowed into or near Stratford on Monday. Reporters and photographers, among others, will be barred.

The Arlington School Superintendent, Ray E. Reid, said today that he expected no violence. He said the 1,070 white pupils at Stratford had been told what was going to happen.

It was disclosed today that a segregationist organization the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties has mailed a mimeographed sheet to each of the present Stratford students. It urges them to boycott the school.

"You * * * and your parents have been placed on a great battlefield," the sheet says, "perhaps the greatest one our nation has ever faced. * * *

"Your fathers and older brothers have fought in battles and shed blood in defense of the American Government as it is set forth in the Constitution. Would you not be willing to sacrifice a few weeks of your education * * *?

"Please discuss these truths with your parents and ask them to let you do your part to preserve your Constitution, your race and your white culture by taking your books home and continuing your studies there until the emergency has passed."

Mr. Reid said he knew of no students planning to boycott the school. And he said not a single parent had asked to have a child transferred because of the prospective admission of the four Negro seventh-graders.

Norfolk Police Stand By

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 30 (AP) —Public Safety Director Calvin H. Dalby said today "it is not our purpose at the present time to show police force" at the six schools that will open Monday on an integrated basis.

Mr. Dalby declined to amplify his statement, which was made in reply to a reporter's question as to whether police would be stationed at the six schools.

Mr. Dalby and Police Chief Harold Anderson have said that they did not expect violence when the schools opened but that the Police Department was ready to deal with any emergency.

Board Drops School Dances In Arlington

Non-Integrated Gatherings Okayed For Private Groups

By PAUL HOPE
Star Staff Writer

The Arlington School Board last night dropped school sponsorship of dances because of integration.

However, the board ruled that school buildings will be rented to "responsible citizen groups" for student dances, but that these dances must be segregated.

This was the official action taken after a public hearing at Washington-Lee High School, but Board Chairman L. Lee Bean said later that other student activities would be handled as follows:

1. There will be no interracial sports competition between schools. The practical effect of this is to bar Negroes at integrated schools from becoming members of athletic teams which have contests with others schools. Mr. Bean said this merely follows State policy set forth by the State Legislature in a 1956 joint resolution opposing interracial sports.

2. Negroes at integrated schools will be allowed to attend sports events at their schools and sit with white students.

3. Other extra-curricular activities—such as social events for school clubs, field trips and intramural sports not connected with physical education classes—will be left up to the discretion of school administrators.

"Little Change" Seen

Mr. Bean said the policy probably will mean "little change" from previous practice except that dances will be sponsored by the parents instead of the schools. The Arlington board's action is similar to a plan adopted in Norfolk which also has integrated schools.

The dance ban applies to all schools in the county. There are three integrated schools—Washington-Lee High, Stratford Junior High and Patrick Henry Elementary.

The board's action followed a public hearing called to discuss whether extra-curricular activities should be curtailed. It was obvious, however, that the board's policy had been largely determined beforehand.

Private Talks Held

Chairman Bean told about 200 persons in attendance that the board has had several private discussions with legislators, principals and PTA and student representatives.

Only eight persons spoke last night, five of them favoring continuation of all extra-curricular activities and three asking for curtailment.

The policy was approved by a 4 to 1 vote, with James G. Stockard holding out for a continuance of all activities.

At another meeting for County Board candidates last night, the school policy was called a "shrewd and astute compromise" by David L. Krupsaw, chairman of Arlington County's governing body. Board member Ralph Kaul said he regretted that the school board "felt it was necessary to discontinue school dances." Republican candidate Alvin Snell said the school board studied the issue thoroughly and he trusted it to make the right decision.

Recommendation Declined

Superintendent Ray E. Reid declined to make a recommendation at the public meeting. He said he had given some views at informal meetings of the board. He gave board members a memorandum last night which pointed out that the Governor's Commission on Education (Perrow Commission) recently said it was "appalled over the extent to which extra-curricular and social activities have grown and developed throughout our public school system."

The motion that the school board discontinue sponsorship of dances was made by Barnard Joy who prefaced it with a statement that the "overwhelming sentiment in the State is opposed to integrated dances."

Mr. Joy said that social activities are important in the development of children but he felt there would be no curtailment because the parents would take over the responsibility for dances. Parents may rent the school facilities for $6 a night.

Reaction a Major Factor

It was clear that reaction in other parts of the State was a major factor in the decision.

Mr. Joy said that "while we are acting on our own free will, I will admit that I am concerned with the reaction in the State."

During the hearing, there were several references to the State Legislature and the possibility of retaliation against Arlington if it acts contrary to sentiment in the rest of the State.

Robert Reynolds, chairman of the Citizens Committee for School Improvement, said his group is "deeply sympathetic" to desires to continue all extra-curricular activities, but that Arlington is "part of Virginia and we have to give consideration to the feelings expressed by those who exercise the sovereign power of the State."

PTA Reaction

The Washington-Lee PTA, represented by President Carl G. Estabrook, 6037 North Twentieth street, favored retention of all activities. The resolution said that most parents and pupils want them continued and that "severe curtailment would create strong and school-wide antagonism" which might "jeopardize the present smooth course of desegregation."

Mr. Stockard said the plan adopted "calls upon white students and their parents to indulge in a game of subterfuge to keep out a small minority of Negro students who have been admitted to the heretofore white schools by the due process of law." He also said it will lead to administrative troubles.

Pastor Hits Ban

Mrs. Helen Lane, a board member, said her approval of the plan was not based on integration or segregation, but on the fact that she thinks there are too many extracurricular activities. She said more responsibility for the social activities of children should be "put back in the hands of parents."

The Arlington County Council on Human Relations, represented by the Rev. Sidney Lovett, pastor of Rock Spring Congregational Church, said there should be no restriction because it "would appear to place a penalty on the student body for obedience to the law" and might "create resentment and friction among students."

Jack Rathbone, head of the Arlington Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties, presented a written statement to the board opposing social activities, bodily contact sports and joint use of cafeteria facilities by white and Negroes.

Issue of Democracy Stirs Wrangle On Private Dance for White Pupils

Student discussion of a plan to hold privately sponsored dances for white students at an Arlington high school turned into a heated wrangle yesterday when one youngster questioned if it would be democratic.

The proposal was outlined at a junior class assembly at Wakefield Junior-Senior High School by James Rowsey, 16, of 201 North Edison street, Arlington, president of the class.

It was the first plan outlined since the school board banned all school-sponsored dances because of integration. Wakefield has no Negro students, but the board's policy applies to all county schools.

The wrangle started when Robert Hoy, 17, of 3419 South Stafford street, Arlington, told his classmates they were taught democracy in school and should practice it.

He said later that he received boos when he started and handshakes when he finished.

"I was sitting there listening to them," he said, "and it appeared to me as it was unconstitutional . . . I don't see why certain people should be excluded from school, anyway.

"They opened the meeting with the pledge of allegiance to the flag and it appeared kind of two-faced."

The youngster, who said it was the first time in his life he had spoken up at any meeting, added, "at the end, I think they were with me . . . some of them told me they had never looked at it that way."

Young Rowsey had suggested the organization sponsoring the dances be called the Club 61 since the juniors will graduate in 1961.

The club, already set up, is headed by the parents of the class officers. Under the proposed plan the parents would rent the school facilities and run the dances on a membership system. The club rules note that all dances will conform to Virginia segregation laws.

Young Rowsey said the plan "caused quite an uproar at the school," but added that he believes the majority of students favor it.

Club 61 plans a dance October 17 at the school. Young Rowsey said the organization would start taking membership applications today.

ARLINGTON BOARD WILL ACCEPT FOUR STUDENTS

ARLINGTON, Va. (UPI) — The Arlington, Va., school board said Monday night it will accept four Negro students in an all-white junior high school, if a federal court order requiring their admission is not postponed before Feb. 2.

The school board, in a closed session, acted quickly after federal and state courts struck down the state's "massive resistance" laws barring operation of integrated schools.

Arlington, just across the Potomac River from Washington, D. C. was ordered last year by U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan to admit the four students at the opening of the second term Feb. 2. Until the decision on the anti-integration laws came, it appeared Arlington's schools would be closed unless Bryan's order was upset.

STAY OF ORDER ASKED

The school board, voting 3 - 1, with one member absent, still requested a stay of Bryan's order until it can be ruled upon by higher federal courts. The board told its attorneys to seek a postponement of Bryan order from the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, which will hear arguments on the case Thursday.

The board asked for a stay until the matter can be taken to the U. S. Supreme Court.

However, the board said if Bryan's order is affirmed and Arlington is required to enroll the four Negro children, "the superintendent of Arlington County schools is directed to take steps to maintain order and continue effective operation of the school."

Court Backs 4 Negroes' Admission

Norfolk Schools Enjoined From 'Evasive' Action

By Jean White
Staff Reporter

Two Federal court decisions yesterday further hemmed in the State of Virginia in its last-ditch fight to stave off school desegregation.

Within minutes, these decisions were handed down in Richmond:

- The Fouth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan's order that four Negroes be admitted to Stratford Junior High School in Arlington on Feb. 2.
- A special three-judge Federal panel permanently enjoined Norfolk from using any "evasive schemes or devices" by cutting off funds or eliminating grades in schools affected by desegregation. This knocks out the Norfolk City Council's plan to close its entire secondary school system to avoid integration.

The two court decisions yesterday came four days after both the State Supreme Court of Appeals and a three-judge Federal panel overturned Virginia's "massive resistance" laws.

Fund Plan Knocked Out

The state and Federal courts ruled out an anti-integration package of laws to close desegregated schools, cut off their state funds, and pay tuition grants for private schooling of the withheld funds.

In Norfolk, the "massive resistance" laws have closed six schools and locked out 10,000 students from their class rooms. Another 3000 have been school-less in Charlottesville and Warren Country.

Yesterday's injunctive order against Norfolk—with its implications for other localities in the state—was tacked on to what was expected to be merely a formal declaration of the special three-judge panel's earlier ruling of Monday.

The decision prohibits the Norfolk City Council from carrying through its plan ta cut off operating funds to all the city's secondary schools Feb. 1. Councilmen voted the cut-off on the assumption that the courst would knock the heart out of the State's "massive resistance" defense. It would have left 17,000 youngsters without public schooling.

Close All or None

Yesterday the three-judge panel enjoined Norfolk from "engaging in any evasive schemes or devices looking to the cut-off of funds of schools or grades affected by the mixing of races or the closing or elimination of specific grades in such schools" as long as the city operates a public school system.

The four-page injunctive decree also permanently enjoined Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and other State and local officials from ever closing a school to avoid desegregation. This followed up the court's decision Monday that Virginia's school-closing law is unconstitutional.

Almond is scheduled to meet with key members of the General Assembly at 11 a. m. today at the State Capitol in an attempt to find another tack to thwart desegregation. In a fiery and bitter speech Tuesday, he vowed an unyielding stand in the face of the Federal and State court decisions.

Presumably, the conference will take up the timing of a special session of the General Assembly. Pressure has been growing in Southside Virginia to get in a quick session of the Assembly to work up means of blocking any immediate integration.

Almond is readying a list of legislators for a commission to work out a long-range program. These commisison members presumably could work on their program for submission to a later special session.

State Threat Lifted

Stripped of its school-closing law, the State now has no laws to stop communities like Arlington from desegregating their schools if so ordered by Federal courts.

Up until the State and Federal court decisions Monday, Arlington faced school closing under Judge Bryan's order to admit four Negroes to Stratford Feb. 2. The Arlington Schoo Board, reluctantly following Virginia's "massive resistance" plan to the end, appealed Judge Bryan's order to the appellate court.

Yesterday the Fourth Circuit Court upheld the lower court ruling. Arlington School Board members voted 4-1 Thursday to ask for a stay and appeal to the Supreme Court in the event Judge Bryan's order was systained by the Appeals Court.

The case before the Circuit Court involved a cross appeal. At the same time the School Board appealed that section of Bryan's order directing the admission of the four Negroes, the National Association for the Advancement of C'olored People appealed another section rejecting the applications of 26 othe Negroes.

The appeals court deferred ruling on Judge Bryan's refusal to admit the 26 to white schools. These applications, the court said, "require further examination of the relevant circumstances before final conclusions ca nbe reached."

Court Holds Negroes Must Be Admitted

Virginia School Ruling Is To Be Appealed

By HOMER BIGART
© New York Times News Service

Richmond, Va., Jan. 23. — A Federal Court ruled Friday that four Negro children must be admitted to Stratford Junior High School in Arlington, Va., on February 2, the start of the next school semester.

The Arlington School Board has announced it will appeal to the United States Supreme Court for a stay. If the stay is refused, the School Board has decided to obey the Federal Court. Thus, the Arlington school would become the first integrated public school in Virginia.

Lyndon Johnson's civil-rights proposals cause fear among Northern Democrats that he may emerge as a presidential nominee, staffer Robert L. Riggs writes in Sunday's Passing Show.

Governor J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., who last Tuesday said he would continue to fight for the preservation of total segregation in the public schools, seemed resigned Friday to the existence of token integration.

Even before the court acted, Almond indicated his belief in the futility of any attempts by the Virginia General Assembly to prepare new, effective anti-integration laws before the next school term.

The Governor had been under strong pressure by leaders of the General Assembly to summon a special session for the enactment of stop-gap legislation that would fill the void left by the collapse of Virginia's "massive-resistance" laws. Those laws, designed to prevent even token integration, were ruled unconstitutional last Monday by State and U. S. courts.

But the Governor told newsmen that he wanted the new legal defenses to be "effective and not futile." He said they could not be prepared on "an overly hasty basis."

Interposition Not Planned

It is known that the Governor has no intention of interposing State police or National Guard forces against federal authority to prevent court-ordered integration as was attempted by Governor Orval E. Faubus of Arkansas.

He could use his inherent powers and order the school closed in the event of violence or threats of violence. But no such trouble is expected in Arlington.

Arlington Is Receptive

A suburb of Washington, Arlington is more receptive to integration than the rest of the state.

L. Lee Bean, one of the five members of the Arlington School Board said:

"We have takenu proper safeguards against trouble. Arlington County Government has worked out arrangements for complete and thorough police protection. No unauthorized persons will be allowed on the school grounds and that includes reporters and TV cameramen."

Bean said the appeal for a stay would be based on the argument that the board had properly administered a pupil-placement plan in which all of 30 Negro applicants for transfer to Stratford Junior High School were rejected on assertedly nonracial grounds.

Ordered Four Admitted

Last September Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan said that four of the 30 Negro children measured up to the placement criteria of the board and must be admitted. He did not disturb the 26 rejections.

Friday a three-judge Federal Court upheld Bryan's decisions, rejecting both the School Board's appeal against the admission of the four Negro children an da counterappeal by the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People against the rejection of the 26.

The court also issued a formal injunction against the closing by Governor Almond or Norfolk City officials of any individual school in Norfolk to avoid racial integration.

Arlington Set For Integration

But Board Asks Court Order Delay

The Arlington School Board today served notice it was ready to operate Stratford Junior High School on a desegregated basis next month, but at the same time asked postponement of a Federal Court order to admit four Negro students.

Collapse of Virginia's massive resistance laws yesterday prompted a statement from the school board on what can be expected to occur at Stratford when the integration order takes effect February 2.

Board members instructed their attorney to request the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to grant a postponement of Alexandria Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan's order to admit four Negro students to the all-white school at the beginning of the next term.

No Stay Granted

"If the District Court decision is affirmed and no stay is granted by the appellate court," a board statement said, "then the superintendent of Arlington County public schools is directed to take such reasonable and lawful steps as he deems necessary to maintain order and continued effective operation of the schools.

The board cited two decisions yesterday as the reasons for its statement — a Federal Court ruling in Norfolk that Virginia's school-closing law is unconstitutional, and a ruling by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals that the State's massive resistance laws violate Virginia's own constitution.

Board members affirmed, however, that "no student will be required to attend a school in which the majority of the students in that school is of another race."

Arlington Attorney Edmund D. Campbell predicted earlier last night that Stratford will be desegregated next month—and that it will remain open.

Mr. Campbell, chief counsel for the plaintiffs in the Norfolk case which resulted in yesterday's Federal Court ruling there, said he is confident that that ruling is broad enough to be applicable to Arlington's case.

Two legislators from Alexandria, faced with a February 2 desegregation deadline also had little comment.

State Senator Armistead L. Boothe, one of the few early supporters of local option, simply described the decisions in Norfolk and Richmond as "momentous." Delegate James M. Thomson, a supporter of massive resistance, declined any comment saying he wants to read and study the decisions.

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington said that a study commission which the Governor said he will appoint will require a couple of weeks to come back with recommendations for new legislation. Therefore, Senator Fenwick said, he does not expect the General Assembly will meet before March.

The president of Stratford's Parent-Teacher Association, J. Bernard Bradshaw, said that yesterday's court rulings apparently means that the school board "has been restored to a position of full responsibility in the operation of Arlington County schools."

Without Incident

He added: "If the end result is the admission of four colored children on February 2, we trust that this will be accomplished with dignity and without incident, as the attention of the Nation will be focused on Stratford and Arlington."

Arlington County Board Chairman David L. Krupsaw said:

"My fervent and prayerful hope is that now we can concentrate on our most important responsibility—the education of our children."

Mrs. Kathryn Stone, Arlington County delegate, said the rulings should clear the way for a local option system of school desegregation.

Referring to the State ruling on the school closing law, Fairfax County Delegate Omer L. Hirst said:

"The way is no wopen for men of good will to frame a school policy that will continue the public free school system throughout the State, that will meet our constitutional obligations under the Fourteenth Amendment, as presently interpreted, and that by emphasizing the essential and inestimable value of education, will enlist the support of the great majority of the people of Virginia."

No Action Yet

C. D. Gasque, superintendent of Warren County Schools where the white high school is closed, said the school board there is not planning to take any immediate action.

He said the board discussed at its last meeting the possibility of the courts ruling against the massive resistence laws, and decided to take no action until its attorney has had a chance to study the situation thoroughly and to make a report to the board.

Mr. Gasque observed, however, that if the courts ordered the reopening of the school in Front Royal, then "it will have to be done."

In Roanoke, State Senator Ted Dalton, said Virginia should move hastily to adopt a local pupil placement program similar to that in North Carolina and Alabama.

Senator Dalton, Virginia's G. O. P. leader, advocated such a plan during his unsuccessful bid for the Governorship against Gov. Almond, who ran on the mass resistance platform.

ALCATRAZ, SOUTHERN STYLE

Virginia School Integrates Under Heavy Police Guard

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — On this day at least, the White House became the second best guarded spot in the Washington area.

The most heavily guarded was Stratford Junior High School, scene of Virginia's first public school integration. Norfolk also integrated, but its classes started a little later.

Any stranger who wandered here on this cold, beautiful day would have thought he had stumbled on Alcatraz, Southern style.

Police were everywhere. All looked ready for trouble. A few wore sidearms. Most carried billy clubs, some of which looked brand new, as if bought just for this occasion.

RIGID NOTES

Officers were stationed so that they blocked each approach to the school; others roamed by squad car and motorcycle.

And yet, the complete picture managed to be festive as well as ominous.

To understand why, let's thaw out a few frigid notes jotted down on this historic occasion:

Arrived literally at crack of dawn. Found police there far ahead of me. Large black dog, tail waving excitedly, came over and sniffed hospitably.

Decided to leave this, the eastern entrance, and mosey around to main entrance on the north. Police barred short cuts, so had to take the long way around.

TRUE COMMUNITY

Lots of comment about how Arlington, across the Potomac from Washington, isn't a true Southern community, how many of the county's residents are from the North and West, how many work for the government and hence are accustomed to integration in one form or another.

Got to thinking maybe Stratford isn't typical of Arlington. Homes around school tend to be large and well-groomed.

Reached front entrance. More police, more newsmen and photographers. Those who lived in neighboring houses seemed to enter into spirit of the thing. "May I use youse phone, ma'am?" "Yes, but i've got two requests in ahead of yours."

Police barricade is set up so that school is the length of a football field away. Couldn't find anyone who knew which entrance the four Negro youngsters would use.

At 7:55 the first white pupil arrived. Prim litte thing. Looked like teacher's pet, the kind that dusts a mean eraser. Marched by without a look to right or left. Dogs everywhere. Counted five scampering gaily about. Neighborhood women now out with their cameras, busily taking pictures.

More pupils coming now, and buses start rolling in. Kids act as if they're amused at the activity.

Charlottesville Integration Program Approved By NAACP

NEW YORK — The agreement reached for desegregating the public schools of Charlottesville, Va., "suggests a path to peace and mutual respect which both white and colored Virginians can pursue with benefits to the commonwealth," NAACP Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins said here today in a letter to Dr. Philip Wyatt, president of the Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches.

Congratulating the Virginia NAACP and its counsel, Oliver W. Hill, on the manner in which agreement was reached on the school desegregation plan submitted by officials of Charlottesville, Mr. Wilkins recalled that ever since the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, the NAACP has advocated that the proper officials in the affected areas and Negro citizens agree mutually on a plan of desegregation suitable to the communities involved and the problems existing therein."

Under the Charlottesville plan, not only the 12 Negro students already approved for admission to previously all-white schools under a federal district court order but also other Negro students will be permitted to enroll in desegregated schools in September. The plan was approved by Federal District Judge John Paul on March 30 in conference with Mr. Hill and John S. Battle, Jr., attorney for the City of Charlottesville.

The NAACP view, Mr. Wilkins asserted, "has been (and remains) that law suits should be the last resort and should be employed only when localities and states present such resistance and defiance as to leave citizens who seek their constitutional rights no alternative."

All that Negro citizens seek for their children, Mr. Wilkins said, is "that equality in educational opportunity" afforded by "a public school system that is not organized or administered on the basis of race. They seek this objective peaceably but firmly. They realize fully that a great social transition is in being and that this change requires not only patience, but honesty and fairness as well."

U. S. JUDGE BACKS INTEGRATION PLAN

Clears Way for Negroes to Enter Two Charlottesville Schools in September

HARRISONBURG, Va., March 30 (UPI)—Federal District Judge John Paul approved today a school desegregation plan submitted by Charlottesville. The city is under court orders to admit twelve Negroes to its white schools next September.

The judge, Oliver W. Hill of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and John S. Battle, Jr., Charlottesville city attorney, agreed on the plan at a conference. It clears the way for the Negroes to enter a high school and elementary school next fall.

The plan would permit other Negroes to enroll in white schools, making Charlottesville the first city in Virginia to agree voluntarily to desegregate classrooms.

Mr. Hill raised no major objection to the plan, which was submitted last month by the city after it had won a delay on integration from Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the Federal Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

He said the N. A. A. C. P. "would not noramlly advocate" certain features of the plan, but he felt the city and school officials should be given "an opportunity to demonstrate their good faith."

Expects Cooperation

"We believe that if the plan is carried out in an objective fashion, there will be sufficient cooperation from the Negro community to bring about in orderly fashion this social change without undue emotional impact on the white community," he declared.

The plan is based largely on a pupil-assignment arrangement administered by the city school superintendent. Transfer requests would be considered on a teacher-pupil ratio, with the superintendents having broad discretion in approving transfers.

Denying a transfer on the ground of race would be prohibited.

The twelve Negroes were ordered admitted to Lane High and Venable Elementary by Judge Paul last fall. Both schools were closed last September under the state's defunct "massive resistance" laws.

They reopened last month on a segregated basis when the city agreed to submit its voluntary plan for full desegregation to Judge Paul.

Mr. Hill said Charlottesville school officials had indicated they would approach the integration problem with "reason and intelligence".

Norfolk Halts Funds To Its High Schools

NORFOLK, Va. — (UPI) — City Council, in an apparent move to block integration in the event Virginia's "massive resistance" laws are declared invalid, voted Tuesday to cut off maintenance and operating funds to all grades above the sixth in the Norfolk public school system.

Effect of the action would be to close three Negro high schools and upper grades in 20 other white and Negro schools.

The fund cut-off becomes effective Feb. 2, two weeks after Virginia's Supreme Court of Appeals is scheduled to rule on state anti-integration laws that have closed nine public schools, including six white junior and senior high schools here.

Council, last Nov. 25, wrote into its 1959 budget, a provision giving it exclusive control over school funds, an action regarded then as a step toward closing Negro schools.

Archie L. Boswell, a spokesman for the Norfolk Public Schools Committee, termed the resolution an illegal act and beyond the council's scope. He urged that council not take any action "which will destroy the public schools of the city."

City Council Would Close Negro Schools

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — City Counil Tuesday adopted a resolution aimed at closing Negro as well as white secondary schools if federal and state courts knock down Virginia's anti-integration laws.

The closings would come under a fund cut-off law. The resolution said council "does not propose, at this time, to authorize" the payment of funds to the school board to operate any grade higher than the sixth in February or any subsequent month.

Three Negro secondary schools are open now but six white secondary schools have been closed since September to avoid court ordered desegregation.

WOULD SWELL LIST

The council's action means approximately 8,239 Negro and some 1,914 white students will join the 10,000 whites denied schooling during the first term.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 6-1. Councilman Roy B. Martin Jr. cast the only negative vote.

Adoption of the resolution indicates the City Council plans to prevent racial integration in the schools if Virginia's anti-integration laws are struck down by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals and a three-judge federal court. Decisions from these tribunals are expected Jan. 19. It is expected the courts will kill some, if not all, of the massive resistance laws.

ACT TERMED ILLEGAL

Atty. Archie L. Boswell, representing the Norfolk Public Schools Committee, said the resolution "is an illegal act and beyond the scope of your (council's) authority."

"I am here to ask that you do not today or in the future take any action which will destroy the public schools of the city," Boswell said.

At Norfolk Everybody Excited But Newly Integrated Students

NORFOLK, VA. (ANP) -- Virginia history took a new and significant turn Monday, Feb. 2, when 17 Negro students were enrolled in six secondary schools previously attended only by white students. The change was quiet, swift and harmonious almost completely.

There were no demonstrations and no hitch in the days program, and except that Negro children were entering for the first time in six of the city's public schools, everything was normal excepting the crowd of newsmen, TV representatives and cameramen. Everyone was excited except the students.

Most of the Negro students were brought to school in cars, but the adults didn't even get out in most instances, and only two or three adults escorted the new students to the school building.

A remarkable and significant action to prepare for a peaceful enrolling of the Negro students was taken by some of the white students themselves. The members of the Granby, Maury and Norview High School Key Clubs had a resolution inserted in the Norfolk newspapers as an advertising which said in part:

"Now that means have been found to open our schools, we, the undersigned members of the Key Clubs of Granby, Maury and Norview High Schools believe that it is the of the utmost importance to all of us that the orderly re-opening is completed as smoothly and as quickly as possible so that we may proceed with our immediate objective - to obtain an education..

"We believe that, regardless of their personal feelings, the students of our respective schools will conduct themselves with a dignity that will bring credit to our city." Another move that indicated the concern of some Norfolk whites on the speedy re-opening of the schools on an integrated basis if necessary was a page ad which appeared in the dailies by 100 business white residents of the city urging the City Council to "do everything within its power to open all public schools as promptly as possible."

From remarks some reporters made it was obvious they were disappointed that all was so quiet. Some came all the way from London, and others were from places as far away from Norfolk as New York and even New England.

NO TENSION—There was no fuss, no tension, no rioting Monday as white and Negro youngsters registered together at the opening of Norview High School in Norfolk, Va., closed since last fall by the governor to prevent integration. Alveraze Gonsouland, one of five Negroes assigned to the school, fills out forms along with other students.

Racists Fail To Sabotage Calm Virginia Integration

By JACK V. FOX

NORFOLK, Va. — (UPI) — Virginia admitted 21 Negroes to white public schools Monday in a reluctant but peaceful change from a policy of massive resistance to integration. Defender P.1 Sat. 2-14-59

Seventeen Negroes were admitted to schools in Norfolk and four at Arlington in the Washington suburbs.

There was not the slightest incident, despite a few pre-opening rumblings that there would be picketing and strife.

Until today, affected schools in Norfolk had been closed since last summer in the severe application of a Virginia law that required the closing of any school that was integrated. Chicago

Other schools that were closed under the same law are in Charlottesville—permitted to open segregated today under an eleventh-hour court reprieve that postponed integration until next September—and at Front Royal in Warren County. The affected school there did not open today.

At one school where Negroes were admitted, white pupils formed a long corridor down which walked two Negro girls, their heads erect, their eyes on the doorway to a new school and a new way of life.

"I said all along there wouldn't be any trouble and there was none," said Principal Charles W. Purdue, a former Duke University football star and now principal of Norfolk's big Norview High.

Phil Thomas, a 15-year-old Norfolk white student, said:

"Boy, did I get a lecture from my dad last night. He said 'You just stand there. Don't do anything."

In Arlington, where police patrols and officers with gas masks were prepared for anything, School Supt. Ray E. Reid said with relief that "I am happy to learn there were no incidents and that everything is quiet."

A boycott had been threatened by white pupils at Arlington but it failed to develop.

Joan Potts, a white girl at Arlington, said she did not want to attend school with Negroes and went home. Her father sent her back to school. Four white boys also asked permission to leave but changed their minds.

David L. Krupsaw, chairman of the Arlington County Board, said today's peaceful integration proved "conclusively that if public officials are sincere and firm, disorders and breaches of the peace do not happen.

"The rabble-rousing element is basically cowardly and always yields when confronted with firmness and dignity."

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond received minute by minute progress reports from the integration spots. He had promised swift police action at the state level if there should be trouble.

"So far, so good," said Lt. Gov. A.E.S. Stephens. "The question is what will happen inside the schools. Kids can be cruel sometimes."

Sat. 2-14-59 P.3 Defender Chicago

SURROUNDED BY white classmates, three Negro students prepare to enter Norview high school in Norfolk, Va., as Virginia's massive resistance crumble under federal court order. Six public schools in Norfolk and one in Arlington are now desegregated, marking the first time in Virginia history that Negroes and whites have attended public schools together. Negro students are Andrew Heidelberg, Olivia Driver and Alverez Gonsulande.

White Students End Boycott, Enroll At Integrated School

By United Press International

FRONT ROYAL, Va., Aug. 14.—Warren County High School, boycotted by its entire white student body last February to avoid integration, Friday quietly began registering white and Negro students for the new term.

It marked the first time that both Negroes and whites entered the huge school, the only white public high school in the county. It closed last fall to avoid a Federal court desegregation order but reopened in February with 21 Negroes as its entire student body.

Robert A. Wood, newly-named principal of the high school, said the registration was "very orderly and mannerly" with no incidents inside the school.

A few reporters and an occasional curious passerby watched from outside the building.

11 Negroes Register

Sixty-five whites and 11 Negroes registered Friday. Registration was expected to be even higher Saturday when more parents will be able to accompany their youngsters for registration.

Classwork is scheduled to begin Aug. 31 and it appeared, on the basis of the opening registration, that the high school would become officially integrated for the first time.

Warren County thus would follow Norfolk, Arlington and Alexandria in token integration. Another 12 Negroes also are scheduled to enter formerly white schools next month in Charlottesville, Va.

The private Warren County Education Foundation which operated makeshift classes for about 800 white students who boycotted the high school in February, opens registration for another term Tuesday. A mass rally Thursday night overwhelmingly endorsed a resolution asking the foundation to determine if enough students would again attend the private school.

Inter-racial Meeting Called

A foundation leader, Charles Leadman, said a meeting of white and Negro leaders would be called within about 10 days to try to persuade the Negro students not to return to the white school but attend a new $500,000 Negro high school which opens here Aug. 31.

Virginia NAACP chief counsel Oliver W. Hill said in Richmond he would be "happy to attend" the meeting and "make every effort to work out some reasonable solution to the problem."

Elsewhere in Virginia, the Arlington County School Board announced it would abide by the decision of the state-level Pupil Placement Board, which turned down the applications of 15 Arlington Negroes to white or predominantly white schools in the Washington suburb. Sixteen other Negro students are expected to enter Arlington white or predominantly white schools next month.

It was presumed the rejected 15 would start Federal court suits to gain their admission.

Va. High School Gets 18 Negro Applications

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (AP)—A three-day period of registration for the September term at Warren County High School ended Monday with 298 whites and 18 Negroes applying.

School officials were disappointed with the turnout, since the high school, which became involved in the school segregation crisis last year, once had an enrollment of more than 1,000. A total of 186 white students registered Monday. No Negroes registered.

County School Supt. Q. D. Gasque said school officials "hope to operate" the high school in the fall. Thirty-three teachers were under contract, he said, "more than enough" to handle 316 students.

Those who applied for classes at the high school are not automatically enrolled there. The county board must pass on the applications and make recommendations to the State Pupil Placement Board, which has the sole power to make pupil assignments in Virginia.

Thus far the placement board never has assigned a Negro to a white school.

Future Dim For School In Warren

Front Royal, Va., Aug. 15 (AP)—Chances grew dimmer today that white puplis will return to all-but-empty warren County High School in any considerable numbers next month when it opens on an intergrated basis.

The secon day of a 3-day registration period for 1959-60 passed with only 112 white children joining 19 Negroes in indicatin a desire to attend the ginat school which once had 1000 white pupils.

Forty-seven of the white children and eight of the Negroes were registered today. Sixty-five whites and 11 Negroes had been registered yesterday.

School Supt. Q. D. Casque said he was disappointed at the turnout of white pupils. He said he had hoped white registration "would be better that it has been." But he held out hope that more would register later.

With parents free from work over the weekend, Gasque had predicted that a large number of white parents would register their children today for enrollment at the school with the handful of Negroes.

For the time being at least, however, it appeared that an overwhelming majority of white parents will preferred to send their children to private, segregated facilities which the Warren County educational Foundation has promised to operate if there is sufficient demand.

Registration for the private school—which operated all of last session in downtown buildings—is scheduled for next Tuesday and Wednesday. Monday is the last day for registration for Warren County High.

More than 800 white pupils were enrolled in the private school when Warren County High, waced with court orders to desegregate, was shut down last September under now defunct state massive resistance laws.

Then, when the public school was reopened last February on a desegregated basis, only 22 Negroe sshowed up to enroll. White pupils stayed in the private school.

Appointed Assistant Supervisor Of Guidance

MRS. LUCILLE D. AYERS

ELEVATED — Mrs. Lucille Douglass-Ayers, of 1008 Avenue L, Ensley, has been appointed assistant supervisor of guidance in the Jefferson County Public Schools.

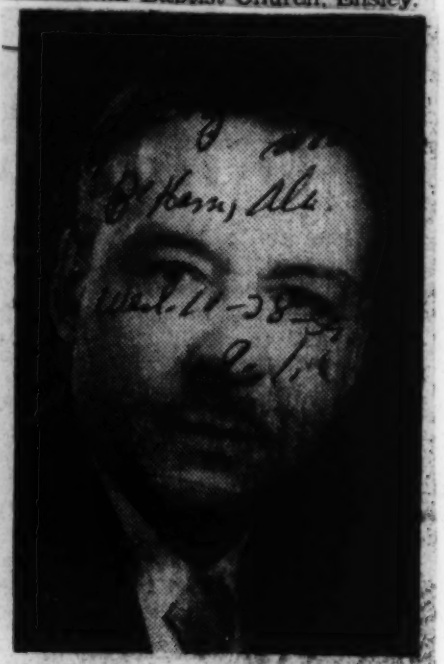
In making the announcement, Dr. E. Fay Jones, director of the Division of Negro Education, Jeffcho Public Schools, said the position was newly created. He added that Mrs. Ayers, who at the time of her promotion was teacher of mathematics and counselor for girls at Brighton High School, would be located in the Masonic Temple Building office of the Jefferson County Public Schools, 1630 Fourth Avenue North.

Dr. Jones sketched the duties of Assistant Supervisor Ayers as being in the area of testing, guidance, counseling and service. The new addition brings the staff of Director Jones to four, including Mrs. Ludie P. Dowdell, supervisor of elementary schools; Mrs. Ruth Lawson, office secretary, and Mrs. Ayers.

Mrs. Ayers, who was born in Tuscaloosa, Ala., holds the A.B. degree from Miles College, and the Master of Personnel Service degree from the University of Colorado. She has done additional study at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.

She was elected as the "1958 Teacher of the Year" by District IV of the Alabama State Teachers Association. Zeta Phi Beta Sorority also honored her the same year during its Finer Womanhood Week.

Mrs. Ayers is a former president of the Jefferson County Education Association. She has been active in civic, literary and cultural activities. Mrs. Ayers is a member of Macedonia Baptist Church, Ensley.



DR. C. W. HAYES

TO SPEAK IN MOBILE: Dr. C. W. Hayes, Director of Negro Schools, Birmingham Public School System, is scheduled to address the Mobile County Teachers Thursday, Oct. 29 at Central High School of which J. T. Gaines is the principal.

His speech will center around the in-service training program which the Mobile teachers are undertaking.

Mrs. Myrtle Sinclair Named Acting Fulton Supervisor

Mrs. Myrtle Sheppard Sinclair has been named acting supervisor of Fulton County Negro Schools during the absence of Mrs. A. Cathryn Johnson who has been granted leave of absence for residence in Laos and travel in other points of Asia. Official announcement was made at a system-wide instructional meeting for teachers and principals held at East Point Elementary School.

Mrs. Sinclair is a veteran with the Fulton County system having served as principal of the old Simpson Road School for eleven years and, more recently, as teacher and audio-visual coordinator at the East Point Elementary School. Other professional appointments have been held in Florida and Carrollton, Ga.

A product of the Atlanta public schools, Alabama State Normal and Clark College, the new appointee has pursued group leadership courses at the Atlanta University School of Social Work and studied for the master's degree at Atlanta University.

As a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, she has served as church school teacher, Leper Mission chairman, secretary of the Women's Auxiliary and treasurer of St. Cecelia Circle. Community services have been with the Y-Teen Committee, Phyllis Wheatley Y.W.-C.A., Girl Scouts and Campfire Girls.

She is the wife of Horace Sinclair and mother of Ginger Emelia Sinclair.

Mrs. Johnson, in words of farewell to the teachers, principals and departmental supervisors, outlined the month-long itinerary which her family expects to follow prior to settling in Laos, where her husband, Dr. R. O. Johnson, serves as U. S. advisor in the development of an educational program. Color slides of their prospective home in Laos and other general items of interest were shared with those assembled. Continued travel, observation of school practices and tutoring their son, Ed, will keep her occupied, Mrs. Johnson said.

The Johnsons are scheduled to leave Atlanta this week and depart for Hawaii and the Philippines in about a fortnight.

The influential BNTA delegation was instructed by the membership to support the renomination of and work for the re-election of Mrs. Estell as president of the ASTA. ASTA officers under the association's constitution is eligible for re-election once. Usually an administration is given a courtesy second term.

Meantime the BNTA announced that it was sponsoring "Teachers Talent Night" at 7:30 Thursday night, March 19 in the Parker High School auditorium. BNTA President Williams said the event would show off the sparkling talent in drama, music, literature and the other artistic pursuits among the city teachers.

BNTA is sponsoring a workshop at Parker High School Saturday, April 11. It will climax with a banquet.

Mrs. Williams said that a survey conducted by the BNTA revealed that 931 of the 968 Negro teachers in the Birmingham Public Schools were qualified voters. He added that his administration was pledged to continue to urge the remaining 37 non-voters teachers to add their names to the voters' roll before the Spring state teachers convention.

Meanwhile Mr. Williams indicated that he beleived that his adminstration would have the cooperation needed to give the BNTA a perfect mark in voter-registration. He is chairman of the ASTA vote commission.

ALABAMA STATE TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

President Bessie S. Estell To Address ASTA Meet, March 12th

Birmingham

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (SNS)—Mrs. Bessie S. Estell of Birmingham, president of the 76-fold Alabama State Teachers Association, is scheduled to go before the opening business session of the two-day ASTA convention with her "State-of-The-Teachers" message at 2 p. m. Thursday, March 12 in the Arena-Auditorium.

14m Wed 3/11/59

Just what her report and recommendations to the ASTA members would contain could not be predicted. However it is known that the association membership under the flat $5-a-year fee was ahead of last year's pre-convention figure. Memberships in the National Education Association had reportedly climbed steadily.

Texas-born Dr. Dan W. Dodson, director of the School of Education, New York University, is slated to deliver the opening speech at the welcoming session at 9:30 Thursday morning in Tullibody Auditorium. Hiss message will develop the convention theme, "Education—The Foundation of Human Relations."

REID TO SPEAK

Dr. Ira De Reid, professor of sociology at Haverford College in Pennsylvania, is scheduled to deliver the keynote speech at the Thursday night session. A graduate of Morehouse College, he holds Doctor of Philosophy degree from Columbia University. Dr. Reid, a members of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, is affiliated with the Federal Advisory Committee on Employment Security, U. S. Department of Labor.

In addition to the President Estell's address, the Thursday afternoon session will hear fraternal remarks from Lucius T. Bacote, president of the American Teachers Association. Memorial services will be conducted by the committee on Necrology of which ASTA vice-President Wayman R F Grant of Mobile is the chairman. Music will be furnished by the Parker High School choir of Birmingham under the direction of William S. Henry. The organ prelude will be played by Mrs. Bonna Mae Perine Samuels of Birmingham. There will be reports of officers, committees an dcommissions, but as information only.

RETIRED TEACHERS

Retired teachers will be recognized at the 1:30 business session Friday afternoon, March 13. ASTA honor roll units will also be cited by ASTA Executive Secretary G. W. Jones.

The committee on the teacher-of- the- yearwill recommend one of the entries from the nine ASTA districts for this coveted honor. Other reports to be acted upon will come from the committee on audit and business administration, treasurer, executive secretary, committee on resolutions and legislation and the committee on resolutions.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Two proposed constitutional provisions will be presented to the delegate assembly for consideration. (1) One proposal is to amend the constitution to make the nine district coordinators vice presidents This increase in vice presidential titles would not substantially affect the size of the executive committee since the affiliated and district vice presidents would be given rotated and restricted representation.

The second proposal would move the meeting of the delegate assembly from the final day of the convention to the opening day. This would necessitate minor changes in the election machinery.

Suggestion that the ASTA officers be elected by a mail ballot of the all of the members will be opposed by the committee on resolutions and legislation. Presently the officers are elected by the delegate assembly, which also legislates for the teachers.

Under the constitution the research secretary, who now is Dr H. Council Trenholm, president of Alabama State College, is the mandatory chairman of the resolutions and legislative committee. Dr Trenholm is said to have long opposed giving the individual teacher the right to elect officers of the association.

Dr. Wayman C. Matherson of Birmingham, is one of the 11 members of this committee.

MRS. BESSIE S. ESTELL

State Teachers Hear Talk Made By Mrs. B. S. Estell

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Standing before her fellow teachers with gracious erectness and speaking with firm sincerity, Mrs. Bessie S. Estell, of Birmingham, told the 76th annual convention of the Alabama State Teachers Association in Tullibody Hall, Alabama State College, Thursday afternoon, March 12, that the ASTA must go forward with its expanded program - in the areas of professional competence, citizenship obligations and teacher welfare."

She boasted of the ASTA achievements under her administration in her "President's Address" made at the opening business session of the two-day convention. Mrs. Estell said these achievements included the employment of a full-time executive secretary, revision of the budget to provide an increase in appropriations for teacher welfare and revitalization of the vote commission.

Pointing out that she attended seven of the nine ASTA district meetings, Mrs. Estell asserted that "much of the success of our expanded program lies in effective district meetings."

SUPPORT BALLOT

In her speech she asked the ASTA members to pay particular attention to the report of the vote commission which was scheduled for the afternoon session. She added, "The welfare of teachers and our entire citizenry is dependent, to a large extent, upon our voting strength. Every teacher should seek to carry out this civic responsibility."

Mrs. Estell, serving her first one-year term as ASTA president, declared: "There is grave concern for teachers who fail to take advantage of the opportunity to acquire the citizenship badge of honor - the ballot. There is grave concern and deep anxiety for those teachers who experience difficulties and inhibitions in that respect."

Obviously having in mind Lowndes, Wilcox, Macon, Bullock and some other Black Belt counties, where Negro teachers, some with Ph. D. degrees, are rejected as voters solely because of their race, Mrs. Estell posed this question, "Is there a solution within the framework of our organization? If so, let's proceed."

The ASTA president observed: "While the world is in peril our schools can be an enchor of safety People are about equally divided between the frightened and the challeneged. Whether we are frightened or challenged, we must face the future resolutely."

VOTE REPORT

An advance briefing on the vote commission report of Henry J. Williams, chairman of Birmingham, indicated a decline in voter-registration efforts among teachers during the association year. The report was not expected to analyze the cause of this drop. But from talk heard around the convention it is due to fear whipped up by the White Citizens Councils.

With over 8,000 members, the ASTA convention was scheduled to close Friday afternoon with the final business session of the delegate assembly.

A proposal, popularly known as the "Mail Box Ballot" issue which would give each teacher a right to vote for the officers of the association, is expected to set off a floor flight. Reportedly submitted by Dr. Charles W. Orr of Alabama A. and M. College, a former ASTA and ATA president, the proposal is opposed by the association's committee on resolutions and legislation, which clears the way for legislative traffic. Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, ASTA research secretary, and by terms of the association's constitution, chairman of the powerful resolutions and legislative committee, is understood to be vigorously opposed to letting the teachers vote for their association officers.

One district leader who declined to permit use of his name said he was dissatisfied with the manner the new executive secretary was named. He added that the district coordinators were to hold a caucus Thursday to map strategy for laying plans for a campaign of constitutional reforms. This could ignite a smouldering fire that upset plans for a placid meeting.

Alabama State Teachers To Hear Dr. I. D. Reid

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Dr. Ira DeAugustine Reid, professor of sociology, Haverford (Pa.) College, is scheduled to deliver the featured convention speech at the 76th annual session of the Alabama State Teachers Association March 12-13 at Alabama State College.

He will speak at the Thursday night March 12, general session in the Arena-Auditorium of Alabama State College. The Morehouse College trained scholar will center his message around the convention theme, "Education - the Foundation of Human Relations." Dr. Reid will be introduced by Dr. H. Council Trenholm, president of Alabama State College and ASTA research secretary.

Dr. Dan W. Dodson, director of the School of Education, New York University, will deliver the keynote speech at the 9:30 opening session Thursday morning in Turnbody Auditorium. He will be introduced by Dr. J. Garrick Hardy, dean of the Freshman College Division of Alabama State College.

E. J. Oliver, of Birmingham, principal of Fairfield Industrial High School and a member of the ASTA executive committee will give the response to six welcome speeches. George Washington Jones, ASTA executive secretary, will outline the work of the convention. Mrs. Bessie S. Estell, of Birmingham, ASTA president, will preside.

Twenty discussion groups will meet simultaneously for an hour and 45 minutes Thursday morning to discuss special subject matter. Outstandinng consultants will be on hand to guide the discussion.

ASTA Vice-President Wayman R. F. Grant of Mobile will preside at the Thursday afternoon business session at which Mrs. Estell will deliver the "President's Annual Address". Music will be furnished by the Parker High School of Choir Birmingham under the direction of Prof. William S. Henry. Mrs. Bonna Mae Perine Samuels, of Birmingham, will play an organ prelude. Lucius T. Bacote, president of the American Teachers Association, will give remarks.

Reports by the research secretary, executive secretary, executive committee, treasurer, trustee board, vote commission and welfare committee will be given as information.

Of lively interest will be the report coming from the vote commission headed by Prof. Henry J. Williams, of Birmingham. The hearings by the Civil Rights Commission, the vote denial cases brought by the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the series of articles on voter-registration by The Birmingham News. the campaign of the White Citizens Councils to suppress Negro voting, talk by the Patterson administration of tightening the voter-screening laws, have served, to stir interest in this report.

The delegate assembly at the Friday afternoon business session will deal with the various reports, take action on proposed legislation, adopt resolutions ,and elect officers.

Just what recommendations will be contained in Mrs. Estell's state-of-teachers speech is unknown. What proposal will come from the powerful ASTA executive committee remained unrevealed for publication.

With the public school system in Alabama threatened because of almost certain to come legal efforts to widen the enrollment policy to fit the demands of democracy, the ASTA policy statement will be awaited with eagerness. With Negro teachers denied the ballot in Wilcox, Lowndes, Bullock and some other Black Belt counties, there will be keen public interest in how the ASTA tackles the vote denial problem.

Friday morning the various ASTA affiliates will hold sessions.

This is the first year that the ASTA has operated with a full-time paid executive secretary.

The ASTA top leadership during the association year has meeting in the nine ASTA districts where the program has been discussed, ideas swapped, experience traded, and suggestions communicated.

The usually vocal delegation from the Birmingham Negro Teachers Association, which has championed much of what has become the basic ASTA program, has not yet announced what plans it will offer the convention.

Human relations topic for teachers

Afro-American Baltimore Md. Sat. 7-18-59 p. 8

MONTGOMERY, Ala.— The 56th annual convention of the American Teachers Association will be held at Knoxville College, July 26 - 29.

"Our Personal Responsibility In Programs of Human Relations," is the theme for the 1959 convention.

In 1947, through the convention program at North Carolina College, and the publication of a "Bibliography in Inter - Group Education," two loan collections of publications in Inter - Group Education were made available in 1954 and 55.

In 1956, at the ATA convention in Atlanta, "Education for Improved Human Relations," was the theme of the special emphasis project.

Dr. Walter N. Ridley, president of Elizabeth City State Teachers College administered the program.

Recently at the NEA Convention in St. Louis, the NEA-ATA Joint Committee centered its open-meeting on the topic of Human Relations.

James Armstrong Scott, director of elementary education in the St. Louis public school system, discussed "Some Principles Basic to Development of Democratic Human Relations."

Father Trafford P. Maher, head of the Department of Education and Director of the Human Relations Center at St. Louis University, discussed "Current Challenges in Human Relations."

The teachers' responsibility in programs of human relations will be emphasized in the Knoxville convention, specifically, the activities of Intra - Race and Intra - Group and Inter-Race, Inter - Group relations.

The keynote address will be delivered Sunday. A symposium on "current programs in human relations," will be held Monday.

A 40-year-old state-wide teachers organization was granted permission Wednesday to incorporate, according to a chanter signed by a Fulton County Superior Court judge.

After more than four decades of existence, the Georgia Teacher and Education Association, with headquarters in Atlanta, was granted a charter as a non-profit organization.

According to the charter, signed by Superior Judge Jesse M. Wood, the main objective of the association will be "to promote the educational, moral, spiritual and general welfare of the youth of this state."

The teachers organization represents approx mately 10,000 teachers in elementary schools, high schools and colleges throughout the State of Georgia.

The teacher's association will not be operated for "pecuniary gain or profit," according to the charter application. It will be allowed to receive grants and gifts and property in any form.

After so many years without a chanter, the organizat on decided to become incorporated for "general purposes, as a matter of convenience," according to Attorney Donald L. Hollowell, who filed charter.

GEORGIA TEACHERS AND EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

On Segregation Issue

Ga. Negro Teachers Face Grave Dilemma At 41st Convention

By TRUZZANT W. ANDERSON

ATLANTA, Ga. — Since the Georgia white teachers association has spoken out publicly in favor of "equal but separate schools," what will the Negro teachers do on this same issue when they hold the 41st annual convention of their 10,000-member association here April 8-10?

That is the big question in the minds of Negroes throughout the State of Georgia on the eve of the gathering of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association here.

This reporter has been asking questions of teachers and principals in many sections of Georgia and has also queried the top leader of the GTEA, its hard-working executive secretary, Rev. Lucius H. Pitts, who is, perhaps, the only GTEA official who is absolutely free to express himself without repercussions.

REPLYING TO a question from this reporter as to what stand the Negro group would take, now that their white counterpart has gone on record on the issue, Rev. Mr. Pitts frankly admitted that he does not think the GTEA will take any position on the school segregation issue in its annual session.

Elaborating, Rev. Mr. Pitts said the GTEA would not take a position "as such," but would by subtle inference let it be known how it feels on the matter.

It was pointed out that in 1956, at the annual meeting in Augusta, the GTEA publicly announced itself on the integration issue and repercussions were swift in coming.

Reprisals against members of the group increased and it soon became apparent that prejudiced white school boards would not hesitate to fire any Negro teacher who advocated—or supported—equal rights and education — and the NAACP.

IN HIS farewell address in April 1958 in Columbus, retiring GTEA President H. E. Tate stressed the threats and intimidations hurled at Negro teachers if they showed any inclinations towards equality or integration. The fear still lingers in the hearts of many Georgia Negro teachers.

The Rev. Mr. Pitts said the GTEA may not even reaffirm its Augusta stand at this session, publicly, that is, but might—by subtle inference—let it be known that Negro teachers and educators oppose separate schools. However, he said it is possible that the convention may not reaffirm the Augusta stand. The GTEA resolutions committee this year will be headed by Mrs. Clara West of Savannah, Ga.

The white Georgia Education Association, by a vote of 569 to 267, backed "equal but separate" schools, and also voted to support the keeping of public school education as against "private" segregated schools.

THERE ARE probably no "equal" schools available to Negroes in Georgia under the present school education system.

There are noticeable defects in many of the swanky buildings erected for Negroes by Georgia in its effort to thwart integration, and a close check could possibly reveal sinister backgrounds and even graft, considering some revelations made about the Marvin Griffin administration.

How do the teachers and principals feel about it? There you find the pathetic answer. Most of them don't like it, but they are afraid to say so, out loud.

Many Negro principals and teachers own homes—with mortgages on them—and have cars—with notes on them—and have children in schools and colleges—and indebtedness which they must consider. They have to think twice before risking their jobs and livelihood on principles of racial equality which may get them fired, thus the aura of fear.

ON TOP OF this is the fear that many Negro teachers — despite their often-superior qualifications over white teachers, as is true in several county systems —may lose their jobs if integration comes, because white teachers will be hired and Negro teachers fired, rather than allow Negroes to teach whites, regardless of qualifications. They cite Oklahoma as an example.

Thus the GTEA is faced with a serious dilemma when it meets next week. The average Georgia Negro regards his teachers as leaders, and if they fail to show leadership qualities, then the rank and file may lose faith in them. What to do? GTEA President Charles Butler of Augusta is a teacher. We wouldn't put him on the spot. So we'll have to wait and see. Anyway, you can say how you feel, can't you. That's an American citizen's privilege, isn't it?

4,000 Teachers Open Annual Meet Wednesday

Rev. L. H. Pitts, Executive Secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, announced Saturday the coming to the community a delegation of more than 4,000 teachers representing more than 10,000 teachers of the Association, beginning Wednesday, April 8.

Among the many leaders and educational specialists for this 41st annual convention are as follows: President B. E. Mays, of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Georgia, on Wednesday, 7:30 p. m.; President E. Clayton Calhoun, Paine College, Augusta, Georgia, on Thursday afternoon; Dr. Horace Mann Bond, Atlanta University, at the Classroom Teachers Banquet, on Thursday evening, at the Waluhaje Ballroom; Dr. Claude Purcell, State Superintendent of Schools, Atlanta, Georgia, on Friday morning.

Dr. John W. Davis, President Emeritus, West Virginia State College and Special Director, Teachers Information and Security, on Friday Afternoon; Dr. R. O'Hara Lainer, former president of Texas Southern University, Director of Special Projects, Phelps - Stokes Fund, New York City, speaker at the Principals Banquet, 6 p. m. at the Oglethorpe Elementary School; Dr. Edward C. Brice, Specialist Fundamental and Literacy Education, U. S. Office of Education, Washington, D. C.; on Friday nights general session at Washington High School, 8 p. m.; Dr. T. C. Clark, Associate Executive Secretary, Department of Higher Education, N. E. A., Washington, D. C., at Clark College, Thursday, 12:30 p. m.

Other important leaders from the State Department of Education and Colleges and Universities are to be presented on the program.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Charles Butler, State President, of Augusta, Georgia, said that the legislative and representative committees will propose for legislative actions in the areas of transportation, contractional agreements, teachers tenure, unmet school needs, financial differentials and international and intercultural relationship.

The Association has been considering for the past three years a program of expansion. The goal and objectives committee, headed by Mrs. Catherine Johnson and Dr. Lynette Saine, and guided by the Board of Directors, has presented through workshop, study-group, and more than twenty drive -in conferences, propositions for expansion in the area of instruction, welfare, research, human relationship, publication, and field service.

CONVENTION HEADQUARTERS

The Executive Secretary said that Booker T. Washington High School, C. N. Cornell, principal, will be convention headquarters for the three-day meeting. W. G. Parsons, president of the 1200 member local unit, and A. J. Martin, director of Region III, will serve as chairman and co-chairman (respectively) of the steering committee composed of more than 400 Atlanta Teachers. The secretary said that Atlanta and the surounding counties are rolling out the "Plush Carpets."

SPECIAL FEATURES

Thursday night at Washington High School, the finest musical groups in the state will be presented in a cultural series. They will form a mammoth choir of more than 500 voices. Friday night, the College Choirs of Atlanta will be featured. Friday morning, State President C. L. Butler will present his annual address on the theme ("Quality Teaching in Today's Schools). Three social functions will close with the President's Ball at the Magnolia Ballroom on Friday night. An array of celebrities including the National President of the P. T. A., Mrs. Ethel Kight, and National President of A. T. A., L. C. Bacote, will honor the Association as platform guests at the various sessions. All of the meetings are open to the public.

Silent On Segregation

GTEA Lashes At Crowded Buses

The Georgia Teachers and Education Association refused to take a stand on the question of integrated or segregated schools in a report of the resolutions committee but lashed out against overcrowded buses and, social disintegration in the American community, and excessive fund-raising drives in the schools.

A committee headed by Mrs. Clara West, and which included Mrs. A. B. Flowers, Dr. Paul Clifford, C. C. Hall, Mrs. Ada Price, F. D. Browne, Dr. Wiley S. Bolden and C. W. Francis, made no mention of a resolution adopted last March by the white Georgia Education Association reputedly favoring continued segregated schools.

The GTEA resolutions committee made no mention of integrated or segregated schools, but quoted a Cooperative Study of Secondary Schools, adopted in 1950 in Washington, D.C., which reads: "Now is the time when the teacher's responsibility for safe-guarding and exading democratic ideals must be met with increased seriousness and effort. Mounting international, national, regional and local problems pose awful threats and disturbing challenges to the believers in democracy."

The report also asked a "forward step" in the problems of bus transportation in recognition of nine Negro children who perished in an overcrowded bus at Tifton, Ga.

ALARMING PROBLEM

The report also noted that school absenteeism was one of the alarming problems of education. During the school year 1957-58, the resolutions noted there were daily 65,000 pupils absent from the various Negro schools in the state.

The committee cited the fact that absenteeism resulted in "unnecessary repeating of grades and in some instances interrupted school attendance."

Fund-raising in the schools was attacked as the report revealed "many schools consume the entire year in this sort of activity."

Strong language was used in deploring the lack of adequate bus transportation. "Our committee is greatly concerned over the fact that many buses now in use are in very dilapidated condition, and constantly are dangerously overcrowded. These buses must sometimes make double runs and cover wide areas, thereby causing the children to spend as many as three or four hours per day in transit. It appears that when left to local effort, transportation is inadequate either because of the inability or unwillingness of local systems to provide adequately for all the children."

BAD SITUATION

The deplorable bus situation, the report said, had led to a decline in the average daily attendance and subsequent loss in teacher allotment which can be attributed to poor and inadequate transportation.

"These facts are greatly deplored and our association urges that for the health and safety of our children, the state and local boards of education will speedily formulate such rules and regulations and require sufficient facilities that these unsafe and unhealthy inadequacies be rectified."

The resolutions delved into membership, experimentation in education, higher education, teacher tenure, sick leave, salary, retired teachers, professional growth, citizenship, teacher of the year, instruction of every pupil, and maintenance of buildings.

Other resolutions dealt with guidance, testing and counseling, social science, adequate minimum foundation program, civil defense and six-year certificates. The GTEA resolutions committee endorsed federal aid to education and cited the fact that school enrollments were increasing over a million a year.

The report commended the state for providing funds for sick leave, but deplored the method used by some systems in requiring medical statements in all cases of illness.

On salaries the resolutions committee said: "The rising cost of living has forced many persons to leave the teaching professions or to seek extra positions to supplement their salaries. The GTEA endorsed a $4,000 minimum for persons holding the bachelor degree and $5,000 for persons holding the masters degree."

O'Hara Lanier of the Phelps-Stokes Fund and Dr. Edward W. Brice, specialist, Fundamental and Literary Education, U. S. Office of Education.

John W. Lawton, vice-president of the GTEA, will preside at today's 9:30 A. M. Third General Assembly. A memorial for deceased teachers will be conducted by Mrs. Mary L. Bussey, chairman of the Necrology Committee. Mr. Butler will deliver the president's annual address at this meeting and is expected to outline aims and goals of the organization while reviewing the accomplishments of his administration.

Dr. E. K. Weaver, of Atlanta University, will be analyst at the State Workers luncheon at 12:30 P. M., at Frazier's Cafe Society Benjamin Anderson, president, will preside.

DISTINGUISHED EDUCATION

Dr. Davis, born Feb. 11, 1888, who will be honored by the GTEA, is recognized as one of America's most distinguished educators. He has been cited by many major American institutions including his alma mater, the University of Chicago, South Carolina State College, Wilberforce University, Howard University and many others.

Following his retirement as active president of West Virginia State College, Dr. Davis has labored unceasingly towards improving the quality of teaching throughout the nation, while serving in various governmental advisory posts.

Dr. Lanier, who speaks at the 6:00 P. M. Principal's Banquet at Oglethorpe School, has served as president of Hampton Institute and Texas Southern University before joining the Phelps Stokes Fund.

The Fourth General Assembly will be addressed by Dr. Brice who is one of the country's outstanding educational authorities.

The GTEA convention will hear reports today from the Budget, Constitution, Goals and Objectives, Teacher of the Year, Time and Place, Credentials, Convention Evaluation committees as well as the annual report of GTEA executive secretary John W. Pitts following the tribute to Dr. Davis.

OFFICIAL INSTALLATION

Rev. L. M. Terrell, pastor, Zion Hill Baptist Church, Atlanta, will give the invocation at the 8:00 P. M. Fourth General Assembly. H. E. Tate, GTEA Director at Large, will install officers, and Mrs. Willie M. Johnson, chairman of the Citations Committee will report.

Following the address by Dr. Brice, music will be heard from the Atlanta college choirs.

The final convention program is the meeting Saturday morning of the Board of Directors at GTEA headquarters.

The theme of the 41st convention, "Quality Teaching in Today's Schools," has been hammered home by a battery of convention speakers. Most asked teachers to "motivate and inspire "students for meeting the challenge of desegregation.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays in keynoting the opening session made an impassioned plea for better instruction and the theme has generally been repeated throughout the session.

MISSISSIPPI TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

Faith urged on teachers at SC meet

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — "Faith in what is right" and "courage to fight for right," was urged upon South Carolina's colored teachers who ended their 41st annual state convention last week.

In a brilliant address, Dr. Edward W. Brice, specialist in Fundamental and Literacy Education, U.S. Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Washington, declared:

"There are new dimensions in education today. If we are to measure up to the demands of the hour, the answer lies not alone in desegregation of schools but in the wisdom, tolerance and human understanding, which should come from the kind of education climate," to which America has built itself.

A former president of Clinton Junior College at Rock Hill, S.C., Dr. Brice saw early education of colored American southerners shortly after the Civil War as having begun in a sort of "Pandora box of disfranchisement, segregation, intimidation, work and living restrictions."

These limitations and conditions no longer prevail, however, he said, whose failure yet to be understood and realized is a basis for the present dissension among certain citizens.

THE NIGHT BEFORE, this speech, some 5,000 and more teachers and their friends got similar counsel from South Carolina - born Judge Mercer M. Mance of Indiana.

Keynoting the opening public session, Judge Mance urged "knowledge" and emphasis upon human and individual rights as needed paramount goals of American education.

Judge Mance, a native of Beaufort, was elected a Superior Court Judge in Marion County, Indiana last November.

In addition from these two general meetings, the Palmetto Education Association (official organization of the state's colored teachers,) held several other public meetings,but placed emphasis on its various departmental sessions which, this year, featured a record number of distinguished consultants.

Walker E. Solomon, PEA executive secretary, told the AFRO that "between four and five thousand" teachers visited exhibits in concessions down stairs in Columbia Township Auditorium. He said that only 3,270 teachers were registered, lowest perhaps in five years.

HOWEVER, THE PEA has 7,374 paid members for 1959, which is 83 more than in 1958, a new record for the organization. This membership includes 35 of the state's 46 counties, in which every colored teacher is a PEA member.

In the 7,374 PEA members, about 2,800 are also members of both the American Teachers Association and the National Education Association, Mr. Solomon said.

CONSULTANTS - LEADERS of the departmental meetings included:

Dr. R. E. Williams, S.C. State College, Orangeburg; Dr. James P. Foster, Florida A. and M. University, Tallahassee, Fla.; Mrs. Mabel B. Wright, St. Augustine College Raleigh, N.C.;

T. C. Gilchrist, Asst. Ex. Sec't National Council of Teachers of English; Harold E. Jones, Arithmetic editor, Ginn and Co.; Dr. Harry W. Lewis, Supervisor and Director, Reading Clinic, Washington, D.C.;

Miss Margaret L. Walker, State Library Consultant, Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. John C. Moore, Director of Music, St. Augustine College, Raleigh, N.C.;

Harold Schreiner, Supervisor Physical Education, State Department of Education; Rev. Howard G. McClain, Ex. Dir. Christian Action Council;

Dr. J. C. Holler, Dr., Division of Instruction, State Department of Education; and Dr J. W. Davis, Director of Teacher Security and Job Information Service.

HIGHLIGHT OF EXHIBITIONS included winning projects of students participating in the Science Fair, held in Orangeburg a week before. The winning exhibits on display were by:

Shelly Lewis (1st place among senior high schoolers), Wilkinson High School, Orangeburg; W. R. Merriwether Jr., Burke School, Charleston; and 1st prize among junior high schoolers, Miss Joyce E. Solomon, W. A. Perry Junior High School, Columbia.

The following counties and their sectional presidents were those reported as having every teacher in the county a PEA member:

Abbeville, Mrs. A. M. Power; Anderson, A. A. Martin; Bamberg, E. M. McCants; Barnwell, W. L. Myers; Beaufort, James Davis; Berkeley, Calhoun, Mrs. C. S. Ross; Cherokee, H. C. Gardin; Chester, A. D. Hardin; Chesterfieldd L. J. Foster; Darlington, John Alsbrooks Jr.; Dorchester, O. R. Holly;

Edgefield, S. E. Diggs; Fair-Georgetown, Mrs. Pauline D. Lawrence; Greenville, Zoel G. Marshall;

HAMPTON, Claudius Conner; Jasper, J. H. Hill; Kershaw, C. E. Watkins; Lancaster, W. D. Young; Laurens, Isaac M. White; Lee, Mrs. Rosella G. Toney;

Lexington, L. N. Bennett; McCormich, Dr. W. S. Mims; Newberry, Mrs. Eunice H. Allen; Oconee, D. H. Thompson; Pickens, L. L. Laster; Saluda, T. C. Owens;

Spartanburg, Frank W. Smith; Union, J. F. Moorer; Williamsburg, Mrs. Katie Wilson; York, J. T. W. Mims; Orangeburg, B. F. Spells and Aiken, J. F. Robinson.

PEA officers, who continue in positions until elections in 1960, are:

Allen Williams, Woodruff, president; Mrs. A. T.Gaines, John R. Harper, Camden, treas urer; Walker E. Solomon, Columbia. executive secretary.

TENNESSEE EDUCATION CONGRESS

2,000 teachers attend annual T.E.C. sessions

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — More than 2,000 state teachers attended the Tennessee Education Congress' annual meeting at Tennessee State University last week for two days of educational sessions.

At the convention's general session, in H. A. Kean Hall, the teachers from over the state, attired in their pre-Easter finery heard the University of Michigan's associate professor of education, Dr. Alvin P. Laving, speak on the meeting's theme, "The Teacher; Builder of A Better World."

Presiding at the opening session for the TEC's supervisors, which featured an address by Dr. Willard Goslin of Peabody College, was Shelby County supervisor, Mrs. Elizabeth Townsend.

NASHVILLE'S William H. Fort, former school principal, was installed as the newly elected TEC president. He succeeds Isaiah Goodrich of Memphis.

Participants for the first time on a statewide level were school secretaries and special education teachers. Mrs. Polly A. Walker, Memphis, served as secretaries section chairman.

Special education consultants were Tennessee State University associate professor of psychology, Dr. Calvin O. Atchinson; Nashville City schools supervisor of special education, Dr. Forrest Evans, County supervisor, Mrs. Nina Thurman, Miss Mildred Thompson of the State Department of Education and Tennessee State University special education staffer, Mrs. Roberta P. Wright.

Music for the general meeting was furnished by Nashville's Pearl High School chorus under the direction of Tennessee State alumnus W. C. Lathon.

Teachers Take Strong Stand On School Issue

VTA tells Va. to quit school folly

RICHMOND — The Virginia Teachers Association has called upon the State of Virginia to immediately get out of the business of private school support" and to comply with the Supreme Court's decision to desegregate schools.

Dr. J. Rupert Picott, VTA executive secretary, issued the call as he spoke before the Perrow Commission, a special body appointed by Gov. Lindsay J. Almond to study the school situation in Virginia.

The VTA leader termed the appropriation of taxpayers' money for private school education "a dangerous precedent and increasingly expensive."

SPEAKING FOR the 7,500 members of the organization, he declared that the "Pupil Placement Board always was an impossible and unneeded agency. The local authorities over many years have been quite capable of handling the transfer and the enrollment of children of school age."

"This is where this service belongs," Dr. Picott declared, "and the Virginia Teachers Association urges appropriate action to achieve this end."

He urged that means be found to give greater local support to public school education through giving to the localities some other taxable means over and above property, and that the state take a long look at support, without control, of the public schools.

"FEDERAL AID to education," he said, "is required in our time because of the mobility of the population, both during the school - training period and thereafter."

He termed the fear of some aid to education, while using federal aid for almost everything else, "an amazing development."

The speaker cited figures to prove that Virginia's performance in education is already poor in comparison with other states.

Virginia, he pointed out, ranks 39th in estimated expenditures per pupil in average daily attendance, 38th from the top in terms of the median school years completed by persons 25 years of age and older, and 39th on the basis of those states with the lowest rejections because of failure to pass the mental test administered by the Department of Defense in 1956.

"EDUCATION," Dr. Picott stated, "is a fundamental responsibility of the state. The neglect and disposal of our school property and the refusal to support public schools will mean the end of enlightened living in Virginia as we now know it.

"With our chief adversary, Russia, concentrating on scientific and mathematical learning in increased amounts, and with this same concentration exhibited elsewhere in these United States, it would be the height of folly and suicide for the State of Virginia to abandon the public schools.

"The retention of Section 129 of the Virginia Constitution is a must," he declared.

IN ADDITION to his statement, Dr. Picott also presented a letter from the Second District of the Virginia Teachers Association, of which J. Murray Brooks is president.

The letter called for the preservation of a system of free education for all people.

"Our accelerated and progressive way of life requires of each citizen a degree of appreciation and understanding of this way of life which is obtained through education," the letter stated.

Va. Teachers At NEA Meet

Support Integration And Federal Aid In Education

Journal & Guide p.4 Sat 7-11-59

RICHMOND — The 25 member delegation of the Virginia Teachers Association took an active part in the affairs of the National Education Association convention in St. Louis last week.

More than 5,000 delegates from every state in the union attended the 97th annual session of the largest professional organization in the world.

DR. J. RUPERT Picott, executive secretary of the VTA, served as a discussion leader on the conference theme: "Quality Education Opens Windows on the World."

Sumner G. Madden, vice-president of the Richmond Teachers Association Federal Credit Union, served as chairman of the Committee on Credit Unions. Mr. Madden, a business teacher at Armstrong high school, was the only Virginian to head a major committee at the NEA Convention.

Miss Sadie V. Lawson of Roanoke, president of the Virginia Teachers Association, was invited by the president of NEA to occupy a seat on the platform during one of the public meetings.

TWO MAJOR issues — a stronger stand on the desegregation of schools and Federal aid to education—claimed the attention of the delegates. The Virginia Teachers Association went on record as favoring both of these measures.

The VTA seconded the motion pledging all-out support of the Murray-Metcalf bill, now now pending in Congress, would give outright Federal grants to the states. The grants, based on $25 for each school age child — could be used for school construction or teachers salaries, or both.

Only four states—Louisiana, South Carolina, North Dakota, and Maryland—did not second the motion favoring the bill. (The Virginia Education Association, the white teachers' affiliate in the State, did not second the motion. Dr. Robert F. Williams, executive secretary of the VEA, was quoted as saying that the VEA did not second the resolution because "we just didn't see fit to second it." He also said that the Virginia delegation appeared split on the vote. Dr. Picott, in an Associated Press release, said: "So far as I know there is no split in our Virginia delegation. The VTA has supported Federal aid for teachers salaries and school construction for the past eight years.")

IN ADDITION to Picott, Madden, and Miss Lawson, members of the Virginia delegation included Mrs. Carrie B. Walker, Lawrenceville; William Reavis, Emporia; A. L. Scott, Snell; J. Murray Brooks, Mathews; Fitz Turner, Suffolk; Arthur Bracey, Alexandria; W. C. Hill, Clifton Forge; the Rev. R. W. Lawing, Appomattox; Mrs. Annie B. White, Petersburg; Earl S. Braxton, Norfolk; Henry A. Davis, Norfolk. Lloyd Sykes, Courtland; Douglas Cooley, Charlotte Courthouse; P. E. Bowes, Newport News; Mrs. Dorothy Wright, Richmond; Mrs. Lenora Zeigler, Richmond; U. L. Oliver, Glen Allen; J. A. Hubbard, Bluefield; L. T. Binford, Richmond; Mrs. Willa M. Jones, Portsmouth; Mrs. Lillian McDaniel, Richmond, and Osborne B. Payne, Richmond.

5,000 Va. teachers close 5-day meet

The Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

RICHMOND

"Colored persons should be appointed to and urged to participate in all community agencies so that the lines of communication so necessary to the life of a democracy will be kept open and clear."

This was a resolution of the Virginia Teachers Association meeting here in its 72nd annual convention.

At the Friday afternoon closing session of the meeting, the 5,000 attending teachers heard Howard University President Mordecai Johnson declare:

"They (Russians) have given up the idea of military victory but are becoming the number one power through concentration of economic strength.

"America must change its thinking and attitude and recognize that the Russian Education system is excellent."

OTHER MAJOR addresses during the five-day session were delivered by Miss Etta Moten and by Dr. Edward Brice of the U.S. Office of Education. Miss Moten described Africa as "a land of evolving greatness."

With meeting headquarters on the campus of Virginia Union University, many resolutions were made on several current matters.

They deplored the action of the Prince Edward County board of supervisors for cutting off funds for public schools.

They also asked that the state department of education's guidance and research branch and qualified colored persons with special responsibility to develop state-wide testing programs.

THEY RECOMMENDED higher pay with a $4,000 minimum and the yearly salary being spread over 12 rather than 10 months.

They also favored liberal provisions for tenure, leave and retirement.

A proposed sales tax was endorsed "provided that all funds be used for support of education and other welfare agencies and none be diverted to support private schools or to circumvent compliance with the Supreme Court decision in other ways."

The week of conferences, workshops and lectures had as its theme: " Quality Education —Our Primary Task." The attending teachers heard 43 educational leaders.

School board rejects raise for teachers

14m(4) Ala Birmingham

A 5 per cent pay increase request for Birmingham teachers was refused Friday by the Birmingham Board of Education.

The appeal was made by Miss Elsie Dillon, Lee School principal.

"We are trying to be realistic," Miss Dillon said. "We are asking for what we think is a mere mor-

Birmingham

"We believe this 5 per cent increase is justifiable and that you could give it," she said. "It would mean a great deal to the morale of Birmingham teachers."

12-17-58

Miss Dillon said she could understand the board's refusal of a 20 per cent increase request refused by the board a month ago.

IN HER APPEARANCE Friday, however, she offered statistics showing how the raise could be financed.

The board rejected the figures, saying they were based on estimates and not cash on hand.

"If we could be sure the money was on hand or would be on bond, we would give the teachers the raise they deserve," Board President T. R. Broom said.

Miss Dillon was reminded that a previous motion promises a salary increase to city teachers if a surplus in funds becomes available.

OTHER ACTION of the board included:

1. Allocation of an extra $2500 to the Birmingham Educational TV Assn. for its September payrolls, if other school boards in the area will grant proportionate aid.

2. Agreement to get financial estimates from city certified public accountants in preparation for the annual school accounts audit this Summer.

3. Appointment of James S. Goodson as principal of the new Carver Negro High School. Goodson now is principal of the Finley Avenue school.

Judge Orders Teachers Restored To Positions

World P'Ham, Alabama
Wed 12-7-59.

TUSCUMBIA, Ala. (SNS)—Circuit Judge Clifford J. Delony of Colbert County has issued a ruling directing the Colbert County Board of Education to restore two Negro teachers to their teaching jobs.

His significant ruling came Sept. 30 when he said "a Writ of Mandamus forthwith issue from the court directed to A. Y. Sibley, Henry Chaney, Glen Reynolds, Mrs. Glayds Durham, V. M. Bolton and Ralph Guthrie as Superintendent and members of the Colbert County Board of Education ordering, directing and commanding that the said respondents re-instate Forrest L. Mitchell and Emma B. Rogers as teachers in the public School system of Colbert County, Alabama forthwith."

4m(4)

Judge Delony also "ordered" the Colbert County Board of Education to "pay all the costs of this proceeding."

Atty. Arthur D. Shores, representing the two dismissed teachers, filed court papers in Nov., 1958 asking that the "continuing services status teachers" be reinstated. The hearing before Judge Delony came Dec. 22, 1958. The action was brought under the Alabama Teachers Tenure Act.

The far-reaching ruling by Judge Delony asserted: "Petitinoers were and are teachers on continuing service status and the reason given by (the Colbert County Board of Education) for attempting to terminate the contracts of the petitioners was 'justifiable decrease in the number of teaching positions'. The Court makes the furthering finding of fact that at the time of the attempted termination of the contracts of the petitioners that there were a number of teachers of the same race as the petitioners retained and hired to teach in the Colbert County School System who had not attained continuing service status. The Court finds the purpose and intent of the Tenure Act, as passed by the Legislature of Alabama, was to secure permanancy in the teaching force and also set grounds for concellation of employment contracts of teachers on continuing in the service status and set out 'justifiable decrease in number of teaching positions' as one of the grounds, however; even though by status' justifiable decrease in number of teaching positions' is recognized a ground for the concellation of a permanent tenure contract it is not contemplated by the statute that a school board might dismiss a teacher who had attained continuing service status and retain in his or her place a teacher who had not attained continuing service status. Such an act would be wholly unauthorized and not provided for by law."

Atty. Shores was the first Alabama lawyer to seek facilitation of a teacher's protection under the State Teachers Tenure Law. He has participated in most of the precendent-making decisions in this area of teacher-protection legislation. Judge Delony relied in his opinion on a case arising in Pickens County which Atty. Shores had represented a contract - cancelled teacher.

Suggests Law To Keep Teachers From Extra Jobs

TALLAHASSEE — (UPI) — Sen. J. Emory Cross of Gainesville Wednesday suggested a law prohibiting school teachers from taking outside jobs to supplement their income.

But Rep. W. C. Herrell of Miami said the state has as much business telling teachers what to do in their spare time as it does telling lawyers the kind of cases they can handle.

"We should pay our teachers enough and keep them in the classroom full-time,' Cross declared in questioning School Superintendent Thomas Bailey closely about his request for a 57 million dollar budget increase in the next two years.

Members of the House and Senate Appropriations committees are sitting in on cabinet hearings on the proposed 858 million dollar state budget which will require new taxes unless drastically cut.

Cross did not say what salary he considered "enough,' but indicated he would not go for any large raises.

Most Florida teachers have part-time jobs outside the school room. Some even have worked at the race tracks during the season.

"There is nothing we can do about it,' Bailey said. "Teachers like anyone else, are ambitious to earn extra money to support their families.

Sen. Tom Adams of Orange Park, chairman of the appropriations committee, objected to teachers taking on night classes in the adult and vocational education programs after spending all day teaching school.

He said the extra load cuts their teaching efficiency and interferes with regular work.

But Bailey said there is no other source to draw from for teachers for special programs and he feels night classes are less taxing than other types of part-time work.

Sen. Wilson Carraway of Tallahassee, chairman of the Spending Committee, said the next Legislature might cut out entirely or dramatically curtail special school programs for adults, exceptional children, kindergarten, summer enrichment and the like. He said the state is not obligated to spend money for this type program. The counties can offer them or students foot the bill themselves, he said.

"I am very much alarmed at the rapid expansion of the school program and the state's ability to finance it,' he said.

"It may be old-fashioned, but I feel the states primary obligation and responsibility is to grades 1-12," he added.

White Man's Case Settled, Negro Waits

JACK[illegible] school board was [illegible] contract to Dr. Garr[illegible] her, who was dismissed as [illegible] trial education supervisor, while a similar case, involving a Negro, still is pending.

The issuance of the contract, with back pay for Fortner, was ordered in a writ of mandamus handed down by Circuit Judge Charles A. Luckie. Fired last July for alleged laxity, Fortner's salary is $8,500 a year.

William D. Sweet, Negro school principal, a veteran educator, earning $7,270 a year has his case pending.

Both were targets of school board complaints because $60,550 in funds were expended by the time two thirds of the last school year had expired, despite warnings of budget limitations.

Rural School Teacher Pay Shows Gain

Evening Star
Washington, D. C.
APR 14 1959

By the Associated Press

The country school teacher is slowly closing the salary gap that separates him from his colleague in the city—but he still has a way to go.

This was demonstrated in a statistical survey published today by the National Education Association.

The country teacher averages $4,013 a year and the city teacher $5,313, or about 25 per cent more. In comparison, 25 years ago the country made about 45 per cent—less than half—of what the city teacher got. Ten years ago the difference was about 29 per cent.

For purposes of its survey the NEA said that any teacher in a population area of 2,500 population or more was in an urban area, anything less than that was rural. The NEA figures also indicate there are 750,000 teachers in each category.

The NEA's figures show that in terms of purchasing power, using 1958-9 dollars, the average salary of urban classroom teachers has risen from $3,636 to $5,313 in the last quarter-century.

In the same period, and on the same basis, the salaries of all wage and salary workers rose from $2,404 to $4,341. The percentage increase was 46 per cent for teachers, and 80 per cent for all workers.

Atlanta Teachers Seek Pay Boost

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga
12-10-59

By JOEL W. SMITH

The Board of Education Monday night received a resolution from the Atlanta Public School Teachers Association calling for a two-step salary increase beginning in 1960.

The resolution requesting the salary increase was presented by Roger H. Derthick, president of the Association.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement reminded Mr. Derthick that some 1,400 Atlanta teachers are not eligible for membership in the group he represented and inquired as to whether all teachers ever work together on mutual problems.

"I think there is an area in which we can work together," Mr. Derthick said.

ENROLLMENT 104,191

In her monthly report to the Board, Dr. Jarrell said the enrollment for the 1959-60 school term currently stands at 104,191 and predicted it will climb to an estimated 120,000.

14m4

Dr. Jarrell also pointed out that the schools are better staffed and better organized, and indicated the schools are also doing a better job in rendering service to the exceptional children.

ACTION DELAYED ON WESTSIDE HIGH SITE

Action was delayed on the site of the new Westside High School. After considerable discussion the Board approved a motion by Dr. Clement calling for a definite decision at least at the December 14 meeting.

Oby T. Brewer, vice chairman of the Building and Grounds Committee, recommended that condemnations proceedings to acquire the original site on Peek Road be suspended.

Mr. Brewer said the committee would attempt to re-negotiate with Bell Realty Co., for the original site or would select one of the other sites under consideration.

Protest "Unsatisfactory" Rating Given Teacher Who Aided Student

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 7-23-59

CHICAGO — (ANP) — The Chicago Branch, NAACP, has called on Superintendent of Schools Benjamin C. Willis to investigate the "unsatisfactory" rating given Virgil Vogel, a teacher who interceded on behalf of a Negro boy in a racial incident at Harper High School.

The rating of "unsatisfactory" came on the heels of general harrassment of the teacher, according to Rev. Carl A. Fuqua, executive secretary of the Chicago Branch NAACP.

14m(4)

"It appears that this teacher might be the victim of persecution because he came to the defense of this Negro boy," Rev. Fuqua said. He charged that the Board of Education procedures covering the giving of an unsatisfactory rating were apparently not followed in the case of Vogel, a teacher for 17 years.

"An unsatisfactory rating could jeopardize Vogel's career," Rev. Fuqua declared.

THE "EXPLANATION"

According to Rev. Fuqua, Vogel was told by his principal John T. McMahon, that he was being given a rating of unsatisfactory because he could not control his classes. Harper High has been the scene of several threatened racial incidents, and extra policemen have been on duty there in the last year because of tension.

Board of Education procedure calls for an assistant superintendent, the district superintendent and the principal to confer with a teacher who is about to be given a rating of unsatisfactory, Rev. Fuqua said.

Vogel has taught summer school for the past four years, and is expecting to teach this year too. Ordinarily, a rating of excellent is required in order to get a summer teaching assignment.

In a letter to Dr. Willis, Rev. Fuqua said Vogal complained that since he attempted to stop an attack on the lone Negro boy in Harper High, and reported the attacker's names, he has received profane telephone calls, his car has been attacked, and other attempts to intimidate, h'm have been made.

Rev. Fuqua urged that the board and the school take a strong stand against Hooliganism.

Fired Missouri Teachers Seek Court Rehearing

11 Discharged Instructors Blame Bias For Dismissal

ST. LOUIS (NNPA) — The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals is asked to reverse the decision of the Federal District Court here that racial discrimination has not been proved as the cause for the wholesale dismissal of all 11 colored teachers at Moberly, Mo., when public schools there were desegregated.

In an appeal brief filed on behalf of the colored teachers, the NAACP asserts that the evidence, "objectively appraised, compels the conclusion of racial discrimination was the sole motivating factor" in firing the colored teachers in Moberly.

The NAACP attorneys contend that the action of the Moberly Board of Education was "arbitrary and irrational" and based solely on the color of the dismissed teachers.

The colored teachers had taught in Lincoln School, a combination elementary - secondary Jim Crow school, from one to 30 years before the schools were desegregated and the Lincoln School abandoned during the 1955-56 school term.

After the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, the Moberly Board of Education adopted a plan of desegregation which called for the abandonment of the Lincoln School and the absorption of the colored pupils into the remaining schools.

AFTER DESEGREGATION

The changeover seemed to necessitate 11 fewer teachers, that is, the total teaching force at Lincoln. Actually, there were only seven teachers less after desegregation. In 1954-55, a total of 98 were employed — 87 white and 11 colored. In 1955-56, 91 teachers were employed, all of whom were white.

Faced with an apparent need to reduce the teaching force, the Superintendent on April 11, 1955, wrote the school board setting out the training and experience of all the teachers in the school system.

He informed the board that there would be a need for 11 fewer teachers, that in reviewing the training and experience of both the white and colored teachers, he found the board's standards met by both groups, and concluded that the dismissal of one teacher to keep another employed would not be justified.

Colored teachers met with the board prior to its formal meeting of April 13, 1955, and were assured that they would be given consideration. At the meeting which followed, the board adopted the recommendations of the superintendent and ended the contracts of four white teachers.

The colored teachers were qualified to fill the vacant positions in the elementary and junior high schools. But the board then voted to end the contracts of all colored teachers, who were notified of the board's action on April 16, 1956.

Between May 4, 1955, and August 8, 1955, 12 white teachers were hired, three of whom had had no prior teaching experience, and on June 6, 1956, additional white teachers were hired.

EXPECTED EMPLOYMENT

The colored teachers contend that they met all the qualifications to teach in Moberly, that while they had no tenure, they expected continued employment as long as their services were satisfactory.

They also contend that when it became evident that a reduction of 11 teachers was not required because the contracts of three whites teachers were being terminated, the three best qualified colored teachers should have been retained and assigned to the vacant positions.

Afterwards, when vacancies occurred prior to the ending of the school term, they maintain, the colored teachers were entitled to consideration before any other applicants.

The failure to renew the contracts or to reemploy the colored teachers, under the circumstances, NAACP lawyers assert, constitutes unlawful discrimination, based on color, in violation of the 14th Amendment.

The school board holds that color was not involved, that the colored teachers were not retained or reemployed because they were not as qualified as the teachers retained on April 13, 1955, or those subsequently employed to teach in the Moberly schools.

All of the colored teachers, except Miss Yutha Hughes, held degrees from Lincoln University at Jefferson City, Mo., a state institution.

13 YEARS EXPERIENCE

One of the colored teachers, Mrs. Mary Ella Tymony, when the University of Missouri, dropped its color bars, enrolled there and received a Master's degree. She taught American History, Sociology and Speech in the Lincoln School. She had taught in Moberly for 13 years and had a total of 36 years of teaching experience.

Mrs. Ella Mae Pitts had taught at Moberly for eight years and had a total of 14 years of teaching experience. She taught the third and fourth grades.

Mrs. Lotus Harris had taught for 20 years. After teaching at Moberly from 1932 to 1942, she retired but returned in 1946 and taught until the end of the 1954-55 school term. She taught the second grade.

Miss Naomi Brooks, who brought the suit, had taught at Moberly for two years. She taught commercial subjects and citizenship.

Turner Washington had taught at Moberly for nine years. He had a total of 25 years of teaching experience. He taught general mathematics, geometry, health, biology and physical education.

Mrs. Hughes had taught the first grade at Moberly for 30 years.

Attorneys for the colored teachers are Robert L. Carter of New York City, general counsel for the NAACP; Herbert O. Reid, a Washington, D. C., attorney, and R. L. Witherspoon, a St. Louis lawyer. Also on the brief are Sidney R. Redmond, a St. Louis lawyer, and Lee V. Swinton, a Kansas City, Mo. lawyer.

Negro teachers fired because of their race

ST. LOUIS — Contending that Negro teachers were discharged solely because of their race when the public schools of Moberly, Mo., were integrated, the NAACP has filed a brief in the Court of Appeals, here asking for reversal of a lower court ruling upholding the dismissals.

The brief was filed on behalf of six of the 11 discharged teachers—Miss Naomi Brooks, Miss Yutha Hughes, Mrs. Ella Mae Pitts, Mrs. Lotus Harris, Mrs. Mary Ella Tymony and Turner Washington.

The teachers, who had been employed from one to 30 years, were dismissed when the Lincoln School to which they had been assigned was abandoned in the 1955-56 school term and the students transferred to other schools. Although the school board said that the closing of the Negro school required a reduction in the number of teachers, it proceeded to employ three new inexperienced white teachers, the NAACP said.

The NAACP first challenged the board's action in the United States District Court. The court held that there had been no racial discrimination in the termination of the contracts of the Negro teachers. It is this decision that the NAACP is appealing in the first action involving teacher tenure to reach the Court of Appeals.

Carl Henderson, superintendent of schools, conceded that the Negro teachers had performed satisfactorily, that they met the required academic qualifications, and that they would have been retained but for the integration of the schools which necessitated fewer teachers However, he contended, the three newly appointed white teachers possessed intangible qualities, such as personality, essential to good teaching in a greater degree than any of the experienced Negro teachers.

Three of the six appellants have since found employment in integrated public schools in other cities. Miss Moore teaches in East St. Louis, Ill. Miss Hughes is employed as a teacher by the Robertson, Mo., board of education. Mrs. Tymony found employment in the Kansas City, Mo., school system.

Dismissal of teachers appealed

ST. LOUIS (NNPA) — The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals is being asked to reverse the decision of the Federal District Court here that racial discrimination had not been proved as the cause for the wholesale dismissal of all 11 colored teachers at Moberly, Mo., when public schools were desegregated.

In an appeal brief filed on behalf of the colored teachers, the NAACP asserts that the evidence, "objectively appraised, compels the conclusion that racial discrimination was the sole motivating factor" in firing the colored teachers in Moberly.

The NAACP attorneys contend that the action of the Moberly Board of Education was "arbitrary and irrational" and based solely on the color of the dismissed teachers.

THE COLORED teachers had taught in the Lincoln School, a combination elementary - secondary Jim Crow school, from one to 30 years before the schools were desegregated and the Lincoln School abandoned during the 1955-56 school term.

After the 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools, the board of education adopted a plan of desegregation which called for the abandonment of the Lincoln School and the absorption of the colored pupils into the remaining schools.

The changeover seemed to necessitate 11 fewer teachers, that is, the total teaching force at Lincoln. Actually, there were only seven teachers less after desegregation.

IN 1954-55, a total of 98 teachers were employed —87 white and 11 colored. In 1955-56, 91 teachers were employed, all of whom were white.

Faced with an apparent need to reduce the teaching force, the superintendent of schools on April 11, 1955, wrote the school board setting out the training and experience of all the teachers in the school system.

He informed the board that there would be a need for 11 fewer teachers, that in reviewing the training and experience of both the white and colored teachers, he found the board's standards met by both groups, and concluded that the dismissal of one teacher to keep another employed would not be justified.

Colored teachers met with the board prior to its formal meeting of April 13, 1955, and were assured that they would be given consideration. At the meeting which followed, the board adopted the recommendations of the superintendent and ended the contracts of four white teachers.

The colored teachers were qualified to fill the vacant positions in the elementary and junior high schools. But the board then voted to end the contracts of all colored teachers, who were notified of the board's action on April 13, 1955.

BETWEEN MAY 4, 1955 and Aug. 8, 1955, 12 white teachers were hired, three of whom had had no prior teaching experience, and on June 8, 1956, additional white teachers were hired.

The colored teachers contend that they met all the qualifications to teach in Moberly, that while they had no tenure they expected continued employment as long as their services were satisfactory.

They also contend that when it became evident that a reduction of 11 teachers was not required because the contracts of three white teachers were being terminated, the three best qualified colored teachers should have been retained and assigned to the vacant positions.

Afterwards, when vacancies occurred prior to the ending of the school term, they maintain, the colored teachers were entitled to consideration before any other applicants.

THE FAILURE to renew the contracts or to reemploy the colored teachers, under the circumstances, NAACP lawyers assert, constitutes unlawful discrimination, based on color, in violation of the 14th Amendment.

The school board contends that color was not involved, that the colored teachers were not retained or reemployed because they were not as qualified as the teachers retained on April 13, 1955, or those subsequently employed to teach in the Moberly schools.

All of the colored teachers, except Miss Yutha Hughes, held degrees from Lincoln University at Jefferson City, Mo., a state institution.

One of the colored teachers, Mrs. Mary Ella Tymony, when the University of Missouri dropped its color bars, enrolled there and received a Master's degree. She taught American Problems, Missouri History, Sociology and Speech in the Lincoln School.

She had taught in Moberly for 13 years and had a total of 36 years of teaching experience.

MRS. ELLA MAE PITTS had taught at Moberly for eight years and had a total of 14 years of teaching experience. She taught the third and fourth grades.

Mrs. Lotus Harris had taught for 20 years. After teaching at Moberly from 1932 to 1942, she retired but returned in 1946 and taught until the end of the 1954-55 school term. She taught the second grade.

Miss Naomi Brooks, who brought the suit, had taught at Moberly for two years. She taught commercial subjects and citizenship.

Turner Washington had taught at Moberly for nine years. He had a total of 25 years to teaching experience. He taught general mathematics, geometry, health, biology and physical education.

Miss Hughes had taught the first grade at Moberly for 30 years.

Attorneys for the colored teachers are Robert L. Carter of New York City, general counsel for the NAACP; Herbert O. Reid, a Washington, D.C., attorney and R. L. Witherspoon, a St. Louis lawyer. Also on the brief are Sidney R. Redmond, a St. Louis lawyer, and Lee V. Swinton, a Kansas City, Mo., lawyer.

NAACP Seeks Reinstatement Of Ousted School Teachers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The United States Supreme Court has been asked to review a lower federal court ruling which sustained the refusal of the Moberly, Mo. school board to renew the contracts of 11 Negro public school teachers when the system was desegregated.

A petition seeking a hearing on the case by the high court was filed here on Sept. 14 by NAACP General Counsel Robert L. Carter of New York City and Robert L. Witherspoon, St. Louis attorney. Signing the petition as of counsel were Mrs. Irma Robbins Feder, Lee V. Swinton and William L. Taylor.

Eleven Negro teachers with service of from one to 30 years were discharged by the Moberly board in 1955 when Negro pupils were absorbed into schools attended by white pupils. Although the board subsequently employed additional white teachers it refused to reinstate any colored teachers despite their qualifications and experience.

The teachers whose contracts had been terminated enlisted the aid of the NAACP and filed suit in the United States District Court "contending that the refusal to renew their contracts was based upon discrimination barred by the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment."

The case was tried on its merits in August, 1956. Two years later, on Oct. 2, 1958, the court upheld the Moberly school board. This decision was appealed to the United State Court of Appeals which on June 17, 1959, sustained the opinion and judgment of the lower court.

Contending that the lower courts' ruling cannot be reconciled with previous decisions of the Supreme Court and that the case represents an issue of great public importance, the petition asks for a review of the lower courts' decisions and a hearing of the case before the Supreme Court.

New Jersey Negro Claims Bias Blocked Teaching Job

Montgomery

TRENTON, N. J. (AP) — The superintendent of schools and the president of the board of education of Madison Township Tuesday denied racial discrimination in refusing to hire a Negro teach-

Montgomery

Dr. Eugene W. Schronk, superintendent of schools, said he did not consider Charles H. Williams of New Brunswick qualified to teach a group of younger retarded students.

And Richard Pine, president of the board of education, said it went along the superintendent's recommendation.

Schronk said he would be willing to recommend Williams for a job if a suitable vacancy occurred for which he was qualified and Pine said the board would not hesitate to accept Schronk's recommendation.

Pine and Schronk testified at a hearing conducted by Dr. John P. Milligan, director of the state division of discrimination, on a complaint against them by Williams.

Williams, who holds a bachelor of science degree in education and a limited state certificate to teach in elementary schools, contends he was denied consideration for a job because he is a Negro.

Milligan said he hoped to reach a decision by Easter.

There was testimony at the hearing that no Negroes are employed by the Madison Township Board of Education, that no classes below the fourth grade are taught by men, and that more than 20 of the 90 teachers in the school system have less certification than Williams.

Schronk testified that the post for which Williams applied is now filled by a teacher without special experience with retarded children but with many years of experience as a regular teacher. He said he considered this an important point.

344 Teachers In Oklahoma Lose Jobs After Integration, Ex-Gov. Says

New York, March 16—A total of 344 Negro teachers have lost their jobs since the beginning of school integration in Oklahoma, Raymond Gray, former governor of the state, said today.

In a signed article in the new issue of Look Magazine, Gary reported that only about 10 Negro teachers are working in integrated schools because individual school boards, with rare exceptions, have not yet seen fit to hire Negro teachers."

He termed this "the one really disturbing problem" that has resulted from integration.

Otherwise, Gary said, school integration in Oklahoma has benefited taypayers, teachers and students, pointing out that the continuing elimination of separate school systems for whites and Negroes has:

Saved taxpayers a million dollars a year.

Enabled teachers' salaries to rise from an average of $3,500 to $4,700 a year.

Spurred the building of 4,200 new classrooms.

Gary noted in the Look article that integration was presented to Oklahomans as a means to achieve better schools, and that "a single fist fight" was the only violence that occurred.

He warned, however, that some areas of the South with "special problems" will require "10 or 20 years" to accept integration and urged Northerners "not to push them into attempting a change that cannot be made overnight."

what date, and to which Committee it has been referred," said Senator Hennings.

"Therefore," said the Subcommittee Chairman, "This list has been perpared, covering legislation introduced in the first two months of 1959, to provide a ready reference in answering such inquiries."

Senator Hennings went on to point out that the forms of the legislation include: resolutions expressing the sense or understanding of Congress; amendments to the Constitution of the United States; amendments to the Federal Criminal Code; authorization for civil remedies by the Government in certain cases; and authorization for other Government programs.

Among the subjects covered are: protection of Federal voting rights; public school desegregation; posting of voting information in post offices; Federal action concerning bombings of schools and places of religious worship; restatement of Congressional intention in various statutory provisions; censorship; civil rights; government employees and loyalty-security matter; newsmen and sources of information; freedom of information; service of warrants by military personnel; wire-tapping; judicial review of deportation orders; and powers of the Supreme Court to review lower court decisions.

Of course, not every bill has been further referred to a subcommittee for hearings. But to date the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittees has been assigned these bills: S. 435; S. 456; S. 499; S. 810; S. 957; S. 960; S. 1084; and will commence public hearings thereon Wednesday morning, March 18, 1959 in Room 318 (the Caucus Room), Old Senate Office Building Washington D. C.

The Senator said that 38 such bills had been introduced in the Senate of the United States by 80 different Senators and referred to 4 standing committees this year.

In the U. S. House of Representatives, 205 such bills have been introduced by 75 Congressmen and referred to 8 standing committees this year.

"Waiting To See What NAACP Does"

South Norfolk Delays Offering Contracts To Negro Teachers

Journal & Guide P. & Norfolk Va

By P. BERNARD YOUNG JR.

SOUTH NORFOLK — South Norfolk's Negro principals and teachers will not be offered contracts for the next school term "until we see what the NAACP does" about having local schools desegregated, Superintendent William J. Story has notified school personnel.

The Journal and Guide learned of this development from thoroughly reliable sources this week.

14m(4)

Comment from Supt. Story was not possible. His secretary said Thursday he was "out of town."

D-4-4-59

THE CHAIRMAN of the school board, Roy Britton, declined to confirm or deny the report.

The inference the Guide drew from his remarks was that the information was correct.

He said: "Mr. Story handles all such inquiries as you are making. Ordinarily, about this time of the year—but on no specific date—he recommends teachers he considers qualified for teaching contracts for the next term. So far, he has submitted to the board no such recommendations for hiring or re-hiring (Negro) teachers."

He declined to further comment.

SUPT. STORY, who is also a member of the Virginia State Board of Education by appointment of Governor J. Lindsay Almond, has been a most outspoken advocate for "massive resistance" and the continuation of separate public schools for the two races.

When six Norfolk schools, ordered integrated by Federal Court, did not open last September, under Supt. Story's leadership South Norfolk quickly admitted as many white students as possible in day classes, and then set up a special night school for displaced white Norfolk pupils from junior and senior high schools.

Nearly a thousand Norfolkians were eventually enrolled in South Norfolk. When Norfolk's closed schools reopened Feb. 2, several hundred remained in South Norfolk's special classes. A number reentered their former Norfolk schools.

OFFICIALS OF the South Norfolk chapter of the NAACP have publicly stated their intention to have some Negro students admitted to now all-white schools. Attorneys for the chapter have indicated appropriate action will be instituted before next September.

Mayor L. L. Briggs Jr. has sharply criticized NAACP leaders for their position on the schools question.

Earlier this month he called upon "the intelligent Negro citizens of our city to eradicate these agitators" seeking integration.

March Of Dimes Grants $125,000 To Tuskegee

Tuskegee Institute School of Nursing announced today that is has been awarded a $125,000 March of Dimes grant to increase its student enrollment and teaching facilities.

The grant, announced jointly by Dr L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee, and Basil O'Conner, president of the National Foundation (formerly "for Infantile Paralysis ,, is part of the more than $1,000,000 allocations announced today for education in the health professions by The National Foundation.

The award today brings the total support from March of Dimes funds to the nursing program at Tuskegee since 1945 to almost $1,500,000. During these years, the nursing program has gained recognition throughout the South and in 1957 its basic program in nursing was fully accredited by The National League for Nursing. Enrollment has increased to 160 students and is expected to climb to 180 in the near future. Tuskegee is now the only school in the State of Alabama training Negro nurses.

Dean Lillian Harvey, director ofthe program and deanofthe

Dean Lillian Harvey, director of the program and dean of the school of nursing, said the new aim at Tuskegee is to have its Graduate Nurse Supplementary Program fully accredited. In addition, she said, the school will expand its work in the field of public health nursing. Its public health work now includes a school health program in 13 local schools.

In addition to educational grants. The National Foundation also announced research and clinical investigation allocations amounting to more htan $2,500,000. These allocations are made to implement the new program of the National Foundation which embraces birth defects and arthritis in addition to polio.

Tuskegee Holds Course To Aid Rural Planning

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Tuskegee Institute's role in helping people to discover and work toward planned solution of their problems was highlighted in a five-day orientation and training program organized and conducted for Agricultural Missions, Inc. here recently.

Basis for the program was a critical analysis of the crucial changes taking place in the rural economy and the effects of these changes upon the people involved. The program was presented in the form of forenoon seminars, and field trips each afternoon to observe a cross-section of life and living in areas of Macon county, which surround Tuskegee institute.

Under the general leadership of the division of public relations the program was organized to include rural religious extension, essentials of a balanced community extension service program, rural health, and rural community planning.

Howard, Tuskegee Among 17 Schools With ABC Grants

WASHINGTON, D. C. (ANP) — The U. S. Atomic Energy commission announced that Howard university and Tuskegee institute are among 17 colleges and universities which have summer institutes in radiation biology for high school science teachers.

The institutes are conducted by the AEC and the National Science foundation.

The Atomic Energy commission pays operational and equipment costs of the courses, while the foundation provides stipends and travel allowances for the participating teachers and limited allowances for their dependents.

Approximately 20 high school teachers were selected for both Howard and Tuskegee.

The teacher-students have been provided with teaching equipment kits, specifically tailored for demonstration and experimentation in the class room. Each kit consists primarily of a Geiger-Mueller combination scaler and count-rate meter, a simplified cloud chamber, a quartz fiber ionization chamber analysis unit, a spint-hariscope, and radio-authographic equipment.

Upon successful completion of the course, the teachers retain the kits for use in their own classrooms.

$14,515 Atomic Study Grant Given Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—The Tuskegee Institute School of Agriculture has been granted $14,515 by the Atomic Energy Commission, and will this year offer a course in nuclear technology as applied to the life sciences. The announcement was made by President Dr. L. H. Foster.

The grant is to be used to buy equipment for the course conducted by Dr. B. D. Mayberry, professor of biology and horticulture, and Dr. J. H. M. Henderson, head of the department of biology.

In requesting the funds last year, Dr. L. A. Potts, dean of the School of Agriculture, stated the two-fold objective of the course: (1) to acquaint the student with the fundamental principles of atomic theory and radiation, and (2) to teach methods and techniques in using radioactive isotope as a tool in studying life processes in plants and animals.

AT TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE are Sylvia Lalamentik of Jakarta, Indonesia, left: Assefa Gebrewald of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, center; and Cuthbert Padmore of Grenada, West Indies.

ADD TO YOUR LIST of charming wives of college presidents, Mrs. Luther Foster whose illustrious father-in-law directs Tuskegee Institute's functioning. Always gracious, lovable and attentive, Vera is one of the nation's most loved young matrons.

Mrs. Todd Named To Staff Job At Tuskegee Institute

The Montgomery Advertiser

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Mrs. Carrie M. Todd has been appointed to the position of assistant to the register of Tuskegee Institute.

Mrs. Todd formerly taught school in the Montgomery city school system, a position which she held for three years and won recognition for being the first Negro teacher of conversational French in the public elementary schools of Montgomery. She has also served as a teacher in the Barbour County school system and as a disbursement clerk for Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Mrs. Todd has been part-time employed by Tuskegee Institute for the past nine years. She is an educational product of schools in Eufaula, Knoxville, and Tuskegee Institute. She is a graduate of the Laura C. Buck McCray School of Business and holds a certificate for IBM operations.

As an undergraduate student here, she was an active member of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Kappa Mu National Honor Society, Future Teachers of America, Little Theatre, Social Studies Club, YWCA, Junior Counselors, Campus Digest, Tuskeana Staff, Drill Team, and The Associated Women Students.

Mrs. Todd was the recipient of many outstanding awards, scholarships, and achievements including the Gover Prize and the Education Faculty Prize. She is also listed in the 1953-54 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. Mrs. Todd graduated with high honors, receiving the B.S. degree in elementary education and is at present pursuing courses leading to the Master's degree in supervision and administration in education.

She holds active membership in the Washington Chapel AME Church, NEA, ASTA, ASCD, Les Vingt Dames Federated Club of Montgomery, and others. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar L. McDonald of Washington Ave., Tuskegee Institute and is the mother of four-year-old Gwendolyn Denise Todd.

Tuskegee Choir appears with Atlanta symphony

The Afro American

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE (ANP)—The Tuskegee concert choir scored another triumph recently when it performed with the Atlanta Symphony orchestra in concert at Logan hall on the campus. Both the choir and the orchestra scored a big hit with the audience.

The 60-voice choir combined with the 80-piece ensemble in two selections under the baton of Henry Sophin. The Atlanta orchestra is ranked among the top 35 major orchestras in the nation.

THE CHOIR sang "Festival Te Deum" by Gustav Holst, and Beethoven's "Hallelujah" from Mount of Olives. Radford Patterson directed the choir.

The Tuskegee concert choir first achieved national fame when it appeared in the opening of the Radio City Music hall, New York in 1932-33, a few months after its first concert tour. The group marked its 25th anniversary last year by returning to the famous music hall.

Etta Moten

WE LIKE TO keep up with some folks like Etta Moten, the Chicago beauty [illegible] Songbird, Etta. Mrs. [illegible] private life, keeps on the gos so much, that it's pretty hard to pin her down. If you don't hear from her, she is no doubt in Africa attending a celebration . . . or in New York auditioning . . . or at home, working hard on her charitable ventures. Thinking of the National Council's national convention in Dee Cee this week, reminisces of the golden days when Bethune drew throngs of women to the pow-wow, when Edith Sampson, Bess Motch, Dorothy Ferebee, Bessie Garvin, Thomasina Norford, Vivian Carter Mason, Arenia Mallory, Rosa Gragg, Eleanor Dailey and her sister, the late Harriet B. Hall, Ethel Harris, Sue Bailey Thurman, were always on hand. Tommy Norford's cozy apartment was the focal point for jam sessions following the meetings wherein things were rehashed ad infinitum . . . and spaghetti or baked beans were served at midnight to keep up the guests' strength for more talks. Those were the days.

Tuskegee Board Of Trustees To Meet Oct. 30

Tuskegee Pupils Receive Training Thru TV Courses

Thurs. 9-10-59

Alabama continues its leadership in utilization of educational TV this Fall with the Tuskegee High School participation.

Tuskegee is one of more than 100 Alabama public schools composed of 65,000 students who will tap some of the finest teaching facilities in the State by viewing ETV as an aid to their classroom learning.

E. W. Wadsworth, principal of the Tuskegee schools, said pupils of the elementary grades are using TV facilities to compliment their studies in Alabama history, music, and for special programs events. The hours of broadcast do not coincide so that high school class-work can be tuned in so far this year.

At the request of educators, effective Tuesday, September 8, the Alabama ETV network channels 2, 7, and 10 started its telecast day at 8:30 a. m. and continues to 10 p. m. This year's fall programming will have the highest percentage of live telecasting in the AET network history. (It has been presenting more live programming per day than any other TV operation in the State during the past several years). Of the 67½ hour broadcast week, in-school courses are presented from 8:30 a. m. until 2:30 p m. These originate in studios on the campuses of Auburn, the University of Alabama, and in a Birmingham studio operated by the five public school systems of Jefferson County.

A number of new courses, including Russian, have been added this year to the Alabama ETV curriculum. The Alabama State Board of Education is the only such board that makes possible for home viewers, without a secondary school certificate, to work toward a high school diploma by taking certain ETV courses.

The local principal said credit would be allowed Tuskegee students who take TV courses under conditions which meet with the state standards and the approval of the principal.

Tuskegee Choir To Perform Sunday With Atlanta Symphony

Atlanta Daily Tribune, p. 3

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — The Tuskegee Institute Concert Choir will perform with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in an unprecedented appearance Sunday, Oct. 11, 4 p.m. in the Institute's Logan Hall auditorium. The 60-voice choir will combine with the 80-piece ensemble in two selections under the direction of symphony conductor Henry Sophin.

The choir will be heard in FESTIVAL TE DEUM by Gustav Holst, and Beethoven's "Hallelujah, from MOUNT OF OLIVES. Relford Patterson, director of the choir, said the group will perform without the scores.

During the last 15 years, the Atlanta Symphony has emerged from an amateur orchestra of Atlanta high school musicians to an acclaimed virtuoso ensemble, ranked among the country's 25 major orchestras.

The Tuskegee choir achieved national prominence when it appeared in the opening of the Radio City Music Hall in 1932-33, a few months after its first concert tour. The concert group returned to the Radio City stage in 1958, marking the Hall's 25th anniversary.

Lincoln Prexy Challenges Tuskegee Grads

Says Fear, Pride Doom Grad Future

Defender Sat. 8-29-59

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—The 153 graduates of the Tuskegee Institute Summer Commencement were challenged to bury—not their talents—but fear and pride. The challenge came from Dr. Earl E. Dawson, president of Lincoln (Mo.) university, who addressed a commencement crowd of 500 at the Logan Hall auditorium, August 14.

Mr. Dawson saluted the graduates as "trustees of a great United States" who "have an important rendezvous with destiny," and admonished them that "the greatest mistake a man may make is to fear that he will make a mistake."

He likened their challenges to those received by the Biblical servants who received various talents. He centered attention on the third servant who buried his talent and was penalized with a total loss of talent.

SERVANT FAILS

The third servant failed to invest his talent wisely for two reasons—pride and fear—said Dr. Dawson. The third servant, he said, decided that if he took the risk and failed, he would very possibly be required to find the money somewhere to pay it back. He decided to do nothing, bury the money and sit tight.

"Behind this fear," he said, "was a very definite pride. It was a pride that resented the fact that his fellow servants had been assigned greater tasks than his. It was, furthermore, a pride that could not take a chance on failure. If he did nothing with the money, no one could ever prove that he could not have made a great success if he had wanted to do so."

The graduates included four officers commissioned through ROTC; one doctor of veterinary medicine, and 16 bachelors of science in education and 61 masters of education, the largest department represented.

Tuskegee Institute To Offer Couse In Nuclear Technology

Chronicle 8-29-59 Jackson, Miss.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—The Tuskegee Institute, School of Agriculture has been granted $14,516 by the Atomic Energy Commission, and will this year offer a course in nuclear technology as applied to the life sciences. The announcement was made today by Tuskegee president Dr. L. H. Foster.

The grant is to be used to buy equipment for the course conducted by Dr. B. D. Mayberry, professor of biology and horticulture, and Dr. J. H. M. Henderson, head of the Department of Biology.

Both men have expereince in tthe handling of isotopes.

Dr. Mayberry, who has the main responsibility for organizing and conducting the course, has had one year of training and three years of expereince with radioosotopes at Michigan State University. Dr. Henderson has completed the basic radioisotope techniques course at the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies.

In requesting the funds last year, Dr. L. A. Potts, dean of the School of Agriculture, stated the two-fold objective of the course: (1) to acquaint the student with the fundamental principles of atomic theory and radiation, and (2) to teach methods and techniques in susing radioactive isotope as a tool in studying life processes in plants and animals.

Ghana Accountant Views Tuskegee Institute Units

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Under sponsorship of the International Cooperation Administration, Washington, D.C., Isaac Ackom Mensah, college assistant and head of accounts department, Kumasi College of Technology, Kumasi, Ghana, West Africa, spent four days at Tuskegee Institute observing fiscal operations.

H. K. Logan, business manager, provided the opportunity for the Ghana accountant to acquire first-hand knowledge of the several units which operate through his office.

Mensah expressed some amazement at the size of the institute's operation, noting that the annual budget exceeds three million dollars and that the major services, including building construction and upkeep, are handled within the organization.

He found here a student body which was both friendly and helpful to him as he moved about the campus. Inquiring of the Kamusi College of Technology, Mensah said that it was a growing institution of 650 students with its major strengths in agriculture and technical training. He reported on the "excellent work" being done by Kojo Plange, a fellow Ghanaian who received both the bachelor and master's degrees at Tuskegee Institute. He has one of the most modern poultry developments at Kumasi College of Technology to be found in West Africa.

Dr. Mansah is one of more than a score of his countrymen to visit Tuskegee Institute within the last three years. He is optimistic over the progress made in Ghana since independence and foresees a great future based upon sound government operated in the total interest of all the people of Ghana.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Theodore R. Van Dellen

PERVERTED APPETITE

One of our readers asked about a 12-year-old boy who ate erasers, and a Roswell, N. Mex., teacher suggested that the lad might be hungry. "There was a little girl in my room who ate erasers. She was in poor general health and the physician found the child was not getting enough to eat."

Pica is the name of a condition in children who eat strange things. It occurs most often during the first three years of life but may continue much longer. These youngsters eat a variety of unsuitable substances such as sand, dirt, grass, broken glass, and animal droppings, flakes of paint, or cigarette butts.

Many are in good health whereas others are malnourished and sickly. But in general there is no rhyme or reason to the craving, even though it appears logical that there is an unconscious urge to obtain minerals and vitamins that are absent from the diet. I am at a loss as to what essential chemicals are present in erasers, but appreciate the fact that a hungry person may try to eat anything.

This craving for something the body lacks is used frequently to explain the proverbial perverted appetite of pregnant women. They have been known to nibble on clay, starch, dirt, ashes, charcoal, spices, and vinegar. Most authorities on the subject doubt that this tendency is related to bodily needs for certain vitamins and minerals.

Other reasons exist for these cravings. In some parts of the South, for example, tradition plays a role. Clay, cornstarch, baking soda, or flour may be consumed to relieve nausea or to prevent the child from being marked. A Tuskegee report showed that most of the "craving women" had all the food at home they required.

An English study concluded that although many craved fruits, vegetables and cake, there were almost as many who prefered coffee grounds, tooth paste, soap, paraffin, or other indigestible items with no food value.

Parents Also Resist Efforts of Colleges To Switch Emphasis

By ROBERT REMAKER
In The Wall Street Journal

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Dr. Luther Foster, president of Tuskegee institute, the famous Negro college here, edges forward in his chair and complains: "Of the 425 seniors who graduated here this year, six out of ten tried to go into teaching. We've got to change the emphasis."

Dr. Foster's concern seems well founded. In El Paso recently, 281 would-be Negro teachers applied for one job opening. In Waco, 150 Negro teachers vied for a single vacancy.

So great is the surplus of Negro teachers that they spill over into such prosaic jobs as mail carriers in New York, Washington, Nashville and St. Louis. In Jacksonville, eight of ten Negro mail carriers hold college degrees in teaching.

THESE FIGURES point up a growing problem for the South's Negro colleges: They continue to channel students into old grooves — teaching, the ministry, the law and embalming — where in the past Negroes have been able to succeed by giving services to fellow Negroes. They are failing, however, to train enough students for new job opportunities, in such fields as engineering, opening up for Negroes in some quantity for the first time.

This stumbling by Negro colleges comes ironically in the midst of the school segregation battle. While Negroes are struggling to improve educational facilities at the grade and high-school levels, via the integration route, Negro colleges are missing a big opportunity to move ahead, their critics claim.

THE IMPACT is not confined to the South. Graduates of Negro schools frequently migrate northward where demand for engineers and other technically-training graduates is keen but where holders of teaching degrees are more plentiful. The South, however, is more deeply involved.

Listen to an officer at the Martin company missile plant at Orlando, Fla.: "We have no Negro with an engineering degree on the payroll. If a Negro candidate met the job requirements, he'd be hired like anyone else."

SEARCHING for engineers this year, Martin representatives talked with five Negro graduates at Howard university in Washington, which has the only accredited Negro engineering school in the nation. None of the candidates measured up to Martin's requirements, the firm reports.

At the Douglas Aircraft company plant at Charlotte, N. C., a company spokesman reflecting on skilled openings for Negroes comments: "During the spring and summer around graduation time we might have three or four Negroes a week applying for jobs as electronic technicians, tool machine operators, or tool makers.

Their experience and training is limited. I'd call it sub par," then the spokesman emphasizes: "I'm not talking about abilities, but training. If the Negro meets the job we hire him. Race is no factor."

NEGROES COLLEGES and civic groups candidly admit they're behind the times. Few are more outspoken than Julius Thomas, director of industrial relations for the National Urban League, a nation-wide group dedicated to social and economic problems in Negro urban communities.

Rustling through a file in his New York office, Mr. Thomas brings out these statistice: In the nation's 79 Negro colleges (77 are in the South) 70 per cent of the 72,000 enrolled students in 1957-58 were in training as teachers. "This percentage has gone unchanged for 10 years," says Mr. Thomas, "and it shows a glaring weakness in Negro education — it's too lopsided."

MR. THOMAS continues: Of the 26,000 engineers who were graduated from accredited schools in the class of '59, only 156 were Negroes. "This is about the ratio for the past decade."

Why don't Negro educators sway from the over-crowded teaching profession into technical fields? They say they run into resistance from both students and parents. Dr. Paul Clifford, stocky cigar-puffing registrar at Atlanta univeristy, complains: "We have the facilities to double the enrollment in our school of business administration tomorrow, but students aren't interested. Yet, the number of requests we get for trained people is ten times the candidates available."

DR. GEORGE Gore Jr., president of Florida Agricultural and Mechanical university at Tallahassee, has similar trouble: "We have difficulty selling students on other things besides teaching," says Dr. Gore of his 2,800 students.

"They don't want to change and neither do their parents want them to." Dr. Gore adds that 90 per cent of the 340 members in the class of 1959 went into teaching, or tried to. "By comparison," Dr Geore says, "we don't have nearly enough graduates in nursing or pharmacy."

But not all the blame falls on the students. The colleges generally lack placement services. "We get from 10 to 15 letters a week offering our graduates jobs," says Atlanta University"s youthful dean, Dr. Thomas D. Jarrett. "We have no placement officer, and so some of these offers don't get proper attention. Somebody loses out."

MANY NEGRO colleges delegate placement to already overworked teachers. At Tuskegee, Dr. Foster says: "As of now, the deans have to make the important contacts with employers."

Also at work perpetuating certain deficiencies in Negro colleges: Southern Negro colleges created under the land-grant charters from the states are obliged by law in many cases to emphasize such trade-school courses as plastering and dress tailoring rather than advanced intellectual subjects. "Programs in these basic skills should be tapered off as we try to spark an interest in the sciences," says one Negro college administrator. "But these basic courses are kept on at full strength in too many cases, biting into budgets and channeling interests into traditional grooves," he added.

STUDENTS sometimes complain about the lack of guidance they get from college officials. isten To Miss Gene Hopkins 1959 graduate of Florida A. and M., one of some 500 applicants jockeying for the 440 Negro classroom openings in Jacksonville: "If I had had guidance when a freshman, I'd probably have studied something else."

Some Negro universities, belatedly aware they are behind times, are busy these days remolding curricula, expanding staffs in science departments and upgrading physical plants.

Negro colleges and industry are beginning to get together to improve training: Fifteen Negroes from the Lockheed plant at Marietta, Ga., completed courses recently in I.B.M. accounting at Atlanta University, for example.

AND WITHIN the last few weeks, Florida A. and M. asked Martin Co. officials for advice in curriculum changes in the university's two year, technician's training course. This will train Negroes in sub-professional technology, and the graduates, if qualified, could be hired on the Martin production line, in laboratories or as draftsmen.

"We started training in basic electronics last year — the same time we dropped clothes tailoring," says Dean Maxwell Thomas, of Florida A. and M.'s vocational technical training institute. "We had four graduates this year. Next fall we expect about 25 students to enroll."

TO OVERTAKE technical job opportunities, Negro colleges are battling on the financial front. Tuskegee expects to boost spending next year from $50,000 to about $80,000 in its engineering, chemistry, aircraft and trades program.

Tuskegee Offers Atomic Age Physics TV Course For Credit

Beginning the second semester Tuskegee Institute, in cooperation with the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and NBC, will offer the course, ATOMIC AGE PHYSICS for credit.

This course is designed for high school teachers of science, advanced college students, graduate students in education and in the sciences, and adult citizens interested in obtaining a better understanding of recent developments in the scientific world.

The purpose of the ATOMIC AGE PHYSICS course is to demonstrate techniques essential to effective science teaching, and to provide up-to-date information concerning recent developments in physics. Approximately 260 colleges and universities will offer credit on a nation wide basis for the course which will be telecast over 147 NBC-TV stations from 6:30 to 7:00 a.m. each week day morning, beginning February 11. The local station is WSFA-TV, channel 12, Montgomery, Ala.

The national teacher will be Dr. Harvey E. White, Professor and Vice Chairman of the Department of Physics of the University of California at Berkeley. The local teacher will be Mr. Ai-Chun Fung of the Department of Physics, Division of Natural Sciences, Tuskegee Institute.

In addition to the regular TV presentations, there will be a two-hour discussion session each week held on the campus of Tuskegee Institute at a time convenient for those registered. A mid-semester and final examination will be held during two of these periods. The course will yield three hours of credit on graduate or undergraduate level.

Registration will be held on the Tuskegee Institute campus on Friday and Saturday, January 30 and 31. To register for undergraduate credit the student must have completed one year each of college general physics and college general chemistry, and should have passed courses in differential and integral calculus.

For graduate credit the student, in addition to the above, must satisfy requirements for entrance into the Graduate School of Tuskegee Institute. Registration fees will be in keeping with established fees already effective at Tuskegee Institute.

Further information for the course can be obtained by writing Dr. Clarence T. Mason, Chairman, Division of Natural Sciences, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

Tuskegee Choir To Be Telecasted

The famed Tuskegee Institute Choir will be featured in a special [illegible] becoming telecast on channel [illegible] at eight o'clock this Friday night, May 22. Hits from Broadway musicals and general standard popular tunes will be included in the half hour program under the direction of Hedford Patterson. Selections to be included will be Holiday Song, Summertime, Trees, The Crawdad Song, Russian Picnic and Anthems from Annie Get Your Gun.

Listed as Summer Holiday, this makes the Tuskegee Choir's fifth appearance on the Alabama Educational TV network. The telecast will originate in the Auburn TV studios on the campus of Alabama Polytechnic Institute under the direction of Odell Skinner as produced by Tom Eden.

TUSKEGEE'S WATER SUPPLY

Last week, and again this week, we bring you information on resources on the Institute campus. Credit for much of this information should be given to the 1958 Class in Resource-Use Education, whose instructor was Mrs. F. G. Ellis.

In the early years, water was a great problem to the Institute. At first it was carried from a long distance to the school. Later, a windmill was set up to pump water to the school buildings.

In 1895 Mr. T. S. Creley of Cleveland, Ohio gave $1,250 to purchase a site for the first water supply. In 1908 three artesian wells were completed. Today, Tuskegee has an abundant water supply. Approximately 4/5 of the water used is purchased from the city of Tuskegee; approximately 1/5 of the water used is supplied by one deep well (385' deep) located between the power plant and the Academic Building. A certain amount of chlorine residual is kept in the water as a safety precaution to meet government requirements.

To further safeguard the health of the users, samples of the water from the storage and distribution system is furnished the State Public Health Department at least once a month.

Venereal Disease Studies Show An Increase Among Teen-Agers

Three major public health agencies here yesterday offered evidence of a nation-wide increase in venereal disease among teen-aged boys and girls in the last three years.

The rise, the agencies said, makes inadequate the decreased Federal allocation for venereal disease control requested by President Eisenhower for 1959. The agencies asked for an increase in the Federal program for next year.

The joint statement on the control of gonorrhea and syphilis was issued at 1790 Broadway by the American Social Hygiene Association, the American Venereal Disease Association and the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers.

At a press conference, T. Lefoy Richman and Conrad Van Hyning of the hygiene association, and Dr. S. Ross Taggart of the venereal disease association, reported.

"In the United States for three consecutive years, the number of state and major cities reporting increases in teen-age venereal disease has mounted steadily.

"During the past year, increases were reported in twenty-seven states, two territories and thirty-nine major cities. The number of youngsters with infectious V.D. in calendar year 1957 [the last year for which such data are available] was 49,795 under 20 years of age."

The total number of venereal disease cases is at best an educated guess, they said. Perhaps three cases are not diagnosed for every one that it, they noted. They estimated that 1,500,000 people in the nation had venereal disease and that 200,000 of them were under 20.

The statement issued by the three agencies said:

"Venereal disease among young people is not an isolated sign of trouble. It must be viewed as part of a pattern. Some of the other emerging segments of the pattern appear to be: increasing pregnancies at younger ages, increasing crimes of violence and crimes against property at younger ages, and increasing teen-age susceptibility to peer group authority and morality."

According to Mr. Richman the Federal Government last year allocated $5,400,000 for venereal disease control. $2,400,000 of this was provided for state and city programs. President Eisenhower requested $4,700,000 in his 1959 budget message.

The three agencies estimated that it should be increased to a minimum of $5,800,000.

A spokesman for the New York City Health Department said that venereal disease had increased among those between 15 and 20 years old. The State Health Department reported an increase in the 15 and 24 age group.

'Ride the Winged Horse' set for third summer at 'Kegee

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — The Tuskegee Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority has announced that "Ride the Winged Horse" will continue for the third summer.

Children in the 4th, 5th, or 6th grades next year are invited to participate in the sessions to be held weekly June 13 through August 8, in the Children's Room, Hollis Burke Frissell Library, Tuskegee Institute.

THIS POPULAR program began as a reading club with a varied program of wide appeal to children in the community. Last year, "Sunday Winged Arts" was added, designed to enrich cultural experiences in music, art, and drama.

Both the Reading Club and Sunday Winged Arts will be continued in 1959. A new feature this summer will be Parents Winged Horse, a special advisory service to aid parents in helping their children to improve the quality and quantity of their reading.

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Annie G. King, reference librarian, the Parents Winged Horse Committee is completing plans to offer individual guidance and assistance to parents concerned with selecting books for their children. They will also provide reading lists for the slow and non-readers as well as average and superior ones, and offer suggestions which will encourage children to read.

Emphasis will be placed on service to meet individual needs of parents whose interest in their children's reading greatly influences its quality and extent.

RIDE THE WINGED HORSE is sponsored by the Tuskegee Alumnae Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, which adopted this pilot venture as a national project to be conducted by chapters the country over, and the Hollis Burke Frissell Library of Tuskegee Institute. Mrs. Fannye J. Harris, children's librarian, is director of the project.

Down at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, Ride the Winged Horse Club members were delighted with films from "The Greatest Show on Earth" shown at their recent meeting.

Afterwards, Cheryl Lynne Dorsey, age 10, one of the children who has never been to a circus, smilingly said: "I would love to go see one now."

This club for children in grades 4, 5, and 6 provides entertainment and encourages them to read good books during vacation. Mrs. Inez Pitts read aloud selections from a collection of Japanese Children's Favorite Stories" and Calista Mitchell and Kenneth Mannings served as narrators during the showing of films of "Knights of the Round Table." Then there was a rush to obtain copies of the book for reading at home.

The swarm around the desk of Mrs. Fannye Harris, director, as children returned and checked out books indicated that they are finding pleasure in books as well as in play.

Each Saturday between 80 and 100 books are circulated, Mrs. Harris reported. She told of one child who returned a book inadvertently kept out during the school year. Her mother had carefully repaired it after her daughter told of the instructions given the children for caring for the books.

Some of the children attending the session this summer are from out of the state. Bertheria Gaston, age 11, of Brookhaven, Miss., is in Tuskegee while her mother, Mrs. Annie Mae Gaston, attends summer school. She was busy copying addresses of publishers of books she liked so that her mother could buy them for her to keep.

The next session will be on Saturday, July 11th, when there will be a presentation on science given by Mrs. Harriette Jeffries. All members who have not been tested are requested to call at the Library on Tuesday or Thursday at 3 p.m.

'Race Mixing' Charged At 2 Colleges

MEMPHIS (AP) — A charge of "race mixing" at two Alabama colleges was drawn up yesterday at the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of Alabama.

The Tuscaloosa presbytery said it would file official protest today regarding recent integrated meetings of white and Negro members of Westminister fellowship units at Auburn and Tuskegee.

The synod is holding its 124th stated meeting at Southwestern College here. The synod is one of several that contribute to the college's support.

In raising the race issue, the Tuscaloosa group criticized what it calls a "harmful and divisive program" at Auburn and said it would ask that the synod stop the "social integration activities."

Under fire are two fellowship supper meetings—one at the Alabama Institute of Technology (Auburn) last March 22, the other at Tuskegee, a Negro college, April 5.

At both suppers, the white and Negro members of the fellowship dispensed with Alabama's racial segregation and dined together.

Alabama State Science Dept. Chief Back From Indonesia

DJAKARTA, INDONESIA — Dr. H. Lewis Van Dyke, chairman of the Department of Science, Alabama State College in Montgomery, Ala., has returned to the United States from Indonesia after serving for two years as a member of a team of technical education specialists sent to Indonesia by Tuskegee Institute under an International Cooperation Administration contract. Returning with him is Mrs. Van Dyke, the former Bessie Candler of Allegan, Mich.

The United States Mutual Security Program is assisting the young Republic of Indonesia in its development, through technical and economic assistance, in such areas as education, agriculture, public health, industry, labor training, public administration, communications media and the training of Indonesians abroad.

In developing these projects, special emphasis is placed on training executive, technical and professional people who will continue to extend and improve these projects in the future. This "on-the-job training" is augmented by ICA's training abroad program, known as the Participant Training Program, under which specially selected individuals are sent to the United States or to a third country for advanced training and study in their particular field of specialization.

LOANED TO INSTITUTE

When the Indonesian ministry of education requested the ICA to send a team of vocational education specialists to Indonesia under its university contract program, Dr. Van Dyke, a chemist and science specialist, was loaned to Tuskegee Institute by Alabama State College as one member of the group.

Dr. Van Dyke supervised the establishment in Djakarta of a pilot laboratory for training science teachers. In this laboratorry, in-service teachers received training in the use of laboratory facilities to demonstrate scientific principles.

Much of the equipment needed for th laboratory — tables, fume hood, stock room shelving, chemical vault shelving, balance tables, oven tables, and the like, was designed by Dr. Van Dyke. All of his designs can be manufactured in Indonesia and also can be reproduced locally in other areas where sub-training centers have been established by the Ministry of Education. For the first 20 weeks of the course there were no books so Dr. Van Dyke prepared his own laboratory experiment directions and teaching procedures.

Teacher training began in August 1958, and by May of 1959, 41 teachers had received training in chemistry and physics at the new laborarory and were able to assume full responsibility for teaching the course.

ENTHUSIASM SHOWN

"Indonesians who were learning to become teachers were enthusiastic about the program even before physical facilities were completed," says Dr. Van Dyke, "and now the new science instructors are teaching with competence and zeal. The Ministry of Education are gratified by the facilities and the potential of the program in the future."

Dr. Van Dyke received his A.B. degree at Western Michigan University, his M.S. in Chemistry, at the University of Michigan, and his doctorate at Michigan State College. He has been on the staff of Alabama State College since 1935 and plans to return to this position as chairman of the Science Department.

Mrs. Van Dyke, who was on the teaching staff of the International School in Indonesia, and her husband will visit their son Henry, a journalist in New York City, and their two daughters, Mrs. Barbara Woods, Inster, Mich. and Mrs. Jacquelyn Williams, East Lansing, Mich., before returning to Montgomery.

New Insights Given In Institute's Role

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — New insights into Tuskegee Institute's role in helping people to discover and work toward a planned solution of their problems were highlighted in a five-day Orientation and Training Program organized and conducted for Agricultural Missions, Inc., during the period July 10-14.

Bases for the program were a critical analysis of the crucial changes taking place in the rural economy and the effects of these changes upon the people involved. The program was presented in the form of forenoon seminars and field trips each afternoon to observe a cross-section of life and living in the areas of Macon County which surround Tuskegee Institute.

Under the general leadership of the Division of Public Relations the program was organized to include Rural Religious Extension; The Essentials of a Balanced Community Extension Service Program; Rural Health; and Rural Community Planning.

16 CHURCH LEADERS

Serving as a coordinating and consulting agency for numerous national church bodies, Agricultural Missions, Inc., under the leadership of Dr. I. W. Moomaw, Executive Secretary, brought together at Tuskegee 16 church leaders serving in six different countries either as rural pastors or as agriculturists, home economists or health workers. Most serve in a general role of rural community development.

Tuskegee personnel taking part in the program were: For Rural Religious Extension, Rev. V. A. Edwards and persons in the Cotton Valley and Cross Roads communities; For Alabama Extension Service, Dr. W. B. Hill, State Leader and members of the state and county staffs; For Rural Health, Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr., Dr. T. M. Campbell, and Public Health Service Nurses, Mrs. Eunice R. Lowery, Mrs. Elizabeth Crocker and Mrs. Gertha Wilkerson. Dr. Lewis W. Jones led the seminar on Rural Community Planning.

HIGHLIGHTS

Significant highlights included the consideration of "people with problems rather than people as problems." The group visited a meeting of the Cross Roads Community Credit Union and heard members tell how through the leadership and encouragement of Tuskegee Institute personnel they have an organization which helps finance many of their current needs for seed, feed and fertilizer to produce their crops.

In the Cotton Valley Community the group saw the results of a Community Tractor Cooperative and cooperative purchase of other farm and home essentials at a considerable saving to the members. In this project Rev. V. A. Edwards, Extension and Vocational Agricultural staff members and Tuskegee Institute faculty members serve as resource persons.

At the Harris Barrett Community, the group visited rural low-cash cost housing units built by the farm families under supervision of Institute personnel from the Schools of Agriculture and Mechanical Industries. Other visits were made to progressive family owned and operated farms including the very modern farm unit operated by Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Mindingall. Their cooperation with Extension Service spans a 30-year period.

VISIT RURAL CLINIC

At Notasulga, they visited a rural clinic in full operation with more than 50 mothers and children in attendance. Mrs. Eunice R. Lowery, Public Health Service Nurse and Dr. T. M. Campbell were in charge.

On a later trip to Little Texas, Brownville Number 1 and Brownville Number 2 Communities, they observed the routine schedule of the PHS nurse. Nurses, Mrs. Gertha Wilkerson and Mrs. Elizabeth Crocker conducted the group on home visitations, and observed a recently completed clinic.

Taking part in the course was Chau Xeng Ua of the Ministry of Work and Social Action, Phnom Penh, Cambodia. He is in this country as a participant in the Foreign Leaders Program of the State Department. Since he converses only in French, he was accompanied by a State Department interpreter, Mr. Ralph Carl of De-Pauw University.

In an interview with Mr. Chau at the end of the course and following his appearance before 429 members of the Alabama 4-H Club Short Course in session at Tuskegee, he summed up his impressions in the following words:

About the young people, "I was impressed by their alertness, good manners and their genuine concern about youth in my country and around the world."

COUNTY CONDITIONS

Regarding the conditions in Macon County generally, he said, "The people show a great spirit of resourcefulness in working out their problems, and they do it without any bitterness toward anyone."

Speaking on his observations on the several rural tours, he said, "These trips revealed that there still exists much poverty among the underprivileged farm families, but for those who have taken advantage of the help extended by Tuskegee Institute through Community Development, Extension Service, Public Health Service, Housing and Medical Care programs, there is a pleasing atmosphere of progress."

His final comment was stated in this manner—"I am amazed at the patience of the professional workers in the several areas in working so diligently with people who seem so slow to accept progressive changes which they see so effectively demonstrated all around them."

In this last statement, Mr. Chau touches upon the real aim of education and the mission of an educational institution which according to the late eminent educator Alfred North Whitehead is, "the acquisition of the art of the utilization of knowledge."

Stated in another manner by Dr. Lewis W. Jones in his lecture to the group, "Our major problem is now to relate what ought to be with what is."

All-Negro College Has White Teacher

German Scientist On Staff Of Tuskegee Institute

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Jan. 30. — (AP)—Tuskegee Institute, the Negro school lepo involved in racial controversy, has a white teacher on its staff.

President L. H. Foster disclosed Friday that Karl Bloss, a German scientist, has been on the faculty for several months teaching chemistry and doing research.

Mr. Bloss' wife, also a scientist, is doing cancer research for the school but isn't a staff member, Mr. Foster said.

The 32-year-old German chemist arrived in the United States in December, 1957, and was hired by Tuskegee Institute several months later. He is teaching two chemistry classes, conducting research and supervising two students engaged in research studies.

Mr. Bloss and his wife are both graduates of Frankfurt University. The Tuskegee instructor, who speaks five languages, has filed his first naturalization papers.

Dr. Clarence T. Mason, head of the Institute's Division of Natural Sciences, said "We were lucky to find him (Bloss) available. It has become almost an impossibility to find qualified Negro chemists."

And, Dr. Mason added, "We're looking around for more chemists and physicists, and if they're white, good enough and interested, we'd be happy to have them."

Tuskegee Institute is a privately endowed school which also gets an annual appropria- bama.

White Man On Faculty At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Jan. 30 (AP)—The student body at Tuskegee Institute is still segregated, but a white instructor has joined the previously all-Negro faculty at the famed school.

A German immigrant, Karl Bloss, is teaching chemistry to the Negro students and conducting scientific research, President L. H. Foster disclosed today.

Bloss' wife is carrying on research work but she isn't on the faculty.

Foster said the 32-year-old graduate of Frankfurt University was hired by the institute several months after his arrival in the United States in December, 1957. His wife, also a Frankfurt graduate, joined him last Summer.

The head of Tuskegee's Division of Natural Sciences, Dr. Clarence T. Mason, said the school was glad to get Bloss and added, "we-re looking around for more chemists and physicists" white or Negro.

Bloss, who speaks five languages, is teaching two chemistry classes and supervising two students doing research work in addition to carrying on research studies himself.

AT TUSKEGEE:

White Teacher Listed On Institute Faculty

By JERRY HORNSBY
Journal Staff Writer

TUSKEGEE — A white teacher is serving on the faculty of Tuskegee Institute and his wife is engaged in research at the college, Dr. L. H. Foster, president of the Institute, told the Alabama Journal this week.

The teacher, Karl Bloss, immigrated to this country from Germany in December of 1957. He was hired by the institute last spring, but it is not common knowledge in Tuskegee that the Negro institution has on its payroll a white employe.

Bloss was joined by his wife in July of 1958 and was immediately employed by the Institute to conduct research on cancer. She is not, however, a member of the faculty.

An assistant professor, Bloss holds the equivalent of a master's degree from Frankfurt University and has also completed one year of work toward his doctorate. The 32-year-old chemist is teaching two classes in qualitative and quanitative chemistry and is also conducting research. In addition, he has two students doing research under his supervision.

Mrs. Bloss is a microbiologist with a Ph.D. from Frankfurt University.

Dr. Foster said Bloss is not the first white professor to serve on the Tuskegee faculty. During the past war, he said, several white instructors assisted with the flight training program here, and some white teachers were also thought to have been employed shortly after Booker T. Washington founded the institution in 1881.

SPEAKS 5 LANGUAGES

Bloss speaks English, German, Russian, Spanish and French and has had chemistry reports published in two German magazines. He came to Tuskegee with excellent recommendations from Germany and his sponsor in New York City.

"We were lucky enough to find him available," said Dr. Clarence T. Mason, chairman of the Division of Natural Sciences and director of Carver Foundation. "It has become almost an impossibility to find qualified Negro chemists."

Mason said the couple live just off the campus on Institute grounds.

Bloss is a member of the American Chemical Society and has filed his first naturalization papers.

"We're looking around for more chemists and physicists," Mason said, "and if they're white, good enough and interested, we'd be happy to have them."

Mason added that an Indian chemist is also on the college faculty, and that a Chinese physicist is due to arrive in time for the start of the next semester

Langston Hughes Guest Speaker At Tuskegee Inst.

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — (SNS) — Langston Hughes, noted poet and playwright, was guest speaker at Tuskegee Institute Sunday evening.

This marked his fourth engagement at Tuskegee since 1927. At that time he was yet a college student gathering experience and contacts for the rich contribution he was later to make to America's art and culture through his intepretive writings.

He read to an appreciative audience of more than 2,000, a cross-section of his poems. Some were of joy; others of sadness. Often referred to as a poet of protest, Mr. Hughes read from his works of this nature, "Ku Klux" and "Where Is the Jim-crow Section on the Merry-Go-Round."

As a closing feature of the program, which was presented as a Post-Negro History Week feature, Mr. Hughes read his classic "Seven Letters (F-R-E-E-D-O-M) Seven Songs." This very stirring tribute to Negro leaders, both living and dead, done to the accompaniment of organ refrains by Tuskegee Institute organist, Miss Charlotte Giles, was widely acclaimed by the audience.

Mr. Hughes remained on Monday to appear before classes in history and literature. Because of his vast experience and travels and because he ranks high on the scale, not as a Negro poet, but as an American poet, he is a great inspiration to young Americans.

Church To Hear Dr. Dunstan Jr.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE —Centered on the theme, "The Place of Religion in the Space Age," the annual Religious Emphasis Week, to be observed Jan. 11-13, will feature as guest minister, Dr. Alfred G. Dunstan Jr., pastor of the Wesley AME Zion Church of Philadelphia.

Dr. Dunstan is a graduate of Livingston College, and Hood Theological Seminary, with further study at Drew University.

Having served as an active pastor since his ordination as an elder in the connection in 1938, Dr. Dunstan has served in Thomasville, N.C.; Atlantic City, Knoxville and Philadelphia.

Opening on Saturday, Jan. 10 with a pre-religious emphasis movie, "The Ten Commandments," the activities for this year's observance are announced by Dr. Daniel W. Wynn, Tuskegee Institute chaplain, are varied. In addition to Dr. Dunstan's sermons delivered nightly, the programs include informal discussions in the various student dormitories, classroom visitations by Dr. Dunstan, organ melodies by the institute organist, Charlotte Giles, devotional music by the Tuskegee Male Singers and The Southern Normal School Choir.

Dr. Dunstan will have meals with selected groups during his stay. The week-long observance will be climaxed by a post-religious emphasis movie.

ATOMIC AGE PHYSICS

Tuskegee To Offer Atomic Age Physics TV Course For Credit

Beginning the second semester Tuskegee Institute, in cooperation with the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education and NBC, will offer the course, ATOMIC AGE PHYSICS for credit. This course is designed for high school teachers of science, advanced college students, graduate students in education and in the sciences, and adult citizens interested in obtaining a better understanding of recent developments in the scientific world.

The purpose of the ATOMIC AGE PHYSICS course is to demonstrate techniques essential to effective science teaching, and to provide up-to-date information concerning recent developments in physics. Approximately 260 colleges and universities will offer credit on a nation wide basis for the course which will be telecast over 147 NBC-TV stations from 6:30 to 7 a.m. each week day morning, beginning February 11. The local station is WSFA-TV, channel 12, Montgomery, Ala.

The national teacher will be Dr. Harvey E. White, Professor and Vice Chairman of the Department of Physics of the University of California at Berkeley. The local teacher will be Mr. Ai-Chun Fung of the Department of Physics, Division of Natural Sciences, Tuskegee Institute.

In addition to the regular TV presentations, there will be a two-hour discussion session each week held on the campus of Tuskegee Institute at a time convenient for those registered. A mid-semester and final examination will be held during two of these periods. The course will yield three hours of credit on graduate or undergraduate level.

Registration will be held on the Tuskegee Institute campus on Friday and Saturday, January 30 and 31. To register for undergraduate credit the student must have completed one year each of college general physics and college general chemistry, and should have passed courses in differential and integral calculus.

For graduate credit the student, in addition to the above, must satisfy requirements for entrance into the Graduate School of Tuskegee Institute. Registration fees will be in keeping with established fees already effective at Tuskegee Institute.

Further information for the course can be obtained by writing Dr. Clarence T. Mason, Chairman, Division of Natural Sciences, Tuskegee Institute, Alabama.

BILL DESIGNED TO KEEP TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE FROM ENTERING RACE CONTROVERIES

Referred to committee—

Bill designed to keep Tuskegee from entering race controversies

BY HUGH W. SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18—A bill reportedly intended to prevent Tuskegee Institute from receiving state funds if the school sponsors any written material relating to controversial racial matters was offered in the House Tuesday.

It was jointly sponsored by Reps. Shumate, Nettles, Oakley, Grant, Daniels and Guthrie.

Tuskegee Institute, a privately-owned Negro school, has been receiving about $250,000 a year in state funds for its graduate schools. Under House Bill 501, publication of stories, articles and other material dealing with matters relating to racial integration would render the school no longer eligible to receive state aid.

The bill was referred to the Education Committee.

AMONG OTHER BILLS given first reading yesterday was a measure backed by Rep. Torbert, of Lee and several other House members. The proposal, House Bill 488, would set 20 per cent of true value as the proper rate for ad valorem tax assessments.

Another general bill of interest introduced in the House yesterday was House Bill 489, making it compulsory for inoculation of school children against polio.

Introduced in House:

H. 478, by Albea and Merrill: Amending an act of 1945 establishing the Anniston Policemen's and Firemen's Retirement Fund, which is supported by a license tax on public utilities, so as to provide further for payment of pensions to surviving widows of pensioners, etc. (Local Legislation No. 1.)

H. 479, by Reynolds of Chambers, Casey and Dood: Requiring electric marker warning lights on the rear of all common carrier railroad trains; to provide adequate electric lighting within cabooses for clerical work, etc. (Business and Labor.)

H. 480, by Cook: Amending an act of 1947, providing for meetings and compensation for Coffee County Board of Education members. (Local Legislation No. 1.)

H. 481, by Harris: Amending further Sec. 144, Title 46, relating to expiration and renewal of certificates of registration of professional engineers and land surveyors. (Ways and Means).

H. 482, by Martin: For the relief of D. M. Taylor of Marengo County. (LL No. 1.)

H. 483, by Martin: Amending an act of 1947, levying an additional tax upon sellers of malt or brewed beverages in Greene County. (LL 1.)

H. 484, by Solomon: Providing for appointment of an additional deputy clerk or other assistants by the sheriff of Henry County. (LL 1.)

H. 485, by Solomon and Chambers: Providing secretarial and clerical assistance for the Henry County Circuit clerk. (LL 1.)

H. 486, by Solomon and Chambers: Providing further for payment of expenses incurred by the Henry County sheriff. (LL 1.)

H. 487, by Torbert: Reducing the rate of assessment of property for the purpose of taxation to 20 per cent of actual value and amending Secs. 17, 25, 44, 60, 104, 107, 135, 158, 163, 166 and 176, Title 51. (Ways and Means.)

H. 488, by Torbert, Turnham, Lee, Powell, Boyd, Perry, Turner and Casey: To fix the rate of assessment of property for the purpose of taxation at 20 per cent of its fair and reasonable market value; repealing Sec. 17, Title 51 and all other conflicting laws. (Ways and Means.)

H. 489, by Turnham: Requiring the vaccination or inoculation of school children for poliomelitis and prescribing a penalty. (Education.)

H. 490, by Rogers: Amending Sec. 29, Title 11, pertaining to fees allowed judges of probate. (Local Government.)

H. 491, by Rogers: Amending Sec. 251, Title 29, as amended, pertaining to sale of contraband or forfeited property; distribution and disposition of funds. (Judiciary.)

H. 492, by Rogers: Amending an act of 1939 which created and established the Board of Revenue of Macon County, by providing further for the compensation of members of such board, etc. (LL 1.)

H. 493, by Hocklander, Murphy and Trimmier: Authorizing the Board of Revenue and Road Commissioners of Mobile County an annual allowance for the purchase of uniforms for deputies sheriff, etc. (LL 1.)

H. 494, by Murphy: Amending further Sec. 587, Title 37, which relates to appeals from recorder's courts. (Judiciary.)

H. 495, by Murphy: Proposing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the city of Mobile to becmoe indebted in a sum not to exceed 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the property within said city. (LL 1.)

H. 496, by Murphy: Amending Sec. 586, Title 37, providing powers of the recorder to fine, punish, imprison and sentence to hard labor. (Judiciary.)

Leave Tuskegee Alone

The Florence Times

AN ASSOCIATED PRESS dispatch in Thursday's paper under the headline, "Nothing To Lose" School Plan Studied, told of an idea certain Alabama lawmakers are toying with in an effort to maintain segregated schools.

The idea is to use the annual appropriation to Tuskegee Institute to get a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on whether state funds can be allocated to private schools.

And knowing how any and all segregation bills are usually whipped through the Alabama legislature with a 90 to 0 speed and a 90 to 0 vote, figuratively speaking, there may be real danger that such a ridiculous piece of legislation might get through and win Gov. John Patterson's approval.

It so happens that whether white citizens of Alabama want to admit it or not, Tuskegee Institute is one of the state's outstanding institutions, and is perhaps better known nationally and internationally, according to what even some white educators tell us, than any of our white educational institutions. Regardless of that, it is certainly widely recognized and one of the major things of which Alabama has a right to be proud.

What good will be accomplished by taking an institution of this caliber and making a pawn out of it in a race-hate-race melee?

How much better if all parties concerned would quit talking about anti-this and anti-that legislation and get down to the task of trying to provide the best possible school, housing, recreation and other public and private facilities for all members of all races.

That is the policy that is being followed here in the four cities at Muscle Shoals, just as rapidly as we can get to the projects, and both our white and Negro citizens seem to appreciate this approach.

Until there is contrary evidence, we believe the best solution to this seemingly unsolvable problem is to make an aggressive and conscientious effort to give the Negro good schools, good recreational facilities, good housing, and the right to vote whenever he is qualified. Negroes, like others, are proud of their race and will respond to humane and generous treatment.

Certainly all of this anti-legislation can only fan the flames of hatred. What good can come of it?

INDONESIA- TUSKEGEE PROJECT

Tuskegee VA Specialist Ends Indonesian Tour

Defender Chicago Ill. p. 12
14-11-1959

JAKARTA, INDONESIA — Samuel L. Younge, chief of the Occupational Therapy Section of the Veterans Administration Hospital, Tuskegee, Ala., has recently returned to the U.S., after serving for two years as administrative assistant to the team of technical education specialists sent to Indonesia by Tuskegee Institute under an International Cooperation to work at the hospital.

In 1954 the Indonesian Ministry of Education asked ICA to send a team of vocational education specialists to Indonesia under its University Contract program. Tuskegee Institute was selected as best suited to carry out this assignment. Where Tuskegee was unable to locate the services of a specialist to fill a specific job from its own staff, the loan of such a specialist was requested from other U. S. colleges or institutions. Under this arrangement, Younge was loaned by Tuskegee by the Veterans Administration Hospital at Tuskegee.

ARRIVED IN 1957

Younge arrived in Indonesia in 1957 and has proivded the administrative services required to carry out Tuskegee's program of training teachers and improving teaching methods in the technical field, and the training of Indonesians abroad.

The U. S. Mutual Security Program is cooperating with the young Republic of Indonesia in its economic development through technical assistance in education, agriculture, public health, industry, labor training, public administration, and the training of Indonesia abroad.

As administrative assistant to the Tuskegee team of specialists, Younge's job involved administering finances to carry out teacher training activities, requistioning of supplies, materials and equipment, maintenace of property records and generally assisting the team leader to promote the effective servicing of training operations and efficient administration.

PROJECTS PROGRESS

As progress on projects which ICA gives technical assistance reaches the point where the host country is able to carry on the work through its own efforts, American technicians are withdrawn. Such is the case with ICA's Tuskegee Institute project.

After some five years of assistance to the Ministry of Education's technical vocational education division during which over 1,700 technical teachers have been aided in improving their teaching procedures, technical and practical skills, and certification, the Tuskegee Institute team is turning the project over to the Indonesians who will carry on in the future.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF NURSING
RECEIVES GRANT

The Tuskegee Institute School of Nursing was awarded a $125,000 March of Dimes grant to increase its student enrollment and teaching facilities.

Dean Lillian H. Harvey, director of the program and dean of the School of Nursing, said the new aim at Tuskegee is to have its Graduate Nurse Supplementary Program fully accredited. In addition, she said, the school will expand its work in the field of public health nursing. Its public health work now includes a school health program in 13 local schools.

Tuskegee Nursing School Awarded $125,000 Grant

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (SNS)— Tuskegee Institute School of Nursing announced July 15, that is has been awarded a $125,000 March of Dimes grant to increase its student enrollment and teaching facilities.

The grant, announced jointly by Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee, and Basil O'Connor, president of The National Foundation (formerly "for Infantile Paralysis",) is part of the more than $1,000,000 allocations announced for education in the health professions by The National Foundation.

The award brings the total support from March of Dimes funds to the nursing program at Tuskegee since 1945 to almost $1,500,000. During these years, the nursing program has gained recognition throughout the South and in 1957 its basic program in nursing was fully accredited by The National League for Nursing. Enrollment has increased to 160 students and is expected to climb to 180 in the near future. Tuskegee is now the only school in the State of Alabama training Negro nurses.

Dean Lillian Harvey, director of the program and dean of the school of nursing, said the new aim at Tuskegee is to have it's Graduate Nurse Supplement Program fully accredited. In addition, she said, the school will expand its work in the field of public health nursing. Its public health work now includes a school health program in 13 schools.

In addition to educational grants, The National Foundation also announced research and clinical investigation allocations amounting to more than $2,500,000. These allocations are made to implement the new program of The National Foundation which embraces birth defects and arthritis in addition to polio.

Legislature Approves Record Schools Budget

$304 Million Earmarked For Next 2 Fiscal Years

By HERSCHEL CRIBB

Both houses of the Alabama Legislature Wednesday unanimously passed the biggest educational appropriation bill in the history of the state.

It provides a record $304 million for the next two fiscal years.

The Senate made only one slight change, though two other amendments were attempted.

The change was to take $63,500 from educational television and put it in a fund for matching federal money for adult vocational training. It did not alter the overall bill but merely reassigned part of surplus. The Senate Finance Committee added the ETV item only this week.

The committee has also made other slight changes in the House version, but these were passed by the Senate, 30-0.

REPASS BILL

The bill then went back to the House where it was promptly enacted by a vote of 92-0.

The House had to repass the bill because the Senate made several minor amendments. It

SCHEDULE

Here is Thursday's legislative schedule:

10 a.m.—Senate convenes with $100 million school bond issue on calendar for consideration.

3 p.m.—House convenes.

...ed $59,000 to the appropriations for trade schools and Decatur and Wenonah, the State Training School for Girls, the Boys Industrial School and the Alabama Industrial School for Negro Children at Mount Meigs.

As passed, the bill will provide the following:

15 per cent teacher raise for the next year, and 5 more per cent added to that the following fiscal year.

Hiring of 1,500 new teachers in the next two years.

MINIMUM SALARY

Two advisory resolutions were also passed by both houses. They say that the intent of the Legislature is for the teachers to get the raises and that school bus drivers should receive a minimum salary of $110 per month.

These are not binding on county or city school boards.

Overall, the big appropriation bill provides $148.5 million for fiscal 1959-60, and $155.6 million for fiscal 1960-61. The current education budget is $120.3 million.

The textbook fund was jumped from $465,000 to $910,000 next year, and $913,000 the following year.

STATE MONEY

As to colleges, the University of Alabama allocation was hiked from $6.4 million to $8.5 million next year, $8.7 million the following year. Alabama Polytechnic Institute was raised from $5.8 million to $7.9 million next year, $8 million the following year.

Later, the Senate Education committee voted out a bill which will knock out Tuskegee Institute's funds if it doesn't pass.

It would allow state money to be used for privately operated white colleges, just as the state now gives the Negro school funds. It is designed to make Tuskegee the "guinea pig" for the use of school funds by private schools if integration disputes should close any white college.

Besides the big appropriation bill, the Senate passed several other school - related appropriations in separate acts. These included:

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Tuskegee Institute, $383,000; Alabama Vocational School for Girls, $14,378; Southern Industrial Institute, $33,500, and Walker Junior College, $35,000. All are private schools.

The $100 million school bond bill got its second reading and will be up for a vote Thursday. It will give public schools $74 million, colleges $23.5 million and $2.5 million for trade schools.

Part of the lower schools share will have to be matched by local school boards.

This matching formula is expected to provoke a fight on the part of small county senators. They reportedly will attempt to revise the 50-50 figure to something more favorable to what they call the "poorer counties."

Other than approving the minor amendments to the educational appropriation bill, the House found little to keep it in session and adjourned at 2:30 p.m. 30 minutes after convening.

The vote of concurrence in the Senate amendments to the $304 million was unanimous — 83-0 — and no debate. Moments later the House adjourned.

Tuskegee fund may be segregation test

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 20—(AP)—Race-minded Alabama lawmakers have renewed their outlay to Tuskegee Institute, but it may become a legal springboard to publicly financed private white schools.

The $767,000 two-year grant, roughly 10 per cent of Tuskegee's budget, also poses as a veiled dagger which could strike at the financial heart of the Negro college

FROM CORRIDOR talk of the new segregation scheme, it was clear more than idle generosity prompted the Legislature yesterday to earmark $383,000 for Tuskegee next year and $384,000 the following year.

Legislators privately planning the legal test, aimed at a ruling on whether public funds can be used for private segregated schools, figure they have nothing to lose and all to gain.

Giving the U. S. Supreme Court such a major segregation riddle, the strategists say, would result either in economy or—better still—a possible new way to keep Negro children out of white schools.

KEY TO the court test is a promised suit challenging the Tuskegee appropriation as an illegal use of public funds for a private segregated school. Only Negroes attend privately-endowed Tuskegee Institute.

State money has been allocated annually to the college under a 1945 law providing aid for students who want specialized courses unavailable in tax-supported institutions.

Planners of the private school test want the Supreme Court to uphold the Tuskegee grant, hoping the decision would set a precedent to allow the state to put up cash for private white schools.

The widespread view on such a ruling is that the Tuskegee appropriation would be a cheap price for possible victory in the South's long struggle to keep whites and Negroes in separate classrooms.

BUT IF the tribunal decided the Tuskegee outlay is illegal, segregationists then could tell the college the Supreme Court cut off its funds. The result: A state saving of about $385.000 a year.

Race-Minded Alabama Renews Tuskegee Fund

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Race-minded Alabama lawmakers have renewed their outlay to Tuskegee Institute, but it may become a legal springboard to publicly financed private white schools.

The $767,000 two-year grant, roughly 10 per cent of Tuskegee's budget, also poses as a vieled dagger which could strike at the financial heart of the famed-Negro college.

Besides Alabama's pupil placement law, which gives local boards vast powers in assigning pupils to schools, the state has several other laws designed to ward off integration.

They authorize local and statewide shutdowns, sale of school properties to private corporations, and one-school districts which officials hope could close if necessary and not affect classes elsewhere.

THE TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE POST OFFICE

During the span of years from July 4, 1881, when Booker T. Washington founded the Tuskegee Normal School in a borrowed church on Zion Hill in the town of Tuskegee,Alabama, to the year 1959, the Postal Service at Tuskegee Institute developed from a leather pouch and a wooden case of 44 "pigeon holes" in Porter Hall, the school's first building, to 1,939 Square feet of floor space in the northwest wing of the Tuskegee Institute Administration Building and a staff of nine employees- and now to this modern structure which we dedicate today.

The "staff," from 1882 to 1901, consisted of the student errand boy who walked or rode to the Post Office in the town of Tuskegee where he picked up the mail, and whichever person in the office of Principal Washington had time to sort and distribute it.

In April, 1901,Principal Washington reported to the Board of Trustees that he had had a conference with the Postmaster General to request the appointment of a clerk to handle the Institute mail and for the appointee to have his office at the Institute. The Trustees approved the report and appointed a committee to get the cooperation of the Postmaster in the town of Tuskegee under whom the Institute Clerk would be appointed.

The authorization of the "Institution Station of Tuskegee, Alabama," was confirmed in November, 1901. Early in 1902, James B.Washington, a graduate of Hampton Institute and a foster brother of Booker T. Washington, was appointed as Clerk in charge of the "Institute Station" . . . In December, 1903, Mr. Washington wrote again to the Postmaster General, this time making application for a Post Office at Tuskegee Institute. His request was granted and the Tuskegee Institute Post Office was authorized in July 1904. James B. Washington was appointed Postmaster of the Tuskegee Institute Post Office, Fourth Class.

With the authorization of the Tuskegee Institute Post Office,the old wooden "pigeon Holes" wewe pushed aside and regulation lock boxes installed in the space in the new Administration Building. The Postmaster was advised that he might charge the teachersnthe minimum rates for Box Rent; for small lock boxes, 10 cents per quarter and for lock drawers, 25 cents per quarter.

In 1905 as a result of the floods of mail in connection with the 25th anniversary Celebration of the Institute,the Post Office was raised to Third Class.The business of the school continued to grow and in 1912 the Post Office was raised to Second Class.The Tuskegee Institute Post Office was raised to First Class in 1948 and was so designated until in 1949 when it again became Second Class.(Volume of receipts determine class).

Dr. Foster Will Preside At Dedication

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—The new look in post offices will make its Tuskegee Institute debut Sunday, Oct. 11, when dedicatory exercises officially open the new facility, located at Scott street and Old Montgomery highway. The exercises will begin at 2 p.m.

Dr. L. H. Foster Jr., president of Tuskegee Institute, will serve as chairman of the exercises and deliver the principal address. Joseph A. Clarke, special assistant to the assistant Postmaster General in Washington, D.C., and Felton J. Earls, distribution officer of the Memphis Regional office, Memphis, Tenn., will also appear on the dedicatory program.

Community representatives, in addition to Dr. Foster, will include Dr. Howard W. Kenny, manager of the Tuskegee Veterans Administration Hospital, who will extend greetings.

Larry Robinson, Tuskegee Institute postmaster, points to the new 3,680-square foot building as an attractive example of the Post Office Department's unique Commercial Leasing Plan. Under the plan, private financing is used to obtain needed facilities which remain under private ownership, pay local taxes, and lease space to the Federal Government.

In the local arrangement, developer J. D. Reed constructed the new facility and has leased it to the Federal Government. Tuskegee Institute was the post office's former landlord.

The Tuskegee Institute Post Office was established in 1904, after serving the community under a grant to the institute in 1901. James B. Washington, brother to the Tuskegee Institute founder, Booker T. Washington, was the first postmaster.

Washington served until 1938, and was succeeded by Richard Harris, who was acting postmaster for two years. James A. Johnson served from 1940 until 1947, and was succeeded by the present postmaster, Larry Robinson.

Two first-day commemorative stamps have been issued from the Tuskegee Institute Post Office. The first was a commemorative stamp of Tuskegee Institute founder Booker T. Washington, honored as one of 35 famous Americans in 1940. The second was of Tuskegee scientist George Washington Carver, in 1948.

Tuskegee Institute Plans All-Institute Conference

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—Tuskegee Institute will begin its 79th academic session Sept. 14, with a two-day All-Institute Conference in which faculty and students get acquainted, and explore this year's theme: "Developing Cultural Appreciation at Tuskegee Institute."

With this year's accent on cultural appreciation, the conference will study Tuskegee's curricular and co-curricular activities, its school and community facilities, and its faculty and student resources to learn how the school can make the most of its cultural opportunities.

M. D. Sprague, librarian and chairman of the division of humanities, will give the keynote address.

A new-student registration of 1,242 is expected to boost the 1959-60 enrollment to approximately 2,198, an increase of 194 over last year's count of 2,004.

Twenty-one faculty and staff returnees and new persons compensate for 13 leaves of absence, and give the Institute a net increase of eight new positions. This year's total is 231, including 23 Ph.D's and 127 holders of the master's degree.

Included among the faculty members returning from advanced study are Dr. Charles G. Gomillion of the social science division; Dean Lillian H. Harvey of the school of nursing, and Dr. Johnnie H. Watts of the Carver Resrach Foundation.

Former Tuskegee Cage Star Dies Aboard Airplane

NEW YORK (AP) — Elliot C. Van Zandt, 44-year-old American Negro who gained fame in Italy as a physical sports trainer, died Sunday aboard a plane flying him to the United States for medical treatment.

He died over the Atlantic a few hours before the KLM Royal Dutch Airlines plane landed at Idlewild Airport.

Van Zandt, a World War II veteran and former basketball star at the Tuskegee, Ala. Institute, was en route to the West Side Army Hospital in Chicago.

The former athlete and Army captain was being accompanied here by a friend, Dr. Giovanni Ghitti. Dr. Ghitti said Van Zandt had been stricken with a kidney ailment about three weeks ago.

Van Zandt remained in Italy after the war to train Italian athletes in soccer, football, basketball and track. He was physical trainer of the national champion Milan Football Club, and also physical trainer of the Turkish national basketball team in 1951 and 1952.

He was being taken to Chicago for a possible kidney transplant operation, Ghitti said.

Mrs. Baskerville Dies; Sister Of Mrs. J. O. Thomas

Mrs. Maude Baskerville, sister of Mrs. Jesse O. Thomas, of Atlanta, died at 2 p. m. Saturday in Chicago, Illinois following an illness of one month.

Mrs. Baskerville, a former teacher at Fort Valley State College, spent about 20 years of her life in Atlanta, during which time she resided with Mr. and Mrs. Jesse O. Thomas. She was a graduate of both Tuskegee Institute and Morris Brown College, and made her home in Georgia until she married B. K. Baskerville, the first Negro telephone salesman in the United States.

She leaves to mourn her husband, and five sisters and two brothers, in addition to Mrs. Thomas: Mrs. Louise Ewing, Newark, N. J., Mrs. Mable Parott, N. Y., Mrs. Ruby Kelly, Wiley College, Texas, Mrs. Lucille Mitchell, and Mrs. Gertrude Hamilton, Los Angeles, Calif., and Cyrus Mitchell, of Atlanta and Nelson T. Mitchell, of Jackson, Mississippi.

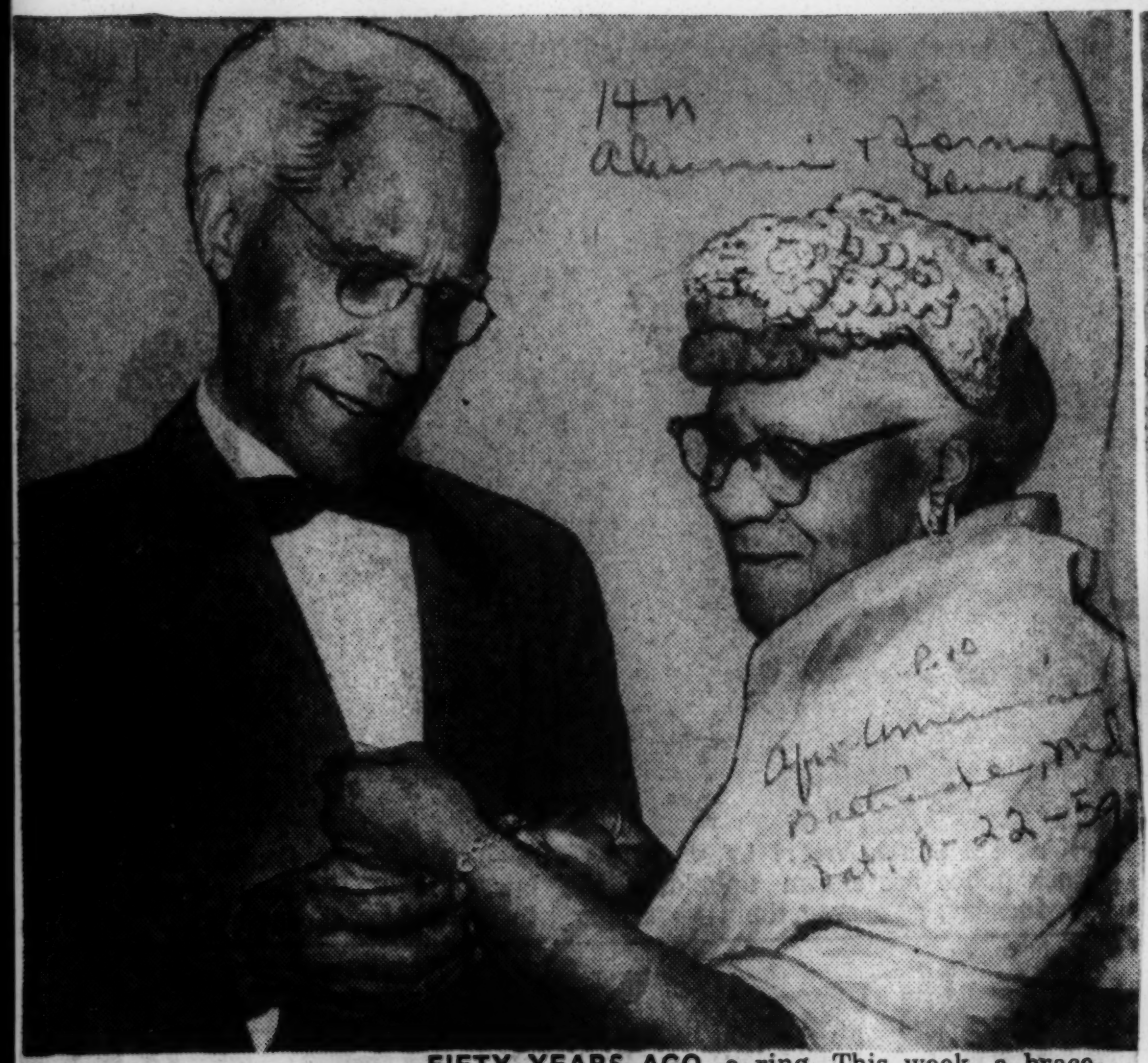
Funeral arrangements have not been completed. Mrs. Thomas has been in Chicago with her sister for over a month.

Arnold W. Lee

SELMA, Ala.—Arnold W. Lee, graduate of Tuskegee Institute and former bandmaster at Rosenwald High School, Monroeville, Ala., died here recently after an illness of three years.

Well-known throughout the South, Mr. Lee organized the first band at Florida A&M and also taught at Bethune-Cookman College.

Survivors include his widow, two daughters, five sons, two sisters, one niece, three nephews and five grandchildren.



FIFTY YEARS AGO, a ring. This week, a bracelet. James H. McGrew bestows gift on his and Mrs. McGrew's golden wedding anniversary.

McGrews mark half century of marriage

PHILADELPHIA — You would naturally expect persons who had spent half a century in an institution to emerge wan, weak and worn.

But this certainly is not true of the popular couple who reside at 3814 North Smedley St. — the James H. McGrews.

They have served fifty years in the noble institution of marriage.

Mr. McGrew was born in a small city thirty miles out of Nashville, Tenn.

He is a graduate of Tuskegee Institute and served as a representative of this institution under the Presidency of Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee.

MR. McGREW served forty years as executive secretary and administrative head of the YMCA and is active as lay leader at the St. Barnabas Church.

He met Hattie Smith fifty one years ago while she was a member of the staff at the Lawrenceville, Va. Training Institute and married her in June 1909.

Mrs. Hattie McGrew is a graduate of Hampton Institute and formerly served as a matron there.

She is an ardent worker in the Cecelia's Guild of St. Barnabas.

Many hundreds of their friends were able to rejoice with them when they repeated their marriage vows at St. Barnabas Episcopal Church during the celebration of their Golden Anniversary.

Dr. King Builds Clientele With Skill, Service

by Clarence L. Matthews

An unassuming young man who seems oblivious to his obvious success is Dr. Marshall King, Louisville's only practicing Negro veterinarian, who operates the King Clinic, his modern offices located at 1902 W. Broadway.

A native of Anderson, Ind., Dr. King practiced in Jeffersonville and New Albany in Indiana, before opening his present offices here 4 years ago. Dr. King, a veterinary surgeon, has quarters which include a complete laboratory, operating room, boarding kennels for dogs in addition to a spacious waiting room.

Excellent Treatment

Dr. King's practice, through early apprenticeships and his personal experiences, has continued to expand. The veterinarian numbers among his clients as many whites as Negroes which indicates a concern in securing excellent treatment for their pets precluding any racial issue.

After leaving Anderson to live in Indianapolis, Dr. King graduated from Crispus Attucks High School before entering the University of Indiana at Bloomington. He was a student at Indiana when he entered the Navy serving as a pharmacist mate.

Returning to his studies after service, the veterinarian graduated from the Indiana school with a bachelor of science in 1950. He received his veterinary training from the famed Tuskegee Institute graduating with a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree in 1954.

Dr. King has the distinction of being the first Negro to ever take and pass the Kentucky State Board and gain his license here. He is also licensed to practice in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan.

Since there is a limited number of veterinarians in the falls city area, Dr. King, a skilled technician, is in constant demand for his services. He nearly settled near Idlewild, Mich., before taking up residence in Louisville.

An affable young man, the veterinarian's appearance is that of a student just beginning studies for a career in which he holds the respect of his associates here and across the nation. He is a member of the American Veterinarian Medical Association, the Kentucky and Indiana Veterinarian Association and the Beta Kappa Chi scientific honor society.

As a veterinarian, Dr. King's hours are long but not mentally fatiguing. He is devoted to his field and the care of his "patients" which may run the gauntlet from pet mice, dogs and cats, to horses and other animals.

He possesses an innate gentleness and understanding of animals which makes treatment less painful to both. His results can be attested to by the volume of animal owners who crowd his clinic for treatment and advice for their pets. More often than not, advice is free of charge as a service to his clientele.

Married

Dr. King and wife, Mary Elizabeth, a New Albany native, are parents of 2 boys and 2 girls. They reside at 735 S. 43rd, and regularly attend the Second Baptist Church of New Albany.

The veterinarian is active in civic work with emphasis in the Boy Scouts movement. He is also a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity and the "30" Club. Dr. King also holds a commission in the United States Air Force Reserve.

Local Mortician Passes Suddenly

WILLIAM EVANS

The community which just two years ago welcomed its new citizen with open arms, and which was richly rewarded, Thursday turned out in great numbers to bid the one man farewell.

The farewell was the final rites for William Evans, 47, of 928 N.E. 4th, conducted at Calvary Baptist church, with Rev. M. A. Curry officiating.

Evans died Monday, October 6, en route to a city hospital.

A licensed mortician, he had been in ill health for about two months. He suddenly became worse last Friday.

He was associated with the McKay-Evans Funeral Home of the city and it was from his business base of operation that he was a driving force in most community activities.

Evans was a native of Florida. He received his formal education at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. He specialized in Mortuary Science at Landig College of Mortuary Science at Houston, Texas, and received a degree from the school.

Widely known in the profession, he was licensed by the State of Louisiana and was awarded a certificate of First Aid training by the Bureau of Mines of the Department of Interior.

Funeral services were held at 1 p.m. Thursday, with the Oklahoma City Funeral Directors Association in charge. Members of the State Association of Funeral Directors were honorary pallbearers.

Evans was a 32nd degree Mason and held memberships in the Urban League, NAACP, YMCA, Citizens Chamber of Commerce, and Knights of Pythias.

Mrs. Beula McKay, business associate of Evans expressed the sentiments of the community when she said, "Mr. Evans' passing will be keenly felt and I'm sure the favorable impression made by him in the community will last a long time."

Evans is survived by a wife, Reda, dean of women at Prairie View college, Prairie View, Tex.; a son, Reginald, Lake City, Fla.; two sisters, Mrs. Aggie Golden, Tampa, Fla., and Mrs. Ruby Edwards, Philadelphia; two brothers, Sinclair of Jacksonville, Fla., and George of Perry, Fla.

McKay-Evans Funeral home was in charge of local arrangements. Burial will be at Perry, Fla.

DR. AND MRS. G. P. HARRIS
. . . smiling happily

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—The Greater St. Mark Baptist Church was the scene of the recent marriage of Virginia Davis to Dr. George P. Harris.

The bride is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Jordan Davis. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George P. Harris Sr., New Bern, N. C., and New York City.

The Rev. B. J. Simms performed the double-ring ceremony. Nuptial music was provided by Mrs. Lexine Weeks. Miss Jeannie Pitts and Solomon Green were soloists. Prior to the ceremony, candles were lighted by the Misses Johnny Foster and Barbara Ware.

GIVEN IN marriage by her father, the bride was radiant in a gown of white Alencon lace and nylon net, etched in seed pearls and sequins. She carried a colonial bouquet of orchids and stephanotis attached to a Bible.

Mrs. Marion A. Davis of West Virginia State College was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Atty. Serena E. Davis, Columbus, Ohio; Dorcas L. Davis, Smith College, Northampton, Mass., sisters of the bride, Ruth Pitts, Tuskegee, and Claudine Tubbs, Marion, Ala.

CHARLES DENT, Chicago, Ill., was best man. Ushers were William Peterson, James Moore, both of this city; Eugene Wesley, Talladega, and Douglas Carruthers, Comer, Ga.

Little Zelda Blount, New Bern, N.C., was flower girl. She dropped rose petals on the white satin carpet, laid for the bride by her brothers, Hillis Dwight Davis, Librarian, West Virginia State College, and Walter Davis.

A reception was held immediately following the ceremony in the faculty staff cottage. Dean Hattie W. Kelly and Mrs. Lottie Esau were general managers of the wedding.

Chas. W. Holmes Commutes To Knoxville Vet Hospital for Job as Clinical Social Worker

This is the 59th in a series of articles featuring Negro firsts, leaders and outstanding personalities in Iowa who are excelling in civic, professional, business, religious, educational, fraternal and entertainment fields.

By Mrs. Frances Hawthorne

According to Charles Westley Holmes, it was a very easy transition for him to step into his new position last December as clinical social worker at the Veterans hospital in Knoxville, Ia. He also makes it sound just as easy to commute daily to and from the hospital to his home in Des Moines, a good hour's drive.

Prior to his taking the Knoxville position he had worked five years as a professional social worker with Family Service Travelers Aid society with offices in the Flynn building.

Similar Work

"The work was similar, only in a different setting." he said. "In Family Service the patients came to us. We often worked with neurotic parents, served as marriage counselors or helped persons to make employment adjustments."

"At Knoxville our patients are in a hospital but are brought to us in our offices where we work in the Admittance building which is the intensive treatment building," he said.

Interviews

"We interview patients and their relatives, write social work summaries, and work closely with doctors and psychiatrists to help make diagnoses as to whether a patient has had enough treatment, needs a different kind or if it should be discontinued." he went on.

Included in the duties of his job is counseling patients, corresponding with relatives and personally talking with them, and preparing the patient and wife or parents for the returning home of the patient.

Aspired to be Doctor

"We are very much concerned with families and relatives gaining an understanding of mental illness."

Actually Mr. Holmes did not start out to be a professional worker. Early in life he had aspired to be a doctor.

To Tuskegee

Born in Colfax, Ia., his parents brought him to Des Moines wher he was about three years old. He grew up here, graduated from North High school, then entered the State University of Iowa where he studied liberal arts subjects a year. He left and entered Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, in 1932, stayed there a year

Negro Airman Wins $500 'Accent' Award

A Negro airman Thursday morning receivtd a $500 award from Accent International at the main auditorium of Navy Pier during the annual convention of the National Restaurant association.

Morris Brown, 'Skegee Win Openers; Morehouse Enters Semi-Finals

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Play in the 26th annual Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Basketball Tournament, which got underway here Thursday afternoon, will continue tonight with the first game of the semi-finals round starting at 6 p. m. (Central Standard Time), at Logan Hall Gymnasium.

The first round was delayed approximately an hour and a half Thursday, when a basket was broken during a pre-game practice session and had to be repaired. As a result of this delay, results of some quarter-finals games were not available in time to give definite pairings for tonight's semi-finals.

First team to reach the semi-finals, however, was the Morehouse College quint, of Atlanta, Ga. The Maroon Tigers came from behind to defeat the Fisk University Bulldogs in a 72-71 thriller, with John Lowe sinking two free throws to win the game.

Fisk's Bobby Gilliam emerged high scorer with 23 points and Marvin Thomas, of Morehouse, was runner-up with 22 points.

M'BROWN, 'SKEGEE SWEEP OPENERS

Play began here Thursday with Morris Brown College's Purple Wolverines and the Tuskegee Institute Golden Tigers winning first round games. Morris Brown spilled the Benedict College Tigers of Columbia, S. C., 86-78, and Tuskegee took the second-seeded Xavier University Gold Rush hoopsters in camp, 83-75.

Curtis Bell, Charles Bolden, James Scott, Erwin Ross and John Alexander did most of the scoring as the Purple Wolverines went out front 17-12, midway the first half and kept on top the rest of the way.

Edward Murphy, of Benedict, led the scorers with 28 points and Jones was the No. 2 man with 18. Bell was high for Morris Brown with 17.

Sparked by Lightfoot and Watts, the Tuskegee Tigers posted a 55-40 half-time lead over Xavier and went on to chalk up the first upset of the three - day hardwood classic.

Game Features Special Events

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. Special features for the entertainment of the spectators attending the 26th annual Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Basketball Tournament, Feb. 19-21 in Logan Hall by students of Tuskegee Institute included: a weight lifting exhibition on Friday night by Alphonso Clark, sophomore, physical education, Dunadin, Florida; and Julius Marsh, sophomore, electrical engineering, Pritchard, Ala.

A special exhibition in baton twirling by Tiger majorettes, Rose Webb, freshman, education, Indianapolis, Indiana, and Wilbe Bell Tripp, education, Miami, Florida, concluded the entertainment.

At the championship games on Saturday night several young men gave a trampoline exhibition. Participating were: Floyd Dawson, junior, physical education, Grant, Fla.; Samuel L. Gay, junior, physical education, Miami, and Paul Hill, junior, physical education, Hardaway, Ala.

The freshman women enrolled in courses in physical education, tumbled and tumbled in tumbling exercises. Sylvia Buck, a freshman in the department of physical education, Tuskegee Institute; and Charles Stewart, a senior, commercial dietetics, Brooklyn, rendered the Tuskegee version of 'Dance Peter Gunn.'

Instructors in charge of these exhibitions were Miss Ann Gibbs, Miss Maude Chambers, Miss Nell Jackson, Whitney L. Van 'Cleve and Allison Figaro, all members of the staff in the department of physical education.

Benedict Jars Tuskegee, 67-60

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—Benedict college, basketball power in the SIAC, blew hot and cold, yet outpointed Golden Tiger Tuskegee, 67-60, to hand members of the Tuskegee combine their second defeat of the season on their home court.

After a whirlwind lead, 12 to 2, and 17 to 6, Benedict lost steam while Tuskegee closed the gap, 19-17, then pulled abreast of Benedict at 26-all only to see sharpshooting Walter Simon, Benedict forward, drill 3 field goals in quick succession to give his teammates an 8-point spread at the half.

In the second stanza Benedict and Tuskegee battled furiously for the victory in a game marked by vigorous play. James Crawford, stellar Golden Tiger forward, nailed a sizzling 15 points in the first half, but was cool perceptively in the second half and was held to one field goal and one free throw. That in a nutshell spelled defeat for the Golden quint.

FLORIDA A&M ROMPS TO 100-70 WIN OVER TUSKEGEE FOR '59 SIAC TOURNAMENT CROWN

MORRIS BROWN RIPS MOREHOUSE 75-53 IN CONSOLATION FINALS

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — The Florida A&M University Rattlers, of Tallahassee, Fla., displayed a sharp, quick-breaking offense Saturday night in cruising to a 100-70 triumph over the Tuskegee Institute Golden Tigers, in the championship finals of the 26th annual Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Basketball Tournament, played before an overflow crowd at Logan Hall.

In the all-Atlanta consolation finals, Morris Brown College's Purple Wolverines rode to a 75-53 victory over the Morehouse College Maroon Tigers.

The top-seeded Rattlers, who shared the 1958-59 SIAC pre-tournament laurels with Xavier University, of New Orleans, La., reached the finals by polishing off the Alabama A & M College Bulldogs, 93-64; and taking Morris Brown in camp, 82-71. In defeating Tuskegee in the championship finals Florida won its eighth SIAC tournament crown.

Definitely back on the center stage in the SIAC basketball picture, the unseeded Golden Tigers swept into the titular tilt by upsetting Xavier's second-seeded Gold Rush cagers, 83-75 and knocking off the Morehouse Maroon Tigers, 79-74.

MORGAN SPARKS RATTLERS

Sparked by Co-Capt. Leo Morgan, great floorman and team player from Columbus, Ohio, Florida was on top, 25-17 midway the first half, increased the margin, 47-30 at intermission and went on to win with ease. Teaming with Morgan in Florida's driving offense were Co-Capt. Leroy Gibson, James Forchion, Cliff Bridges and Ruben Young. Morgan scored 28 points and Forchion hit for 22.

Mainspring for the Golden Tigers ,who put up a stirring battle before falling to the Rattlers, was John Reynolds, fast-moving playmaker from Dothan, Ala., and he got lots of help from James Crawford, Capt. Earl Watts, Edward Myrick and Bobby Copeland. John Reynolds bagged 17 points and Crawford got 15.

ROSS AND BOLDEN M'BROWN'S BIG GUNS

Erwin Ross, of Atlanta, Ga., and Charles Bolden, of Memphis, Tenn., were the big guns for the Morris Brown Purple Wolverines in the consolation finals. Out front, 17-9 in the first ten minutes of play, Morris Brown built up a 35-14 halftime lead and kept our front the rest of the way, with Ross, Bolden, Capt. Robert Myles, Robert Barnett, Curtis Bell and James Scott doing most of the damage.

Marvin Thomas, Morehouse sensational sharp-shooter from St. Louis, Mo., paced the Maroon Tigers' attack, aided by Capt. Leonard Johnson, Ike Parker and Elmer Wilson.

TUSKEGEE AND FLORIDA DRIBBLERS TANGLE IN FINALS OF SIAC CAGE TOURNEY TONIGHT

Florida Spills M'Brown, 82-71; Tuskegee Tops Morehouse, 79-74

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—The finals of the 26th annual Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference Basketball Tournament will be played here tonight, with the all-Atlanta consolation finals between the Morris Brown College Purple Wolverines and Morehouse College Maroon Tigers, getting underway at 6 p. m. (Central Standard Time) at Logan Hall Gymnasium.

Shooting-it-out in the championship finals at 8 p. m., will be the unseeded Tuskegee Institute Golden Tigers and top-seeded Florida A. and M. University Orange and Green Rattlers, who were victorious in semi-finals contests Friday night.

In the opening semi-finals game, the Florida A. and M. Orange and Green Rattlers romped to an 82-71 triumph over the Morris Brown Purple Wolverines, while the Tuskegee Golden Tigers shot their way to a 79-74 win over the Morehouse Maroon Tigers.

Florida will be seeking its eighth SIAC tournament championship, and Tuskegee will be striving for its fourth. The Rattlers swept the tournament crown in 1941, 1942, 1945, 1947, 1952, 1955 and 1957, which the Golden Tigers finished out front in 1934, 1944 and 1948.

FLORIDA EARNS TICKET TO FINALS

The Florida A. and M. Rattlers earned a ticket to the finals fighting off a late challenge by the Morris Brown Purple Wolverines in the opening semi-finals contest of the evening. It was a tight game in the final stages and the Rattlers had to play control-ball and put on a semi-free to halt the Wolverines' late rally.

Morris Brown trailed 16 points (66-48) with nine minutes left to play, when Robert Barnett, Robert Myles and Erwin Ross started firing consistently and shaved the margin to 11 points. Leo Morgan, Leroy Gibson, and James Forchion continued to drill in shots as the Rattlers went on to win.

Florida A. and M., top-seeded by the Tournament Committee with a 22.85 Dickinson Rating, moved out front early and led Morris Brown, 43-26 at intermission.

ROSS TOPS SCORERS

Morris Brown's Ross, product of Atlanta's Price High School, emerged high scorer with 24 points. Two points back was Morgan, Florida's sensational play-maker from Columbus, Ohio.

Also scoring in double-figures were Gibson, 21; Forchion, 16; Charles Bolden, 14; and Myles, 12.

TUSKEGEE TURNS BACK MOREHOUSE

In the second semi-finals contest, the Tuskegee Golden Tigers turned on the steam at the seven-minute mark and went on to defeat the Morehouse Maroon Tigers.

James Lightfoot teamed with Warren Reynolds, Edward Myrick, James Crawford, and John Reynolds, as the Golden Tigers overcame Morehouse's slender 39-38 half-time lead to put the game in the bag.

Taking scoring laurels was Morehouse's Marvin Thomas, uncanny St. Louis, Mo., sharp-shooter, with 28 points and Capt. Leonard Johnson was the No. 2 man with 23. Lightfoot was high for Tuskegee with 20 and Warren Reynolds was one point back with 19.

Cage Play-Off Set At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—Benedict College quintet and South Carolina State will play at 7 p.m. Wednesday here at Logan Hall in effort to determine which team will participate in the SIAC 1959 Basketball Tournament.

At the close of the regular playing season, Benedict and South Carolina State were tied for season's record and each with place in the tournament. In order for one of the squads to participate in the tournament, the tie had to be broken.

B. T. Harvey at Montgomery SIAC commissioner, announced three or four ways to break the tie. Information was received here Monday night, that officials had reached agreement on playing the tie off in Logan Hall Wednesday night. Patrons having tournament season tickets will be admitted to this game for the small sum of 10 cents, others will have to pay 25 cents.

SPORTS OF THE WORLD

BY MARION E. JACKSON

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Wire services recently carried a story datelined Brookings, S. D. It was an engrossing report of a man's respect for a famous brother which had resulted in a $500 contribution to the South Dakota State College stadium campaign. The man is Tom Abbott, a cook in the St. Charles Hotel in Pierre. The brother memorialized was the late Cleveland Leigh Abbott, for more than 30 years teacher, coach and director of athletics here at Tuskegee Institute.

In this glorious, golden age of athletics, when men run the mile in less than four minutes, when basketball scoring must be calculated on electronic devices, and when football is played with the exacting science that one employs to make and catapult a missile, and when home runs rocket over the bangers at a clip not known since the Babe Ruth era, the revered ole man of Tuskegee Institute, is still news.

Abbott, the late Fay Young of the Chicago Defender, and B. T. Harvey, commissioner of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, were the admitted "Big Three" of Dixie sports. They scooped out the bedrock of Deep South athletics and placed the foundation of athletics as we know them today.

o—o—o

There is an old pix made by Warren's Studio, 73 E. Russell St., Orangeburg, S. C., which gives testimonial to what I mean. Looking on the fading portrait, I saw the timbers of the past era in proud array. You see B. T. Harvey, A. J. Lockhart, the late A. G. Gassett, J. B. Bragg, St. Elmo Brady, Abbott, the late photographer J. Richardson Jones, Ted Wright, Ollie Dawson, W. J. Nicks, Dr. Frank L. Forbes, the late H. A. Johnson, E. J. Clemons, Bill Bell, Paul Webber, C. Johnson Dunn, A. S. Gaither, Ralph A. Robinson, C. J. Kincaide, Howard Archer, Jack Adkins, and numerous others of the SIAC old guards.

o—o—o

Though, proud, high and mighty none captured the spirit of the Twenties as did Abbott. Abbott pioneered new stadiums, new formations, new idealism in a day in which the rope and the faggott limited democracy in our land.

Abbott carried his team to the great relays, played football in the giant concrete stadiums of the midwest, east and southwest, and was an innovator in women's sports and physical fitness.

Thus, the story of his brother's contribution to the South Dakota State stadium fund, stirred memories of the Alabama coach who died in 1935. His brother Tom, felt it was only fitting that Cleve should be remembered at State College, the institution where he got his start.

o—o—o

A bronze plaque will be placed in one of the lockers of the new stadium dedicating that part to the late Tuskegee coach. The money will be used to purchase lockers.

Tom Abbott first heard about the stadium drive from Charles Dalthorp who was then State Director of Highways in Pierre. Dalthorp took over the post as temporary director of the fund drive last month, and one of his first calls was from Tom.

Abbott admits that raising the $500 on a cook's pay will not be an easy task, but says he plans to do it "on the installment plan."

"Cleveland helped us all in so many ways," Tom said. "This seemed like the least we could do to repay him."

o—o—o

Cleve Abbott was born at Yankton, S. D., where his father was an employee of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad. He was the oldest of seven Abbott children, six of whom were boys. The family moved from Yankton to Huron, and then to Watertown where the youngest son, Tom, was born. By this time Cleve was in high school and already showing signs of his great future in athletics.

o—o—o

Cleve graduated from Watertown High School in the spring of 1912, having earned 16 letters in varsity sports. He enrolled at State College in the fall of that year.

After attending a short football camp before school opened, Cleve was told it was time to register. A part-time job in the dairy department had given him his only look at academic life, so he chose dairying as his major field.

o—o—o

Cleve's job at Tuskegee came about through a chance meeting between State College president and Elwood Perisho and the great Negro educator Booker T. Washington, who was then president of Tuskegee. The two shared a seat on a train during an Eastern trip and in the course of their conversation, Washington told of his plans to initiate an athletic program at Tuskegee. The great Negro educator asked President Perisho if he knew of anyone who might help him, and Perisho told him of the promising young freshman athlete.

o—o—o

Favorably impressed with the qualifications of Cleve Abbott, Washington advised the State College president to tell Cleve to work hard and get good grades, and the job would be his.

Not only did Abbott distinguish himself academically, he went on to become one of the great athletes in State College history. While in college Cleve Abbott won 14 awards in major sports, became captain of the basketball team and was chosen an All-Northwestern player.

o—o—o

Booker T. Washington died a year prior to Cleve Abbott's graduation from college, but he had made sure that plans for Abbott's appointment were complete. In 1916 Cleve was hired at Tuskegee with the title of agricultural chemist, and the responsibility for getting the athletic program underway.

With the exception of a stretch during World War I when he served as an army officer in France, Cleve Abbott remained at Tuskegee Institute, building an almost legendary record with his athletic teams until his death in 1955.

o—o—o

His football teams won numerous Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference championships and several mythical Negro championships.

His girls' teams won the National AAU indoor and outdoor championships consistently from 1937 through 1950. Members of the Tuskegee Women's track and field team were selected to represent the United States at the 1948 Olympics in London, and another member of the team was a U. S. representative at the games at Helsinki. Representatives of the women's teams also participated in the Pan American Games at Buenos Aires in 1951 and at Mexico City in 1955.

A great Negro newspaper has said of Cleve Abbott "Only Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee Institute, and Dr. George Washington Carver, the noted scientist were better known."

"His death removed from Tuskegee Institute one of the school's most beloved characters."

Tuskegee Five Nips Morehouse

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — With the bomb sight accuracy of James Crawford, Tiger sharpshooter from Dothan, Ala., who flipped 29 points, Tuskegee tripped Morehouse College, 83-76, here on the local court Wednesday night.

Rolling into an early lead Tuskegee notched 4 points to lead 11 to 7 and was never headed the rest of the way. Giving valuable support to James Crawford were James Lightfoot, with 15; Johnnie Reynolds with 13 and Edward Myrick who chipped 9.

Despite the gallant efforts of James Crawford, his 29 did not capture high point honors for the evening. That distinction goes to Marvin Thomas, Morehouse ace who canned 18 in the first half and 13 in the second stanza for a sizzling 31 to win the personal scoring derby.

Maroon Tiger Lenny Johnson caught fire in the second half to mesh 15 while Bennie Gray notched 7 in the same stanza to enable Morehouse to threaten the Tuskegee lead, 58-56, 60-58, 64-62 before Tuskegee put daylight between them, their Atlanta adversary, to win 83-76. The season record for the Golden Tigers is 8 conference wins and 4 conference reverses.

Tuskegee Beats Allen, 97-82

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Golden Tiger Tuskegee with Johnnie Reynolds and James Crawford leading the way, outpointed Allen University of Columbia, S. C., 97-82, here in Logan Hall Friday night.

In the first half Tuskegee nudged ahead as Johnnie Reynolds and James Crawford found the range with impressive consistency. Allen narrowed the point spread to a single point, 16-15, as Charlie Davis and Willie Long arched several in the clutch. With the sharp shooters on both teams hitting nettin a nip and tuck battle followed with the score knotted several times. Finally Johnnie Reynolds sank one from the side and Tuskegee moved to the fore, 43-37, at the intermission.

In the second half Johnnie Reynolds shifted from center to forward and the Golden Tigers shifted in high gear. Displaying their most potent point-making punch of the season, Crawford, Reynolds, Myrick and Copeland sizzled the ball through the hoops until Allen was hopelessly outclassed. Individual scoring honors were taken by Johnnie Reynolds with 32, while consistent James Crawford, his Golden Tiger teammate, netted 24. Edward Myrick posted 19 and Bobby Copeland with 10 hit double digits for Tuskegee.

Allen, though outpointed, showed flashes of passing and scoring brilliance as Willie Long sank 20 markers and Charlie Davis bagged 19.

Morris Brown Rips Tuskegee 87-46

By JOEL W. SMITH

Erwin Ross, ex-Price High sharp-shooter, was the big gun as the Morris Brown College Purple Wolverines cruised to an 87-46 victory over the Tuskegee Institute Golden Tigers, Monday night at the Joe Louis Gymnasium.

It was a tight game for the first ten minutes, with Ross and Charles Bolden trading baskets while Tuskegee's John Reynolds and James Crawford, transferred from Carver High, Dothan, Ala., for a 4-all count.

Ross sank two charity tosses and Reynolds hit from outside for a 6-all margin. Then Ross and Curtis Bell matched shots with Crawford and Reynolds to make the score 10-10 in the first five minutes of play.

TUSKEGEE MOVES AHEAD 16-TO-12

With the score deadlocked 12-12, Reynolds and Edward Myrick, of Pittsburgh, Pa., dropped two straight baskets as the Golden Tigers moved ahead, 16-12. Robert Myles and James Scott, Morris Brown's rangy 6-8 newcomer, knotted the count 17-17, then the Purple Wolverines ran up a 14-point spread. Earl Watts went to work and reduced the margin to 34-29 at intermission.

Robert Barnett, of South Fulton High, teamed up with Ross as Morris Brown pulled away again early in the second half and at the 15-minute mark the Wolverines had a commanding 56-36 lead.

With Ross, Myles, Bell continuing to set a blistering pace Morris Brown increased the margin to 62-39 at the ten-minute mark; 77-43 with five minutes left on the clock; and then went on to put the game in the bag.

Ross tossed in 27 points for high scoring honors and Myles was the No. 2 man with 19. John Reynolds hit for 14 to lead the Tuskegee scorers, and Bell trailed a single point with 13.

Tuskegee, Albany Cagers To Clash

DOTHAN — The local Tuskegee Institute Alumni Association will sponsor Dothan's first college basketball game Friday, Feb. 9 when Tuskegee's Golden Tigers meet headon with Albany State College at Lincoln Community Center.

Many of the local fans will not only be seeing Tuskegee's team for the first time, but it will also be the first college basketball experience for them.

Another important factor involved is, playing with the Golden Tigers are, four former Carver High Lions, the Reynolds brothers, Johnnie and C. L., plus Ben Crawford and M. McCloud, members of the famed "10 Tall Men" who made a record for Dothan. Local fans are invited to be present to see and cheer them.

PRELIMINARY

Two local high school basketball teams, Columbia and Headland will play the preliminary game beginning at 7 p.m. The main attraction will begin at 8 p.m.

According to Andrew Belle, association president, Prof. John T. Porter, principal, Carver High where the "Ten Tall Men" played, joins other local citizens in welcoming the return of the local boys, also Tuskegee's Golden Tigers and Albany State.

President Belle also stated that only a few more tickets remain on hand. Persons desiring to get seats for the event will do well to purchase theirs today.

Rattlers Win Tournament In Battle With Tuskegee

By INEZ J. BASKIN

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—Beauties, basketball and "box seats" (real boxes) were the order of the night in Logan Hall Saturday as we watched the tournament from the sidelines.

As we entered while only persons with tickets were being let in and approximately 300 were left outside, the announcer was presenting the queens of the Mississippi. In the midst of this Earl Henry was paged for ambulance to John Andrew Hospital. Thus the evening of basketball began.

In this packed hall we sat on event from Alabama, Georgia and the box of films of the "flash man" and, at the beginning of the game, had our first experience of sideline thrills when one of the AMU players landed on his spine almost in our lap. We took one quick look around the sidelines and saw many familiar faces: President Trenholm (beside us), F. W. Taylor Sr. and Coach Simmons (ASC), right behind us, Mrs. JoAnn Robinson across the court, Buddy Spears, near press box; on opposite side of court, Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Williams.

GAME STARTS

At this point things began to happen on the floor. We got our first glimpse of Leo Morgan in action (13). His jersey number proved to be bad luck for the Golden Tigers, as he kept the FAMU alive at the free throw line, with the help of Jim Forchin (15). With eight minutes and 45 seconds left to play in a quarter (we don't know which one, we were just enjoying the game), the scores were Florida 35 and Tigers 26.

When the next quarter began, Walt Kennedy (22), who looked seven feet to us from where we were sitting, placed another lay-up shot. We thought that the Globetrotters or the Magicians had nothing on these college lads. They had such a razzle-dazzle at some points your novice columnist couldn't keep up with the plays. With all of this happening, at the halftime the scores were 47-30 in favor of Sunshine State.

DANCE ROUTINE

The halftime show featured freshman women, all physical education majors in precision calesthenics. Then Miss Sylvia Butler and Charles Stewart presented a dance routine, entitled "Peter Gunn." She is a physical education major and he is a commercial dietetics major.

Going into the second half, "Jim Forchin scoring for Florida," became the refrain of the announcer. The teams began swapping baskets and making so many fast breaks that at times the referees could not agree on who had done what, until things were straightened out by the commissioner, B. T. Harvey. Tuskegee's Earl Watts got hot and began hitting baskets from all over the court. Then, with the tallies 60-43, for the people at the side of the court, it was turn, twist, turn and twist as they tried to keep up with the players each making a basket. As scores rose so did tempers. At one point, the referee from Tennessee State was overheard telling a player, "I don't make the rules, I only call them." It was a foul on No. 13 (Morgan). With only seconds left to play and Florida trying for the century mark, with scores 98-69, an explosion was narrowly averted by FAMU's 14 and the Tigers' 15.

We had heard that the rules on freezing had been changed, but with five seconds to play, that was just what these two teams did, played until the final buzzer which "froze" the scores at 100-70 in favor of FAMU.

Holding the trophy, one of the largest your columnist has ever seen presented, and looking proud were Leo Morgan and Edward E. Oglesby.

A smaller trophy was presented to Tuskegee. Florida was the recipient of another trophy as co-champions with Xavier in the Visitation series.

State Hornets Train For Tuskegee Contest

By SAMUEL HUFFMAN

The Alabama State Hornets, having acquitted themselves well over the weekend by copping wins over highly regarded Georgia quintets will begin preparation today for the invasion of their toughest rival of the season, the Tuskegee Golden Tigers. Tuskegee will invade Hornet territory Friday night at 7:30 and the results of this contest could very well serve as a guidepost to the rest of the season for both of the teams.

'Bama has not yet invaded into tougher competition of the SIAC, but beginning with Friday night's contest the going will become rougher with each game. Their contest with the Golden Tigers will be a rough one since Tuskegee will be trying to keep 'Bama from qualifying for the SIAC tournament, a trick that 'Bama has been playing on them for the last five years.

Tuskegee has already won six games and four additional wins could mean that they would appear in the tournament this year. Among their victims is the Florida A&M Rattlers, a team they defeated in Logan Hall for their initial win of the season.

The Tuskegee team is spearheaded by four freshmen from Dothan who carried Carver High to the finals of the National tournament last year. These boys, plus several veteran performers from last year's squad has Tuskegee off to its best start in years.

'Bama State is in the process of rebuilding after many years among top teams of the conference. The general opinion around Montgomery is that the Hornets will have to do a lot of improving to be qualifying for the tournament this year. A win over Tuskegee Friday night would increase their chances since teams will be chosen by the Dickerson rating system.

The return to form of Henry Moton, who poured in 31 points against Morris Brown and the continued fine play of Henry Madison and Charles Cole has given rise to hope that 'Bama will improve. This trio along with several freshmen on the team, gave 'Bama a potent offense against her two opponents last week. If Coach C. J. Dunn can strengthen his defense that looked woefully weak in the last two games, 'Bama has a good chance in Friday night's contest.

Tuskegee Rips Alabama State Quint, 92-80

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Color, excitement, drama, surrounded every play as Golden Tiger Tuskegee tripped deadly foe, Alabama State College, 92-80, before a jam-packed, tense, nervous crowd of spectators here in Logan Hall Wednesday night.

James Lightfoot entered the game into the first period to sizzle 15 crucial points through the netting to enable Tuskegee to move ahead, 41-33, at the intermission. Added impetus to the Tuskegee drive came from Jesse Crawford who plumped 12.

Alabama State played valiently in the second half to close the intermission gap and take the lead from Tuskegee, but a capricious dame smiled on her rival — Tuskegee. Hornet substitute, James Kimbrough, caught fire in the second half to singe the netting with 11 points for a total of 21 to lead the Alabama State scoring thrust, while his teammates Henry Moton and Henry Madison flipped 17 and 15 respectively in a losing effort to keep the Hornets in contention.

But James Crawford, Tiger scoring ace, warmed up considerably in the second half and arched 17 points for a total of 29 to capture individual game scoring honors.

Golden Tigers reliables James Lightfoot, canned 17; Warren Reynolds trickled 13; Bobby Copeland tipped 12 and Johnnie Reynolds bagged 10 to share in the double column for the victors.

Dr. Dibble's Odyssey

DR. EUGENE DIBBLE, the distinguished Negro physician who serves as medical director of the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital in Tuskegee, was one of a team of doctors who recently completed a 45,000-mile medical missionary tour.

The idea—called Project Brother's Keeper—was born two years ago in Louisville, Ky., at the Baptist Layman's Leadership Institute. In a discussion among doctors attending the Institute, it was proposed that some better way could be found for them to put their faith into practice, "to show Christian love through the practice of medicine."

The Baptist World Alliance agreed to sponsor the resulting plan to tour mission hospitals throughout the world, sharing medical knowledge and surveying the needs of medical missions.

Six doctors, including Dr. Dibble, made the tour. The others were Dr. Gabe Payne, a Kentucky pediatrician; Dr. Robert Hingson, director of anesthesiology at Western Reserve University; Dr. Blanchard Antes, Ohio obstetrician; Dr. Charles Black, Louisiana surgeon; Dr. John Cleland, Oregon surgeon.

Two of the team were Episcopalians, two Southern Baptists, one an American Baptist and one a Methodist. In an unusual demonstration of inter-faith cooperation and personal concern for the peoples of the world, they toured 100 hospitals and 50 schools and universities. They performed 120 surgical operations; administered 90,000 vaccinations against polio, typhoid, cholera and tetanus; distributed $100,000 worth of medical supplies, drugs and books; delivered 128 medical lectures at missions and schools; participated in 47 conferences with health officials and government leaders: gave 96 sermons and religious lectures in 27 countries.

In Nigeria they found 31 native doctors trying to serve 35,000,000 people. In one African country they met three American nurses who had delivered 900 babies. They inoculated 9,000 Gaza Strip children against polio and received the personal thanks of President Nasser.

Rarely did any member of the team get a full night's sleep. Over the China Sea their plane was struck by lightning. Time and time again they dug into their own pockets to buy food for starving children.

Beyond the immediate accomplishments of the medical odyssey was its effectiveness in dramatizing the work that must be done in remote corners of the world. Project Brother's Keeper is now a permanent function of the Baptist World Alliance in Washington.

It is not surprising to learn that Dr. Dribble played a part in the humanitarian venture for he has already contributed greatly to the medical welfare of members of his race in Alabama and the South.

FAMU Rattlers Sweep Tuskegee Tigers 4-1, 9-6

TALLAHASSEE — Joe Roberts, A freshman Hurler, scattered two hits and went the route as Florida A. and M. Downed Tuskegee Institute 4-1 to take a clean sweep of the two game series played here.

Ben Pratt had to call upon fireballer James Carmichael of Atlanta to relieve him in the fifth in the opener. Pratt received credit for the 9-6 Rattler victory.

The big gun for the series which gives A. and M. a 2-0 SIAC record for the season was Al Cherry, a freshmen subsecond sacker. Cherry hit a homer in the first contest and came back Saturday with a circuit blow in the fourth to tie the game at one all.

The SIAC 58 third place Rattlers cross bats with the loop champions from Alabama State here Friday and Saturday.

FAMU whips Tuskegee, 100-70, for caae title

The Tuskegee Song

MUSIC BY N. CLARK SMITH

Tuskegee, thou pride of the swift growing South,
We pay thee our homage today,
For the worth of the deepest, the joy of they care;
And the good we have known 'neath thy sway.
Oh, long-striving mother of diligent sons,
And of daughters, whose strength is their pride,
We will love thee forever, and ever shall walk
Thro' the oncoming years at thy side.
Thy hand we have held up the difficult steeps,
When painful and slow was the pace,
And onward and upward we've labored with thee
For the glory of God and our race.
The fields smile to greet us, the forests are glad,
The ring of the anvil and hoe
Have a music as thrilling and sweet as a harp
Which thou taught us to hear and to know.

Oh, mother Tuskegee, thou shinest today
As a gem in the fairest of lands;
Thou gavest the heav'n-blessed power to see
The worth of our minds and our hands.
We thank thee, we bless thee, we pray for thee years
Imploring with grateful accord,
Full fruit for thy striving, time longer to strive,
Sweet love and true labor's reward.

—Paul Laurence Dunbar

State, Tuskegee Play Today

The Montgomery Advertiser

Two old-time rivals—Alabama State and Tuskegee Institute — are all set to tangle Thursday afternoon in Cramton Bowl. The kickoff is slated for 1:30 p.m.

Upwards of 14,000 fans are expected to see the 36th renewal of the Hornet-Tiger rivalry at Montgomery, Ala.

The Hornets, ranked 5th in the 16-team SIAC, rules a touchdown favorite over the tenth-ranked Tigers.

TUSKEGEE	ALA. STATE
7 Xavier 6	14 Xavier 19
28 Fisk 8	14 Lane 8
33 Miles 14	0 Morehouse 26
6 Clark 6	24 Clark 24
10 Knoxville 21	22 Ala. A&M 0
0 Morehouse 6	14 Savannah 14
8 Ft. Valley 14	26 Fisk 6

Alabama State has a 3-2 record in the conference while Tuskegee's record is 2-3. The Hornets are 3-2-2 for the season while the Tigers boast of a overall record of 4-3-1

Tuskegee holds a wide margin in the past games. The Tigers have won the classic 23 times while losing only nine times. Three games were ties.

Tuskegee, an underdog last year, managed to outscore the Hornets in a wild encounter, 24-20.

A huge downtown parade will be held Thursday morning starting at 9 a.m. The parade will begin at the State Capitol and proceed down Dexter avenue to Court Square and up Montgomery street.

Dean J. Garrick Hardy, parade chairman, predicted yesterday that some 35 high school bands from all sections of Alabama would be in the parade. The Alabama State and Tuskegee College bands will also participate.

In addition, Hardy announced that 25 floats, three marching units and 20 decorated automobiles and the Branch YMCA Bicycle Club are expected to march in the review.

Tuskegee expects to fill the air with passes in this important skirmish. Coach Whitney Van Cleve expects his ace passer—Willie Williams — to be ready for action in the game. He has been injured but the trainer has assured Van Cleve that Williams will be ready for duty.

The Hornets have a strong running game and Tuskegee's defense will get a thorough test in this annual classic.

Devils Seek 4th Win

New Orleans, La.

Sat. 11-14-59.

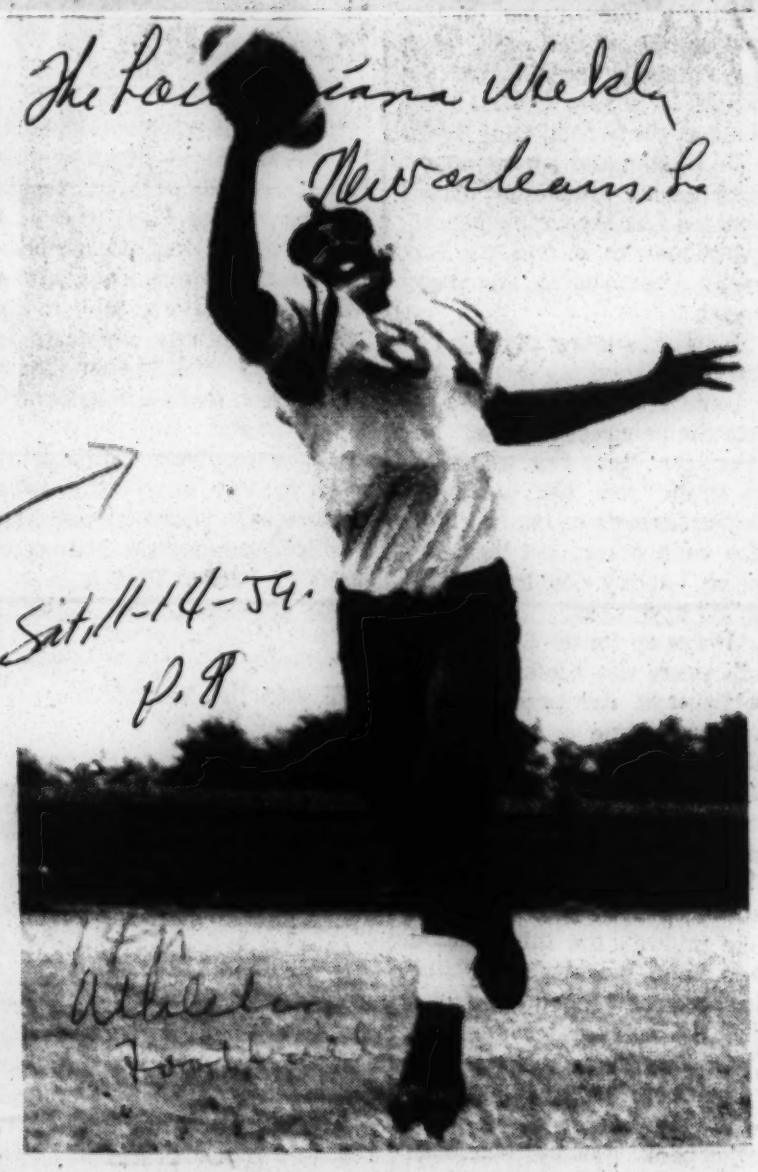
Dillard University Blue Devils, co-holders of the 1959 Gulf Coast Athletic Conference football championship and the Tuskegee Golden Tigers come to grips here Saturday in their annual traditional gridiron game.

Kick-off time will be 2 p. m. at Dillard's Alumni Stadium.

The Blue Devils fresh from a thrilling 20-19 triumph over the Rust College Bearcats in Holly Springs, Miss., last week will be seeking their fourth victory against three setbacks when they tangle with the Tigers.

Tuskegee will be seeking its fourth of the '59 campaign. With a convincing 34-14 nod over Miles College last week, the Tigers will face Dillard with a 3-3-1 seasonal mark.

The locals hold wins over Philander Smith (21-18); Tougaloo (34-0) and Rust (20-19). Dillard bowed to Bishop, who shares the '59 G. C. A. C. (34-0); Fisk (20-0) and Texas College (8-6).



BLUE DEVILS' FIELD BOSS - Durable Melford Spooner, Dillard University captain and veteran terminal player will lead his Blue Devil teammates into battle against the Tuskegee Golden Tigers Saturday afternoon in Alumni Stadium. Last year, the Tigers razor edged Dillard in a 14-13 score at Tuskegee. (NOLAN MARSHALL PHOTO)

The Tigers downed Dillard's cross town rival Xavier (7-6); Fisk (26-7) and last week knocked off Miles. Tuskegee fell into the loss column against Knoxville (12-8); Fort Valley (14-6) and Morehouse (6-0) and has a 6-6 tie on the books with Clark.

This series between Dillard and Tuskegee has been a you and Tuskegee has been a "you win one, I win one" affair on a home-and-home basis.

Last year, Tuskegee edged Dillard 14-13, and Dillard welcomes the re-match Saturday.

Here in 1957, the Blue Devils socked the Tigers 19-6; and in '56, Tuskegee dropped Dillard 19-14. The Blue Devils downed their Saturday foes from Alabama 12-6 in 1955.

With only two players in the first aid room, namely Eugene Love, end and Claude Carbo, fullback, coach Bill Martin and his capable assistants will be working long hours this week, sharpening up their offensive plays they intend to use against the Tigers.

Reports reveal that the Tigers are big and strong and their club has zest for action.

For this expected action-packed encounter, Coach Martin will depend on quarterback Billy G. Washington, fullback Thomas Letcher, and halfbacks Nelson Meyers and Irvin Overton to delivery the vin Overton to deliver the TD punch.

Line labors for Dillard will be performed by Melford Spooner, end; William Watkins and Johnny Cunningham at tackles; John Lee and William Minard at guards and Eugene Polk at center.

Buddy Crutch, a 175-pound halfback from Chattanooga, Tenn., raced 80 yards early in the first period to score the game's only touchdown as the Maroon Tigers of Morehouse College defeated Tuskegee's Golden Tigers, 6-0, Friday night at Memorial Stadium before a crowd estimated at 18,000 fans.

The victory snapped a five-year jinx for the Tigers from Atlanta who hadn't tasted victory in this annual Negro classic since 1953.

This was the 24th renewal of the fall attraction which was first held in Columbus in 1936. Although losing Friday night, the Golden Tigers still hold a wide margin in games won with 15 victories against five defeats. Four games ended in ties.

Yards runback on intercepted pass: Tuskegee, 21; Morehouse, 27.

Punting average of: Tuskegee, 32.4; Morehouse, 32.8.

Total yards kick returns: Tuskegee, 64; Morehouse, 116.

Yards lost by penalties: Tuskegee, 45; Morehouse, 75.

Opponenent fumbles received: Tuskegee, 2; Morehouse, 1.

Although it was Crutch's run that proved to be the margin of victory, it was the fine play, both on offense and defense, by fullback Taft McCoy, 180-pounder for Atlanta that saved the game.

Twice in the late stages of the game McCoy was a figure of defense. The first was on a recovery of a Tuskegee Fumble when the Golden Tigers were driving towards the Morehouse goal. The second was an intercepted pass that halted a strong Tuskegee touchdown drive.

McCoy also led the Maroon Tigers in yards rushing with 39 yards in nine carries. Isiah Coates, a Morehouse quarterback, was next with 39 yards in 13 tries. For Tuskegee, Harrell Moore was the top ground gainer for the Golden Tigers with 29 yards in 10 carries. Fullback Charles McGhee was next with 35 yards in 12 tries.

As usual, the game was a hard-knocking affair from start to finish with both teams gang-tackling most of the time. By the end of the first period, most of the players were covered with mud from the field which had been soaked with rain for the past five days.

Tuskegee won the toss, elected to receive and the ball game was under way as Moore took the Morehouse kick and returned it to the Golden Tiger 26.

Three running plays picked up eight yards and a 15-yard penalty aided the Golden Tigers to the Tuskegee 49. But here the attack bogged and forced a punt, Willie Williamson's kick being taken by Crutch on the 20-yard line.

There the halfback finding a perfect alley down the right sideline scampered for 80 yards with blocking taking care of would-be tacklers at the 15 and the five and he scooted into the end zone and Morehouse had its first half touchdown.

The point after failed and the Maroon Tigers led, 6-0, with the game only three and a half minutes old.

But what started out to be a wide-open ball game as far as Morehouse was concerned, turned into a bitter battle with neither team giving an inch. The first period ended with Morehouse punting from their own 44.

A 15-yard clipping penalty put Tuskegee back on its own five as the second period started, but the Golden Tigers put together one of their best drives of the night, picking up four first downs and moving to the Morehouse 39 before the Maroon Tiger line stiffened and held, forcing a punt.

Midway in the second period, Crutch again started Morehouse on a drive by taking a Tuskegee punt and returning it to the 30 of Morehouse. From there the Maroon Tigers moved steadily downfield to the six-yard line where it was first down and goal to go. But a 15-yard penalty pushed the ball back to the 21 and quarterback Jennings Coleman saw his pass intercepted by Moore and returned to the 30 to kill the Morehouse threat.

Shortly thereafter the first half came to a close with Morehouse still holding its 6-0 advantage.

During the halftime bands from both institutions put on a colorful musical display. In one portion of the ceremony the lights in the stadium were extinguished and the bands with sparkling lights attached to both head gear and feet, put on a remarkable performance.

When play resumed in the second half, Morehouse kicked off, but ball possession did the Golden Tigers little good for a 15-yard clipping penalty halted the drive before it could get started.

Most of the third period was played between the 40s, although midway in the period, Morehouse got off a quick kick that rolled dead on the Tuskegee four-yard line, putting the Golden Tigers in the hole for most of the remaining time in the period.

Late in the period, Tuskegee, got a big break when Coates, on a keeper play, was tackled by Glover Jones of Columbus, former Spencer High star. The jolting tackle caused Coates to fumble and Jones fell on the free ball at the Morehouse 45 just as the third period ended.

With just seconds gone of the final period, the Golden Tigers started what appeared to be a ball-drive. William Dillard, replacing Willie Williams at quarterback, tossed a seven-yarder to end Robert Duckworth to the 38. Dillard found Jones for 12 yards and a first down on the 26 and hit the Columbus end again for four yards to the 22.

McGhee, on carries of five and three years, moved to the 14, and Dillard to Robert Walker pass was good to the seven. But on the next play, Walker fumbled and McCoy fell on the ball and the Tuskegee drive was dead.

Late in the period and with Tuskegee making a last-ditch attempt to even the score, the Golden Tigers again went on a drive, starting on the Tuskegee 35. Carries by Walker were good for nine and 12 yards to the Morehouse 44. Dillard threw a perfect strike to Walker who had gotten between the Morehouse defenders and had a clear path to paydirt, but the Tuskegee halfback dropped the ball.

That proved to be the end of the line for the Golden Tigers for on the next play, McCoy stole Dillard's pass intended for Jones on the Morehouse 20 and with only 2:47 left in the contest, the Maroon Tigers, picking up a first down, ran out the clock.

Score by periods:

Morehouse 6 0 0 0 —6

Skegee Shows New Huddle In 12-0 Win

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.
Dec 12-5-59

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Tuskegee's Golden Tigers struck for touchdowns in the second and third periods to envelope the Dillard Blue Devils, 12-0, in a muddy duel on a soggy field here Saturday.

Coach Whitney Van Cleve displayed his new double huddle as his Golden Tigers won their fourth against three setbacks. The Tiger backs would huddle behind the linemen huddled just behind the ball.

With seconds remaining in the first half Tuskegee assumed the lead on a 16-yard pass play from Quarterback J. Peters to Halfback Harrell Moore who went in standing up.

Taking to the air again in the third quarter, the Golden Tigers scored when Quarterback Willie Williams, who replaced Peters, fired a 23-yard pass to his end, Glover Jones, who stepped into the promised land standing up. Dillard's hapless Blue Devils never came beyond Tuskegee's 25-yard line in the game, and lacked the scoring punch they displayed in previous games this season.

Hornets And Tigers Gird For Thanksgiving Classic

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Nov 24-59

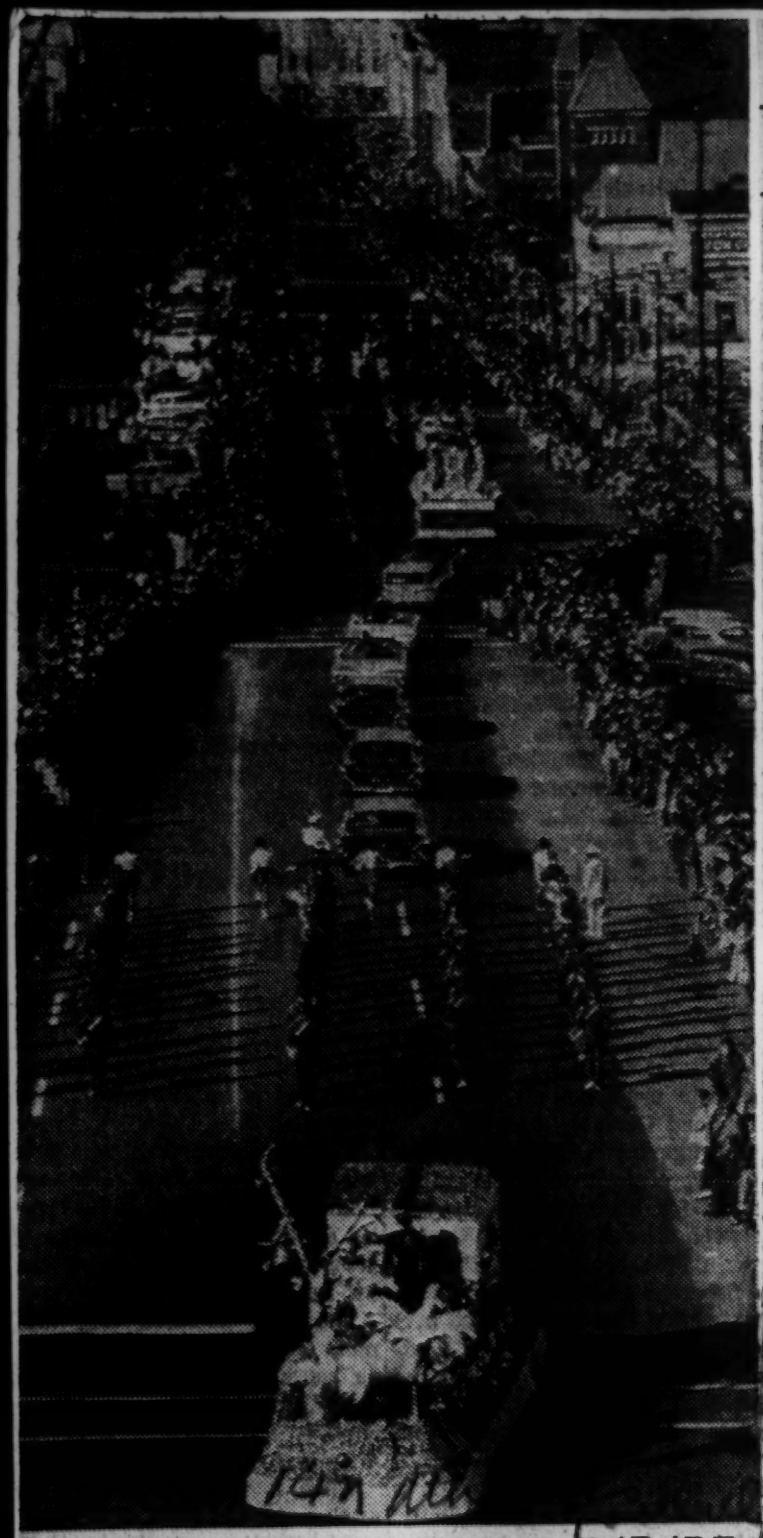
The 36th (1959) Cramton Bowl Classic is next for the Alabama State College Hornets and for the Tuskegee Institute Tigers as they [illegible] is a Thanksgiving Day feature with a downtown parade at 9 a.m. and with the kickoff at 1:30 in the afternoon.

Each team won its final pre-Thanksgiving game Saturday. At Hornet Stadium, the Hornets easily racked up their third conference victory by a 22-6 score over Fisk. At New Orleans, the Tigers scored their second non-conference victory over Dillard by a 13-0 margin.

At Cramton Bowl, the Hornets will pit their 3-2-1 conference record against the 2-3-1 conference record of the Tigers. For the season, the Hornet record is 3-2-2 as compared with the Tiger record of 4-3-1. Against their four mutual opponents, each won over Fisk, each lost to Morehouse, each had a tie-score against Clark, and they split against Xavier with a Tiger victory and a Hornet defeat.

The intervening 10 days will be devoted to intensive secret practice for the climaxing completion on Thanksgiving Day. Neither team plays on this next weekend. Some new plays and defensive strategy will be developed by the respective coaches. Our readers will be informed of the plans for the game as they develop.

Pre-game sale of adult tickets begins on Tuesday. The price for the three types of tickets is the same as last year: $2.50 for adults, $1 for "identified students" and 50 cents for children under 12.



NEGROES STAGE ANNUAL PARADE

The annual Thanksgiving pre-game parade of Alabama State College and Tuskegee Institute attracted a crowd of several thousand to downtown Montgomery Thursday morning. Shown here as it started down Dexter avenue, the parade included bands and other units from the two Negro colleges, 36 high school bands, 25 floats, 18 marching units and 20 decorated automobiles. Starting at the Capitol, the parade disbanded at Montgomery and Wilkinson streets. Most of the bands also played during the game at Cramton Bowl, where the Alabama State Hornets defeated the Tuskegee Tigers 22-20.—Staff Photo by Mike Smith

Hornets Will Try To Hike Position In Tiger Clash

By SAMUEL HUFFMAN

The Alabama State Hornets will attempt to solidify their position among the conference's top team Thursday when they meet head on with the Golden Tigers of Tuskegee in the 36th renewal of the Dixie Classic.

The Hornets were ranked fifth in the 17-team SIAC last week. A win Thursday at Cramton Bowl would help their chances of remaining there or possibly move them up a notch. Last season 'Bama finished in a second place tie behind powerful Florida A&M. For a while they flirted with the top spot and entered the Turkey Day clash with a chance to stay, but 'Skegee erased all hopes of winning. This year the shoe will be on the other foot. The Tigers have the upper position behind Florida and Clark and are favored to win. 'Bama can get sweet revenge by winning this year.

CLOSED DOORS

Coach A. E. Simmons and his staff have undergone some long hours of boning up since they closed out the season a week ago. Simmons ordered the gates to Hornet Stadium blocked last week which indicates he might spring something new on the Tigers. Up to this point 'Bama has been chiefly an air-minded crew. The attack has really been potent and Simmons isn't likely to discard it Thursday.

Early in the season 'Bama was badly crippled and had to throw the ball a lot. Since then all of the injuried backs have returned and are ready to go. Any idea that 'Bama cannot move on the ground is strictly rumor. The chances are Bama will unleash a double barreled attack both on the ground and in the air.

Both teams have blown hot and cold this year. Tuskegee, when good, has been very good and on other occasions has been unimpressive. The Golden Tigers' finest hour came when they routed highly respected Miles College 33-14. Their 6-6 deadlock with Clark on Georgia territory would also be considered a better than average effort. They lost 21-10 to punchless Knoxville in a shocking upset and were surprise losers to Ft. Valley. Golden Tiger's followers brushed off both of these losses with the explanation that ace quarterback Willie Williams was hurt. This is true but how much they missed him will never be known.

GOOD AND BAD

The Hornets have had their good and bad days too. They looked mighty impressive in their 28-28 tie with Clark. Their 22-0 whitewash job on the A&M Bulldogs was also a big win. Their 26-0 loss to Morehouse and 14-14 tie with Savannah State were both disappointing to Hornet fans.

An examination of the two teams' record against common opponents would seem to indicate that Tuskegee is superior to 'Bama. Records seldom are reliable in games of this type and especially when the two teams are as fired up as these two are. Tuskegee defeated Xavier 7-6 on their opener while these same boys rolled over 'Bama by a score of 19-14 a week later. 'Bama was routed 26-0 by Morehouse while the Tigers barely edged Tuskegee 6-0. Both teams tied Clark. The 'Skegee score was 6-6 with 'Bama's being 28-28. The Fisk club lost to both teams. Tuskegee romped to a 28-8 win and 'Bama breezed past them 26-6. A look at overall team scoring shows 'Bama out front. The Hornets scored 118 points for the season to a mere 92 for 'Skegee. Defensively, Tuskegee was ahead. They allowed only 75 points while 'Bama gave up 101 this season.

Tickets for the big game are now on sale and can be purchased at Arrington's Barber Shop, May and Green's Sporting Goods, Dean's Drug Store and Pake-Stevenson.

Tuskegee, Morehouse Bands In Columbus Classic Oct. 23

Tuskegee Inst., Ala. —The marching bonds of Tuskegee Institute and Morehouse College will take over during the colorful and entertaining features of the annual Tuskegee - Morehouse football game at Memorial Stadium, in Columbus, Ga., Friday night, October 23.

Both bands will be featured during the downtown street parade on Friday afternoon and will put on an elaborate demonstration while the fans are assembling prior to the game and during intermission.

On previous appearances in Columbus the Tuskegee and Morehouse musicians have been warmly received. Melville C. Bryant, director of 'Tuskegee's Crimson Pipers announced at band assembly this week that the musicians would pause during the annual street parade at the Ledger - Enquirer building for a salute to the press.

Bryant is a native of Gary, Indiana. He is a graduate of Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee, and upon graduation from Fisk he joined the faculty of the Dunbar High School in Lexington, Kentucky. He entered the Army in October, 1942, and served overseas with various Army bands. Shortly after his separation from the service in 1946 he became a member of the faculty of Dillard University, New Orleans, Louisiana. In 1956 he became a member of the faculty of 'Tuskegee Institute as director of the band and leader of the Institute orchestra. Both of these musical organizations have showed marked improvement under his leadership.

Accompanying the band to Columbus for the football game will be the talented group of majorettes. Dressed appropriately for the occasion the majorettes will lead the Tuskegee Band in the spectacular downtown street parade and will stage an eye-catching performance prior to the kickoff and during the intermission of the game.

Tuskegee Band Twirlers Are Talented Group

Tuskegee Inst., Ala., — Tuskegee will present to the public a group of talented femmine baton twirlers during its annual Columbus Classic.

The majorettes are expected to accompany the band to Columbus, Georgia, for the annual game with Morehouse College, October 23, and to Montgomery, November 26, on Thanksgiving Day, for the end-of-season game with Alabama State College

The personnel of the majorette corps as announced by Miss Nell C. Jackson, director, follows: Leader; Alean Howard, senior, Anniston, Alabama; Rosa L. Webb, sophomore, Indianapolis, Indiana; Willie Belle Tripp, sophomore, Miami, Florida; Rosa-Marie Smith, senior, Memphis, Tennessee, and Imogene Smith, sophomore, Waycross, Georgia.

As previously announced, Ellis R. Moore, a senior, whose home is in Bessemer, Alabama, will serve as drum major. He wil be assisted by Florence L Griffin, a sophomore, who came to Tuskegee from Jacksonville, Florida.

Morehouse Triumphs Over Tuskegee, 6-0

Atlanta Daily World, 14n athletics

COLUMBUS, Ga. (SNS) — Alphonzo (Buddy) Crutch's 80-yard punt return on the first play of the first quarter gave the Morehouse Maroon Tigers a 6-0 win over Tuskegee Institute here Friday night. It was Morehouse's first victory over the Golden Tigers since 1953 and gives the Maroons a three win, no loss, one tie record for the season.

A brilliant pass interception by Taft McCoy with 1:48 showing on the clock saved the day for Morehouse. The throw, by Willie Dillard, had TD written all over it. The game was played before 8,000 fans in Memorial Stadium.

The series with Tuskegee now stands at 16 wins for the Golden Tigers to five for Morehouse, with four games ending in deadlocked scores. The last Morehouse victory was by the lopsided score of 32-12. The Maroon Tigers return home to prepare for the "big one" in Atlanta next week against Clark College.

The score by quarters:

Knoxville Gets Revenge Over Skegee 21-10

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Knoxville College down Tuskegee Institute 21 to 10 here to get complete revenge for its 44 to 8 tumble to Tuskegee last year.

First downs: Knoxville 14, Tuskegee 11; yards rushing: Knoxville 178, Tuskegee 145; yards passing: Knoxville 94, Tuskegee 47; passes attempted: Knoxville 8, Tuskegee 16; passes completed: Knoxville 7, Tuskegee 7; passes intercepted by: Knoxville 2, Tuskegee 1; yards punting: Knoxville 195, 5—39 yard average, Tuskegee 214, 6—35.6 yard average; penalties: Knoxville 95, Tuskegee 85; fumbles lost: Knoxville 0, Tuskegee 1.

Scores by quarters: Tuskegee 7-3-0-0—10; Knoxville 0-0-7-14—21.

Touchdowns: Tuskegee quarterback Eddie Tetterson to Hasten Moore 35 yards, 7 yard field goal by Jones. Extra point, Jones 1 kick. Knoxville: Frank Thompson, 35 yard pass run, 1 yard plunge by James Carter, 23 yard pass interception by Shannon Jolly. Extra points, Carter 1 kicked, Robbins 1 passed from Carter.

Tuskegee And Morehouse Will Clash At Columbus

Montgomery Advertiser

COLUMBUS, Ga. — One of this section's best known gridiron rivalries will be renewed here Friday night when the Golden Tigers of Tuskegee Institute tackle the Maroon Tigers of Morehouse at Memorial Stadium. The starting hour for the game is 8:15 o'clock, EST. Fans are urged to arrive early in order to witness the colorful musical demonstration to be staged by the Tuskegee Institute and the Morehouse College Marching Bands, getting underway at 8 p.m.

Both teams are primed for one of the best battles of the long series which began here in 1936 and has continued without interruption since then. This is one game that the fans follow with keen interest and they come from several of the states in the South as well as from other sections to witness the annual Georgia-Alabama contest.

Tuskegee, undefeated to date, will enter the game determined to keep its record unblemished. At 1:30 p.m. Saturday the Golden Tigers were in Knoxville, where they met the Bulldogs of Knoxville College and at the same hour at Herndon Stadium in Atlanta the Morehouse Tigers were placing their season record on the line against the Hornets of Alabama State College of Montgomery.

Both Tuskegee and State suffered defeats over the weekend.

In the game with Morehouse, Tuskegee will lean heavily on Glover Jones, end, a product of Spencer High School. It was Jones who carried the ball over for Tuskegee's lone touchdown in the Tigers' opener against Xavier University of New Orleans and who seconds later stepped back and place-kicked the one-pointer that gave Tuskegee its 7-6 victory. Xavier scored first but the try for the extra point was wide. Tuskegee in reserve strength seems adequate.

Morehouse will depend on its aerial attack, Jennings to Arnold, to move the ball into Tuskegee territory. Scouts who have seen these two players in action are unanimous in praise of their performance.

Tickets for the game are on sale at 15 convenient locations in Columbus and Phenix City and in all areas at Fort Benning.

Tuskegee's Golden Tigers Tops Xavier Gold Rush, 7-6

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., — Golden Tiger Tuskegee nipped Xavier University (New Orleans) 7-6, in the last 17 seconds of play to climax a sensational drive which resembled a Hollywood picture studio thriller.

Xavier University scored first late in the fourth quarter on a drive which netted 4 first downs and a 6-pointer when George Love ploughed over from the Tuskegee 1-yard stripe. The attempt at conversion from placement by Xavier went wide.

On the kickoff after the Xavier touchdown Tuskegee began a sensational push from its own 32. A mixture of deceptive passing and running plays plus 2 costly errors which netted penalties against Xavier, Tuskegee pushed to the Xavier 9 whereupon Willie Williams drifted back and rifled a pass to Glover Jones who latched on to it in the end zone for the tying score. Jones a product of Spencer High School, Columbus, Ga., today's team captain, also kicked the extra point from placement. Williams held the ball. Tuskegee then led the visitors, 7-6, with 17 seconds left to play.

The teams were about evenly matched. There were frequent fumbles and miscues, stopping drives by Tuskegee, and pass interceptions stymied goalward marches by Xavier.

For three quarters both teams threatened with Xavier holding a slight edge. For three quarters neither team could borrow, buy or beg a point. Then came the fourth and a climax which would have made any Hollywood scenario writer gleeful. Tuskegee snatched a 1-point victory from the Xavier University combination in the last seconds of play.

A hurried glance at recent records disclosed that the victory over Xavier this afternoon was the first time that the Golden Tigers had turned back the Gold Rushmen since the crafty Tiger mentor took over the gridiron duties at Tuskegee.

Golden Tigers Outplay Fisk

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—Exploding like a barrel of fire crackers, the Golden Tigers of Tuskegee Institute scored three touchdowns and four extra points to defeat Fisk University, 28 to 8, here in the Alumni Bowl Saturday afternoon.

Slow in getting their offense to roll, the Golden Tigers sputtered and fluttered before catching fire in the second quarter. Several goalward marches were stymied by a slippery pigskin which Tuskegee backs simply could not keep within their grasp. Tuskegee missed more than three scoring opportunities by its failure to latch onto the elusive trophy that became a coveted free-for-all possession after each miscue. Then the passes, the forward lateral with its sweeping long gains around end and the dazzling end runs began to click. Before the spectators could settle comfortably back in their seats at the opening of the second quarter Tuskegee scored thrice to surpass and outclass the Fisk Bulldogs, 22 to 9.

Alert and aggressive Fisk launched a sustained drive in the first quarter which netted a six-pointer and two extra points to gain a temporary lead which the visitors held for about 10 playing minutes. After then, there was little doubt about the outcome of the Tigers' second game of the current season.

Scoring in the game here Saturday afternoon was done by Frank Jones, Harold Moore, John Rainey and Charles McGhee.

In the total yards gained rushing Tuskegee excelled Fisk 149 to 92. In forward passes completed Tuskegee had seven, two of which were haymakers, while Fisk edged the Tigers in pass completions with 10. In total yards gained from passing Tuskegee amassed 132 and Fisk 79.

In the third quarter Tuskegee crossed the Fisk goal for its final six points and its last score of the game to achieve its second consecutive conference victory in as many starts.

skegee Nips Xavier 49ers 7-6 In Opener

Tuskegee, Ala.—Having out played the Tigers of Tuskegee for three quarters, the Gold Rush of Xavier finally followed through on one of their many interrupted drives and scored from one yard away when George Love, freshman halfback, plunged over for a score. Failure to convert the extra point proved to be the margin of defeat one minute before the last whistle.

Irrespective of the number of first year men who saw action in the fray, the Priestleymen gave a good account of themselves throghout the hot afternoon. Sparked by second string quarterback, Cornell "Peanuts" Lowery, Xavier outfirst-downed the home team, but muffed three scoring opportunities before love drove over for the score.

In sheer despiration, the Tigers took to the air. A thirty-five yard pass interference ruling against the Gold Rush followed by a fifteen yard penalty set the home team up for a pass from quarterback Willie Williams to end Glover Jones who made a spectacular catch at the five and continued for the score. Successful conversion put the Tigers ahead with no time left for Xavier to retaliate.

Morehouse Tapers Off For Game With Clark, Saturday

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

UNDEFEATED BUT TIED MAROON TIGERS, MEET PANTHERS IN HERNDON STADIUM

After heavy, hard-hitting contact work Thursday, the Maroon Tigers of Morehouse College tapered off for their biggest game of the current grid campaign—the game which will match them against the Clark College Panthers at 2:00 p.m. on Saturday, October 31, at Herndon Stadium.

Both Clark College and Morehouse College are undefeated. Clark has been tied on two occasions, Morehouse on one occasion. Clark College defeated .Claflin .College and Ft. Valley State College while Morehouse College has defeated Alabama A & M College, Alabama State College and Tuskegee Institute.

Capt. Robert Stone, 215 pound junior tackle, Huntsville, Alabama, says "This ought to be our year." Mr. Stone, who, at one time was more interested in basketball than football, started playing football in 1953 while a student at the W. H. Councill High School, Huntsville, Alabama. During his first season on the gridiron, Stone played defensive center and line-backer. The next season he was shifted to tackle, a position which he has played for the past six years. Capt. Stone says that "Football is my first love. The game of football, like life, is a great challenge to me. I realize this even more, since I have been here at Morehouse College."

Capt. Stone is a seasoned player. He made the Morehouse Varsity during his freshman year, and he also won a letter during his sophomore year. "I am now in my third season at Morehouse, and I feel that this should be my year. I have about the weight I need for power and speed, this being 215 solid pounds."

A quiet modest, reserved individual, Capt. Stone was not bragging. As Capt. of the Maroon Tigers, he is determined to do his part, and to do it well. He works hard. He follows instructions. He observes the training rules. He also wields a steady influence over his fellow players. His teammates admire Stone; this is the reason that they elected him as captain of the team. And, to a man, these stellar Morehouse athletes will tell you that "He (Stone) is the most."

Capt. Stone is carrying a major in political science and a minor in economics. He is a member of the "M" Club. He also is a pledgee for the athletic fraternity, Sigma Delta Psi. In addition to his love for this All-American sport, football Capt. Stone's hobby is "collecting jazz albums, of which Miles Davis is my favorite." Morehouse and Clark will take good records into Saturday's showdown. Coach Duke Foster Jr. has a 3-0-1 record. Clark Coach Leonidas S. Epps has a 2-0-2 mark. Each team has fine runners and smart defensive units.

The records are as follows:

CLARK
18	Claflin	6
15	Font Valley	14
6	Tuskegee	6
28	Alabama State	28
?	Morehouse	?
MOREHOUSE
21	Alabama A&M	12
7	Hampton Inst.	7
26	Alabama State	0
6	Tuskegee Inst.	6
?	Clark	?

Alphonza (Buddy) Crutch, 19-year-old, 105-pound sophomore scatback, whose 80-yard gallop was the payoff against Tuskegee Institute, and Taft McCoy, 18-year-old, 180-pound, Samuel H. Archer High fullback, will lead Morehouse's bid for its first victory over Clark since 1955, when the Maroon Tigers, triumphed 28-7. His supporting cast of backs include Isiah Coates, 20-year-old 160 pound freshman quarterback from Atlanta's David T. Howard; Jennings Coleman, 19-year-old 170-pound junior signalcaller of Atlanta; Clinton Ransaw, 21-year-old, sophomore back from St. Petersburg, Fla.; Samuel, Lightfoot, 18-year-old 23-year-old fullback, Atlanta, and Lonnie King, 23-year-old, 210-pound senior, Atlanta.

Other possible starters are Homer Arnold, Hamilton Holmes, and William D. Light.

Clark backfield aces list Marvin S. Arrington, Turner, Atlanta; Milton E. Cherry, Rome; Fred Black, St. Pete, Fla.; Ray Hughes, Joseph Mullins, Robert L. McFadden, Farris Turner, Arthur Williams, capt. and fullback, Lorenzo Gleaton, captain and end; Ray Wynne, Johnny W. Scott and the Archer High fullback rave Albert L. Spearman.

Hooper City Plans To Send Tennis Team To Tuskegee Meet

Hooper City High School plans to send a tennis team to the 1959 Tuskegee Institute meet.

Coach John Redden made the announcement Friday night, April 17 at the school's all-sports banquet at which Dr. John W. Nixon, dentist, was guest speaker. Principal Paul L. Ware backed up Coach Redden in the announcement of the expanded interscholastic sports program.

Dr. Nixon told the festive-spirited athletes that Hooper City as a community had a glorious background and that the school has contributed much to the over-all sports picture" of this district.

The dentist said that sports "not only will prove to be enjoyable, but will develop your personality for the responsibility that will be yours when you become leaders of tomorrow.

"A person is not born with the knowledge of team work, fair play, winning or losing, but must learn these vital qualities through bitter experiences. To live in this world, We must have knowledge of team work, fair play and sportsmanship", declared the Ensley dentist.

He asserted that "to develop into complete men' 'one "must hav integration of mind, body and soul". Dr. Nixon declared that "competition is God's mandate for life; through it He constantly evolves his manifestation toward an ever-greater perfection. When we compete, when we constantly strive to be better, to be greater, to exceed ourselves as well as others, we are living in accord with one of life's greatest commanments, and constant progress is ours."

Guest Speaker Nixon also raised the question of spare time and leisure time. "In our cars we have spare tires that linger in our trunks unused ..... If you have spare time you are saving your brains, your energy and your talent for an emergency ..... We can never have spare time." Dr. Nixon urged the gathering to consider leisure time. "While youth is a time for yearning, youth s also a time for learning", he asserted.

Emory O. Jackson, managing editor of the Birmingham World, was also presented.

The program was entirely in the hands of students. Coach Redden recognized the seniors who would be graduating at the end of the 1957 school term. Band representativs and cheerleaders were also included in the sports courtesy. Two P-T. A. representatives were in attendance.

RESULTS OF INTRAMURAL TRACK MEET

Tuskegee Wed. 5-6-59

The Intramural Track Meet held in Alumni Bowl on Saturday, April 25, was full of excitement and keen competition. Tuskegee Women Turner Girls Win Team Honors

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Two relay records were shattered on the 33rd annual Tuskegee Relays Carnival and 31st annual Junior and Senior Women's Sports Day, held Friday and Saturday in historic Alumni Bowl.

Florida A. and M. University's track combination, composed of Willie Poole, Ralph Johnson, Clarence Childs and Zean Clayton, established a new record in the college Sprint Medley Relay. Clocked at 2:22.9, the Florida foursome erased the mark of 2:31.4 set by Philander Smith College in 1954.

Baton-carriers John Parks, Raymon Smith, Charlie Smith and Cecil Myrick, from David T. Howard High School, Atlanta, Ga., broke their own record in the High School 440-Yard Relay. Stepping the distance in 43.2, the Howard Rams smashed their 1958 record of 43.5.

TUSKEGEE, TURNER HIGH WIN WOMEN CHAMPIONSHIPS

Tuskegee Institute and Henry McNeal Turner High School, of Atlanta, swept the championships in the Junior and Senior Women's Sports Day, which opened the two-day carnival. Sparked by Freddie Daniels, Eva Frances, Vernell Golden, Nellie Guillary, and Anne Grooms, Tuskegee rolled up 111 points to capture the senior women's crown, while Turner, paced by Willie Lowe, Opal Tolan, Bettye Baker, Willie Mae Lane, Patricia Cost, Annie Weaver, Johnnie Mae Stephens and Estella Drain, tucked away the junior women's title with 67.2 points.

Runners-up in the women's events were the talented Mayor Daley Youth Foundation Team, of Chicago, Ill., and the David T. Howard High School lassies, of Atlanta, with 93 and 58.6 points, respectively.

FLORIDA, HOWARD, PARKER SHARE RELAY HONORS

Sharing laurels in the relays were Florida A. and M.; David T. Howard, of Atlanta; and Parker High School, of Birmingham, Ala. In addition to the Sprint Medley Relay, Florida won the 440-Yard Relay and the Two-Mile Relay, to carry home the beautiful Allen W. Gambrell Trophy. After its record performance in the 440-Yard Relay, Howard's gifted quartet of Cecil Myrick, John Parks, Raymond Smith and Charlie Smith, won the 880-Yard relay in stride.

Don Malone, of Fort Benning, who hails from San Francisco City College, San Francisco, Calif., won the Clarence Matthews Memorial 100 in 9.9. Right on his heels was Abner Williams, another Fort Benning GI and graduate of Hudson High, Selma, Ala. There were 27 starters in the classic Moton Mile, won by Wiley Lane, of Florida A. and M. Lane was followed across the finish line by three of his mates, including Eugene Mason and Charles Harper.

Annual Tuskegee Relays Attract 30 College And 30 High Schools

Montgomery Ala

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE—Thirty colleges and a similar number of high schools have accepted invitations to participate in the 33rd annual Tuskegee Relays to be held in the Alumni Bowl at the Institute, May 1 and 2. This is the largest entry list the Institute has had for the past several years, relay games officials revealed today.

Among the colleges expected to send top teams to the carnival are: Fisk University, Knoxville College, Lane College, LeMoyne College, Tennessee, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, Clark College, Fort Valley State College, South Carolina State College, Allen University, Benedict College, South College, Florida A&M University, Bethune - Cookman College, Xavier University, Alabama State College, Alabama A&M College, Tuskegee Institute, comprising the full membership of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference.

Other institutions to be represented at the relays are: Prairie View State College, Southern University, Grambling College, Dillard University, Tennessee A&I State College, Texas Southern University, Miles College, Savannah State College, Huston - Tillotson College, Alcorn College, Wiley College, Bishop College and Philander-Smith College.

The Clarence Matthews Memorial 100 mile is attracting the usual large list of entrants as well as the Moton Mile. The Moton Mile, won consistently by John Carroll of Tuskegee Institute several years ago, is recalled by old timers as a splendid exhibitin of endurance. Much interest is attached to the Moton mile this year since it was recently announced that Carroll is expected to be at Tuskegee for the 33rd running of the relays. Carroll is a native of Annapolis, Md.

The two-mile relay championship, won for the past several years by great teams from Xavier University of New Orleans, will be a featured event. Colleges sending teams to participate in this event are: Philander Smith College, Southern University, Florida A&M University, Alabama State College, Xavier Univeristy and Tuskegee Institute. The Tuskegee two-mile relay foursome is composed of James Hawkins, Huston Johnson, Sammie Jackson and Al Seals. The prize that will be awarded to the winners of the two-mile relay is the handsome Allen W. Gambrell trophy, made available by Clarence Johnson of Chicago.

The Army is sending several participants who have been entered in the special events.

While the running events always attract enthysiastic following, the field events will not be lacking in interest. The pole vault, the discus, the high jump, the broad jump and the shot put have numerous strong competitors.

Among the high schools sending teams are: Booker Washington, Archer, David T. Howard, Carver High, Atlanta; Beach High, Savannah; Burt High, Clarksville, Tenn.; Carver High, Montgomery; Cobb High, Anniston; Druid High, Tuscaloosa; Fairfield High, Howard Academy, Ocala, Fla.; Central High, Newnan, Ga.; Hudson High, Selma Howard High, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Middleton High, Tampa, Fla.; Parker High, Birmingham; Tuskegee Institute High and St. Jude Academy, Montgomery.

In the college and high school divisions the women will be well represented. The high school sections for young women have already reached the usual large number of entrants.

The relays will start at 6:30 Friday morning, May 1, and will continue through Saturay, May 2.

TUSKEGEE ANNOUNCES MERGER

The announcement was made by the President's Office that as of June 1, the School of Home Economics, Commercial Dietetics, Institution Management and Hospital Dietetics will be known as the SCHOOL OF HOME ECONOMICS AND FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

Miss Queen Shootes will serve as dean of the school.

Queen E. Shootes Named Dean Of New Tuskegee Institute Unit

Tuskegee, Ala., June 15.—Dr. L. H. Foster, President of Tuskegee Institute, recently announced that Miss Queen E. Shootes has been appointed dean of a consolidated administrative unit called the School of Home Economics and Food Administration. This school will include the programs in Home Economics, Commercial Dietetics, Institution Management, and Hospital Dietetics. Continuing as heads of these respective programs will be Miss Mayme Powell, Edward W. Ramsey and Mrs. Solona McDonald.

Miss Shootes, a native of Americus, Ga., is a graduate of Tuskegee Institute. She earned her B. S. degree on a four-year scholarship provided by the Edgar B. Stern family. Her M. S. degree from Cornell University and three years of further study at the University of Wisconsin were accomplished under a fellowship grant from the General Education Board. Miss Shootes is a candidate for the Ph.D. degree at the latter institution.

The new coordinated program is one of the recommendations of the recently completed comprehensive study of the Tuskegee Institute program. Coordination of the three programs will facilitate cooperative staffing, research development, and identification of program needs in light of rapid changes in society caused by population growth and technological advance.

Miss Shootes was recently director of the West Indies Home Economics Training Course (sponsored by the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations).

She began her teaching experience at Tuskegee Institute in the Department of Home Economics. She advanced to the rank of Associate Professor and served as acting head of the Department on two occasions.

She left Tuskegee Institute to serve as head of the Department of Home Economics at Lincoln University in Jefferson City, Mo. While there, she was asked by the Fulbright organization to take an assignment in Trinidad for a two-year period to introduce a course in home economics.

It was from this position that she went with FAO with headquarters at Jamaica, B. W. I. On this assignment she traveled extensively both in Central and South America, completing the assignment in November 1958.

REGIONAL EDUCATION

Alabama Profits By SREB Projects

(Last Of A Series)

Alabama has used the Southern regional education program in many ways to advance higher education.

A vastly increased demand for training at upper levels and in specialized subjects, producing the need for greatly expanded facilities, is an outstanding aspect of this dramatic and challenging situation in higher education.

"Regional education" could be expected to have made only a beginning of its contribution to meeting them in the 10 years of its existence in the South, which pioneered in this approach.

But a constructive and creative start has been made and Alabama has derived substantial benefits already.

This state is using student exchange contracts and "memoranda of agreement" for cooperative endeavors to high advantage.

Alabama Students Are Trained In Tennessee

There is no medical or dental college for Negroes in Alabama. Southern Regional Education Board exchange contracts are being used for the training of Negro medical and dental students from this state at Meharry Medical College in Nashville. In 1959 there have been 14 of these medical students, seven dental students. About these respective numbers were in these courses at Meharry for each of the 10 years in which the plan has been operating.

Alabama pays $2,000 annually for each of these medical students, $1,500 for each of the dental students. This goes to the institution providing the training.

Twenty Alabama students this year have received social work instruction under this exchange program. White students have attended the University of Tennessee, Louisiana State University, Tulane and Florida State University. Negro students have gone to Atlanta University.

Alabama since 1950 has paid and will, it is estimated, pay for the 1960 year for acceptance of students from this state in out-of-state institutions for training in medicine a total of $242,000; in dentistry, $135,000; in social work, $141,562.

Under the exchange system, many students from other states have received instruction in veterinary medicine at Auburn and Tuskegee.

Auburn is one of five schools in the entire 16-state region providing this training. It receives $1,500 for each student annually and for the 1959 year has received $209,500 for these contracts. Out-of-state students come from Florida, Mississippi.

Negro students from 10 Southern states attend Tuskegee's School of Veterinary Medicine under SREB contracts. Tuskegee also receives $1,500 annually for each student. Its income from this source for the 1958-59 period was $72,375.

Thus it may be seen that in veterinary medicine Alabama has greatly served the region and Auburn and Tuskegee have received large amounts to help in meeting their maintenance and development costs.

So far, SREB student exchange contracts have been made only in medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine and social work, in all of which cases Alabama participated in one way or the other. The development of such programs involves many considerations and naturally is relatively slow.

Under these contracts a state gets training for its residents which it is not itself prepared to give. It pays a certain amount for each student. The SREB contracts with the receiving institution to enroll the student, waiving out-of-state tuition.

One experimental program now in operation provides aid from the state of Tennessee for its own citizens in meeting part of their expenses in taking courses in forestry and architecture in institutions in four other states.

Alabama is deriving benefits from cooperative activities of the SREB and institutions in various fields of instruction, research and training.

For example, crop devastation by plant parasitic nematodes is a serious economic problem in the South. This state has helped plan and is taking part in a graduate summer session on nematology this summer at North Carolina State College.

Auburn Helps To Plan Veterinary Research

Dr. J. S. Greene, Auburn School of Veterinary Medicine dean, has served as a member of the planning subcommittee for a regional graduate summer session in biophysical principles in veterinary research, sponsored by 14 institutions, which is proposed for 1960.

Auburn and six other schools of forestry have signed a memorandum of agreement to "supplement each other's contribution in training and research in forestry. . . ." Forestry students from Tennessee have attended Auburn under student-aid contracts.

The University of Alabama and 11 other universities are working together to improve the teaching of statistics and increase the supply of statisticians. Graduate summer sessions in statistics have been sponsored in rotation at four universities.

The University of Alabama is one of six institutions which in 1955 began to offer graduate courses in nursing, for which there had been a great need. Thirty-five natives of Alabama have enrolled in these courses, 27 at the University of Alabama.

SREB special studies and consultative services in Educational Television have benefited Alabama and other Southern states.

Expansion and improvement of treatment for mental patients is an extremely urgent need in the South. On recommendation of Southern governors, SREB set up a mental health program, in which Alabama is participating.

The potentialities are unlimited for highly valuable state cooperation in dealing with challenging opportunities and numerous pressing problems in higher education. The SREB program could at this stage, after 10 years, still represent only a beginning of these endeavors. In these articles only an outline could be suggested of the fine things that already have been done. Further high achievements, one can be confident, lie ahead.—McCLELLAN VAN DER VEER.

Division of -SOCIAL SCIENCES

Mrs. Elva Howell, Miss Adelia H. Shields, Mr. R. D. Springer, Dr. G. T. Dowdy and Dr. Stanley H. Smith of the Division of Social Sciences of Tuskegee Institute, attended the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Association of Social Science Teachers at Atlanta University, Atlanta, Georgia, April 23-25.

Dr. G. T. Dowdy read a paper entitled "Early References to the Principles of Diminishing and Increasing Returns" and was appointed to the programme committee. Miss A. R. Shields was appointed to the Resolution and Publication Committees. Dr. Stanley H. Smith was re-appointed chairman of the Publication Committee and re-elected editor of the Journal. Mrs. Elva Howell was re-elected Assistant Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL SCIENCE RESEARCH
RECEIVES GRANT

The Department of Social Science Research, under its Acting Director, Dr. Lewis Jones, received a grant from the TACONIC Foundation for a study of intellectual and psychological retardation of youth and those factors that influence this impairment of personality development. The study will provide the basis for an experimental program to reduce these disabilities.

Mrs. Edith Washington, Mr. Shehee Unite In Lovely Presbyterian Ceremony

Mrs. Edith M. Washington became the bride of Mr. Walter T. Shehee on Sunday afternoon at five o'clock in the Westminster Presbyterian Church. Rev. G. E. Penson performed the double ring ceremony in the presence of the immediate families.

Mrs. Margaret Washington Cabiness was her mother's attendant and Mr. I. L. Guzman served Mr. Shehee as best man.

Mrs. Shehee chose for her wedding a dress of gray brocade with velvet trim. She wore a gray hat and her corsage was a yellow-throated purple orchid.

Mrs. Cabiness wore a dress of Ivory crepe. Her headdress was of aqua feathers and her corsage was white rosebuds.

Immediately following the ceremony the bridal party and guests enjoyed supper at the Shehee residence on Chambliss Street.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Edith Washington Hughes of Wilberforce, Ohio, daughter of Mrs. Shehee, and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Mickelberry and family of Atlanta, Ga., relatives of Mr. Shehee.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Shehee have been residents of Tuskegee for many years. Mrs. Shehee came to Tuskegee in 1914 and was a teacher in the Children's House for many years. More recently she has been employed on the Dean of Women's staff from which position she retired in 1957. She heads her own business of candy manufacturing.

Mr. Shehee is a member of the 1908 class of Tuskegee Institute and has been an employee of the school since his graduation. He was closely associated with Dr. Booker T. Washington and during a part of the administration of Dr. R. R. Moton he was a member of the Executive Council. He is a Past Master of Lewis Adams Masonic Lodge.

The couple will reside in Tuskegee Institute on Chambliss Street.

Mrs. Shehee is a life member of the National Council of Negro Women, an Alpha Kappa Alpha, soror, and a member of the National Association of Colored Women.

Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Van Dyke To Speak in Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., minister, will present two speakers for its annual observance of Women's Day, set for Oct. 11. At the morning worship the speaker will be Mrs. Luther Foster, wife of the president of Tuskegee Institute and case work supervisor in social work service at the U. S. veterans facility at Tuskegee.

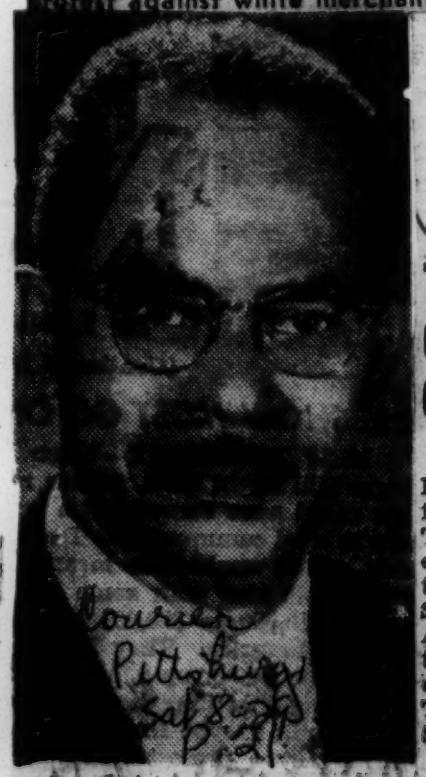
At the 7 P. M. hour, Mrs. H. L. Van Dyke, a member of the church who has recently returned from a two-year experience in Indonesia, where her husband had a Government assignment, will give impressions with slides and films of that country. Mrs. Van Dyke teaches health education and directs the student health service at Alabama State College.

A social hour will follow each of the services. Mmes. J. T. Brooks and C. T. Smiley are general co-chairmen for the observance.

Special guests for the morning worship will be members of the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, with which Mrs. Foster is affiliated, together with members of the Montgomery Tuskegee Club.

Guests for the evening hour will be members of the local chapters of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and the Anna M. Duncan Federated Club, with which Mrs. Van Dyke has affiliations.

Civic Leader Cited— Dr. Charles G. Gomillion, president of the Tuskegee Civic Association is presented the Russwurm Award by Birmingham World managing editor, Emory O. Jackson, Jr., representing the National Newspaper Publishers Association. Dr. Gomillion led Negro citizens of Tuskegee in an economic protest against white merchants of the city.



Back Home— Just returned to the United States is Dr. Alonzo J. Davis, dean of education at Tuskegee Institute, Ala. Dr. Davis was a member of the team of education specialists sent to Indonesia in 1957, assisting the Ministry of Education in developing a strong vocational education system for Indonesia.

Tuskegee Professor Granted Leave For Chicago Study

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.— Dr. A. P. Torrence, associate professor of agricultural education at Tuskegee Institute, has been granted a five-month leave of absence to work with the Center for the Study of Liberal Education for Adults in Chicago. He will help the Center plan expansion of adult education centers in the South. The leave will become effective September 1.

For nearly two years, Dr. Torrence has been working on projects for adult education in Southern Negro colleges.

Dr. Torrence graduated from Tennessee State University, Nashville, and received the master's and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Says 1958 School Ruling Shifts Burden Of Proof

Chicago Defender

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala.—A 1958 ruling by a three-judge Federal District Court signified that in future arguments against school segregation, the "burden of proof" will be on the shoulders of Negro plaintiffs, rather than on the segregationists, according to Dr. Stanley H. Smith, associate professor of sociology at Tuskegee Institute.

Dr. Smith, addressing the 122nd consecutive Tuesday night protest meeting of the Tuskegee Civic Association, said that the Oct. 4, 1958 ruling that the Alabama School Placement Law was "not unconstitutional on its face" shifted the burden of proof to the plaintiff.

UPHELD SUIT

He said that the Supreme Court upheld the decision involving the suit of Negro parents to enroll their children into two all-white schools in Birmingham.

"Judges throughout this decision," he said, "have suggested to Negro plaintiffs how not to argue and how they may go about arguing a similar case."

In the future, he predicted, Negroes must prove that "a law which is constitutional on its face may, in fact, be unconstitutional in its application."

He said that the Alabama School Placement Law and two other closely connected obstacles" must be overcome before an approach to legal equality in the public schools can be made.

He called the placement law "the main prop" of segregation in schools, and named as supporting obstacles the Boutwell (Freedom of Choice) Amendment and a 1957 amendment to the placement law, "giving local school boards subpoena power to call witnesses when specific assignments had been questioned."

Dr. Smith said that "it is now apparent that no school district in the Deep South has integrated its public schools," and added that it is also apparent that "these things will not be done voluntarily on the part of white officials."

The sociology professor told of the Macon County's school superintendent's pledge in 1955 to "work for equally good educational facilities for both races," but charged that instead, "the usual threats and intimidations were resorted to."

The board, he said, "threatened to dismiss everyone of the then 190 Negro teachers who took part in the so-called 'agitation.'"

Even now "most of the Negro schools in Macon County are old, obsolete and dilapidated by any standards,' he asserted, adding that janitorial service is so inadequate that "students have to spend considerable time sweeping and cleaning corridors and classrooms, and even shoveling coal.

Even teachers, he said, are hired in the Negro schools on "criteria other than training and ability.'

Blasts Society For Bow To Dixie

Chicago Defender

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Because of segregated accommodations, Dr. Lewis W. Jones, director of social science research at Tuskeegee Institute, has announced he will not attend a meeting of the Southern Sociological Society in Atlanta next April, and is urging other Negro members of the society to boycott the meeting.

A recent memorandum from SSS president, Dr. E. William Noland of the University of North Carolina, announcing the society's 1960 agenda, advised its members: "The Henry Grady Hotel (in Atlanta) will provide a private dining room for the Negro members of the Society."

ATLANTA CHOSEN

The memorandum stated that the choice of Atlanta was made through a poll of the membership and based on two "probably related" factors: (1) the popularity of Atlanta and (2) the custom of meeting centrally two out of every three years."

Among the states represented in the society's membership, Florida, Kentucky and Tennessee each permit interracial meetings. In the voting, New Orleans ranked second, and St. Petersburg, Fla., ranked third. Gatlinberg, where the group met unsegregated last year, ranked seventh.

Jones' letter replied to Dr. Noland: "If you consider that (the segregated arrangement) to be a gracious concession to the Society as a result of your astute leadership in making arrangements, consider again."

NEGROES EMBARRASED

The letter continued: "In the business meeting of the 1959 session, I pointedly called to your attention that it is unnecessary now to hold professional meetings where some members have to endure embarrassment and real inconvenience."

"I am suggesting to Negro members," the letter concluded, "that they remain away from all sessions but the business meeting and appear there asking for a declaration of policy."

Other Negro members of the society include: Dr. Charles G. Gomillion, president of the Tuskegee Civic Association and a member of the society's executive committee; Charles U. Smith, Florida A&M university, who is scheduled to lead a discussion on "Intergroup and Relations and Social Structure;" Charles H. Parrish, chairman, department of sociology at the University of Louisville; Dr. Stanley Smith, associate prof. of sociology at Tuskegee Institute; and Mrs. Adella Shields of the Tuskegee Institute division of social science research, directed by Jones.

OTHER DECISIONS

Gomillion, who is also chairman of the social science department at Tuskegee Institute, stated that he is withholding decision to atend the meeting pending correspondence with Noland.

Smith said that he is also writing to Noland concerning the accommodations, adding that he "definitely" would not attend any except the business meeting, and would object to the policy at that time.

Mrs. Shields said that she is also writing to Noland, expressing her feeling that "If any group at all should be realistic about this thing, it should be the sociologists." She said that she would attend only on the terms suggested in Jones' letter.

Mrs. Bettye Steele Turner Heads Vocational Teachers

Atlanta Daily World

Oct. 3, 1950

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Mrs. Bettye Steele Turner, of Tuskegee Institute, Ala. was elected president of the Alabama Vocational Teachers Association at the latter's business session held concurrently with the two-day 77th annual convention of the Alabama State Teachers Association at Alabama State College.

AVTA is an ASTA affiliate. Mrs. Turner's term runs for two years. She succeeds Dr. F. T. McQueen.

Under the AVTA's electoral structure, the office of the president rotates among teacher-educators in vocational agriculture, home economics, trades and industrial education. AVTA lists 350 or more in its membership.

Other officers elected were: A. L. Greer, first vice president, trade and industrial education; W. A. Rice, second vice president, agricultural education; H. J. Beans, executive secretary, agricultural education; D. B. Armstrong, executive treasurer, agricultural education; Mrs. Mildred H. Tapscott, assistant secretary, home economics education; T. A. Lawson, representative on the ASTA executive committee, trade and industrial education, and A. J. Brown, parliamentarian, agricultural education.

BECAUSE OF SEGREGATION

Tuskegee Educator Urges Negroes To Boycott Meet

TUSKEGEE (AP) — A Negro educator has urged members of his race to boycott a meeting in Atlanta because of segregated eating facilities.

Dr. Lewis W. Jones, director of social science research at Tuskegee Institute, says he was notified that Negroes will be served in a separate hotel dining room during the Southern Sociological Society convention next April.

Jones said he doesn't intend to be there at all, and urged other Negro members of the society to attend only the business session "asking for a declaration of policy."

In Atlanta, manager L. O. Moseley of the Henry Grady Hotel, where the meeting will be held, said the hotel will maintain its segregation policy and that Negro delegates have been offered a room where Negro employes of the hotel usually eat.

Moseley said the hotel has never before been asked to feed Negroes at such meetings, although Negroes have attended meetings there with white persons.

Jones made public a letter to the society's president, Dr.. E. William Noland of the University of North Carolina, who announced the arrangements.

"If you consider that (the segregated arrrangement) to be a gracious concession to the society as a result of your astute leadership," the letter said, "consider again."

"In the business meeting of the 1959 session, I pointedly called to your attention that it is unnecessary to hold professional meetings where some members have to endure embarrassment and real inconvenience."

Jones said the society has members in three states which permit interracial meetings — Florida, Kentucky and Tennessee — that Noland said a majority of the members voted for Atlanta.

Northern Ireland's leading industry is agriculture—no doubt about it. Within 5,459 square miles of land there are some very small, neatly spaced farms.

Segregated Meals Hit; Negro Boycott Is Urged

The mealtime segregation problem in Atlanta conventions was again criticized Wednesday as a Tuskegee Institute professor called for a Negro boycott of the Southern Sociological Society meeting in Atlanta next April.

The question also came up last week in the meeting of the Southern Historical Assn., but was referred to committee. (Negroes attended the discussion periods of the meeting, but were barred by Georgia law from sitting down to eat with whites.)

Earlier in the month Negro nurses in Georgia made a bid to be admitted to meetings of the Georgia State Nurses Assn. meeting here, but were informed that there were on "limited facilities."

ASKS OTHERS BOYCOTT

The latest move was by Dr. Lewis W. Jones, director of social science research at Tuskegee, ask other Negroes to boycott the meeting unless a change of policy is forthcoming. Dr. Jones said he would pass up the whole meeting himself.

Dr. Jones said that he had received a memorandum from the society's president, Dr. E. William Noland of the University of North Carolina, that the Henry Grady Hotel here would provide a "private dining room for Negro members of the society."

Dr. Jones replied: "If you consider that (the segregated arrangement) to be a gracious concession to the society as a result of your astute leadership in making arrangements, consider again."

Dr. Jones said the question had been brought up before and he had called to the president's attention that it was unnecessary to hold the meetings in cities where segregation is mandatory and Negro members "have to endure embarrassment and real inconvenience."

ASKS POLICY STATEMENT

Dr. Jones' letter added, "I am suggesting to all Negro members that they remain away from all sessions but the business meeting and appear there asking for a declaration of policy."

L. O. Moseley, manager of the Henry Grady, said that this was the first time the hotel had been called upon to feed Negroes at such meetings, although it has accepted meetings (as have other Atlanta hotels) where a few Negroes were among the whites attending.

Moseley said he had planned to use a dining room normally used by Negro employes of the hotel to feed the Negro group—having the employes eat elsewhere for the time.

Walter Crawford, director of the Atlanta Convention Bureau, said after the historical society's meeting last week that Atlanta undoubtedly has lost some conventions because of the segregation policy, but that Atlanta had 548 conventions last year.

Tuskegee's Dr. Jones said that the states of Florida, Kentucky and Tennessee would permit interracial meetings.

Prof cites proof Negro needed to win

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Analyzing the Supreme Court's refusal to overturn the state's pupil placement law, Dr. Stanley H. Smith predicted that in the future, colored plaintiffs must prove this:

"A law which is constitutional on its face may, in fact, be unconstitutional in its application."

Dr. Smith, sociology professor at Tuskegee Institute, addressed the 122nd consecutive Tuesday night protest meeting of the Tuskegee Civic Association.

"Judges throughout this decision," he said, "have suggested to colored plaintiffs how not to argue and how they may go about arguing a similar case."

* * *

DR. SMITH called the placement law the "main prop" of school segregation in the state.

He said: "It is now apparent that no school district in the Deep South has integrated its public schools and it is also apparent that these things will not be done voluntarily on the part of white officials."

Referring to the Macon County school superintendent's 1955 pledge to "work for equally good educational facilities for both races," he said:

"The usual threats and intimidations were resorted to. The board threatened to dismiss every one of the then 190 colored teachers who took part in the so-called 'agitation.'

* * *

"EVEN NOW, most of the colored schools in Macon County are old, obsolete and dilapidated by any standards."

He said janitorial service is so inadequate that "students have to spend considerable time sweeping and clearing corridors and classrooms and even shoveling coal."

Teachers, he said, are hired in colored schools on "criteria other than training and ability."

SEGREGATION CHARGED

Negro Boycott Urged For Atlanta Meeting

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP) — A member of the Tuskegee Institute faculty has asked other Negroes to boycott the Southern Sociological Society meeting in Atlanta next April because of segregation.

Dr. Lewis W. Jones, director of social science reseach at the famed Nego school, said today he will pass up the meeting himself.

Jones said a recent memorandum from the society's president, Dr. E. William Noland of the University of North Carolina, announced that an Atlanta hotel (Henry Grady) would "provide a private dining room for the Negro members of the society."

The Tuskegee educator said he wrote Noland that "if you consider that ((the segregated arrangement) to be a gracious concession to the society as a result of your astute leadership in making arrangements, consider again."

"In the business meeting of the 1959 session," Jones wrote, "I pointedly called to your attention that it is unnecessary to hold professional meetings where some members have to endure embarrassment and real inconvenience."

The letter added, "I am suggesting to all Negro members that they remain away from all sessions but the business meeting and appear there asking for a declaration of policy."

L. O. Moseley, manager of the Henry Grady, said this was the first time his hotel has been asked to feed Negroes at such meetings, although it has accepted meetings where a few Negroes were among the whites attending.

He said the hotel had offered use of a room where Negro employes eat for Negroes attending the sociological society convention. He said the employes would eat elsewhere.

Moseley added that the hotel will hold to its present policy.

Professor Says School 'Burden Of Proof' Rests On Negroes

Tuskegee Reader And Almond View

"As Maine goes . . ." I would like to paraphrase to "As Virginia goes, so goes the South." If, as they surely have been for the past several years, the Deep South leaders will take their cues or guides from the Virginia leadership, they too will accede to the ultimate and [illegible] law of the land and begin to come in line.

Surely no leader has been more adamant and legally staunch on the segregation line than former attorney general and now governor of Virginia, J. Lindsay Almond.

Despite his fondest and most biased dreams and hopes that Virginia and the South would stay united on a legal segregation front, he now realizes the facts and objectiveness of the realism that—as he puts it or implies—the Gettysburg of the current struggle is lost and to avoid the Appomatox, a few changes of mind and practice (our way of life) will have to be made.

Let us hope that the other Southern leaders and gentlemen—protectors of hospitality and congenial ways of the South—will be not only reasonable and peaceable men, but men of that sometimes rare attribute when needed most, common sense. This is all that the analyses now need. The axiom, that you cannot have your cake and eat it too, is becoming obvious, even in the South.

Old Employe Of Tuskegee Institute Dies

TUSKEGEE — Miss Cora O. Fant, employe of Tuskegee Institute for 43 years and one of the school's most ardent fund-raisers, died Sunday evening in a local hospital after a long illness.

Miss Fant came to Tuskegee in 1916 and began work in the office of publicity for fund raising while continuing her schooling. She served under the last three of the school's four presidents, beginning with Dr. Robert R. Moton, a year after the death of Tuskegee's founder, Booker T. Washington.

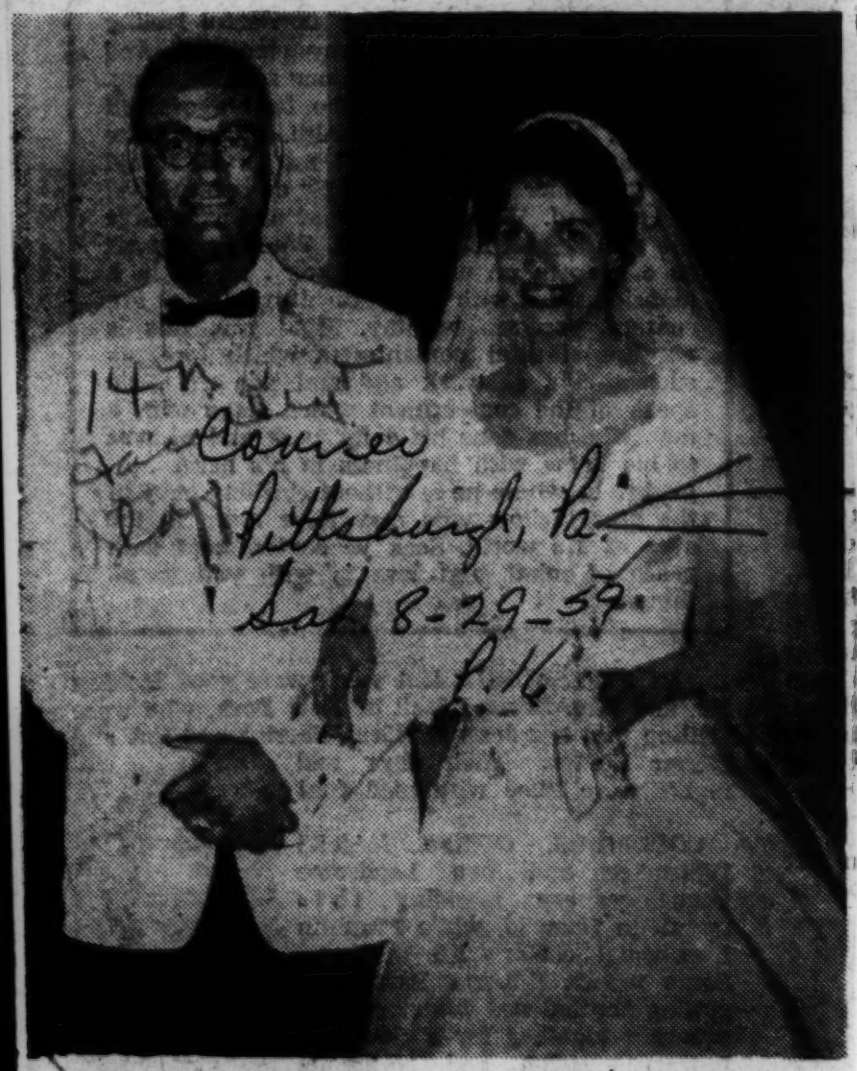
She graduated from the institute in 1940.

At the time of her death, she was a special gifts assistant in the school's institutional development program. She also assisted in setting up the United Negro College Fund and worked in the Pittsburg, Pa., office during 1944.

Miss Fant was born in Union, S. C., in 1900 and was the 11th of 12 children. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Josie Smith, Springfield, Ohio.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday at 2:30 p.m. from the Greenwood Baptist Church.

Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Dibble Is Married to William E. Holmes



MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM EDWARD HOLMES
... to live in Montreal

TUSKEGEE, Ala.—Miss Clarice Anita Dibble became the bride of William Edward Holmes on Aug. 8 at St. Andrews Episcopal Church with the Rev. Vernon A. Lewis officiating.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Herriot Dibble, Jr. and the groom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Clarence P. Holmes of Denver, Col.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown of ivory peau de soie with applique of lace encrusted with seed pearls. A train-length veil of illusion fell from a Juliet cap of Chantilly lace embroidered in seed pearls. Her bouquet of yellow-throated white orchids and stephanotis was attached to a white fan.

MRS. ANN DIBBLE COOK was matron of honor for her sister. The other attendants were Mrs. Eugene Dibble III, sister-in-law of the bride; Misses Sharlyn Smith, Curle Montere and Joan Smith. They wore identical dresses of champagne silk organza with matching contour veils of starched net. They carried rubum lilies with ivy.

Toni Cook and Rochon Dibble, nieces of the bride, and Elease Berry, niece of the groom, were flower girls. They wore dresses of pink organdy and carried baskets of pink roses. Robert Canady, nephew of the bride, was ringbearer.

James Gross served as best man and the ushers were John Tildon, Charles Sykes, Carl Pigford, Augustus White and Donald Chatman.

IMMEDIATELY following the ceremony, Dr. and Mrs. Dibble were hosts at a reception in the garden of their home.

The bride, whose father is medical director of the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital at Tuskegee Institute, graduated from the Northfield School for Girls in East Northfield, Mass., and from Sarah Lawrence College. She received a master's degree in June from the New York School of Social Work.

Mr. Holmes was graduated from the Mount Hermon School and Middlebury College. He is studying at the McGill University School of Dentistry in Montreal, Canada.

The couple will reside in Montreal.

Dr. Dibble's Odyssey

Montgomery Advertiser

DR. EUGENE DIBBLE, the distinguished Negro physician who serves as medical director of the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital in Tuskegee, was one of a team of doctors who recently completed a 45,000-mile medical missionary tour.

The idea—called Project Brother's Keeper—was born two years ago in Louisville, Ky., at the Baptist Layman's Leadership Institute. In a discussion among doctors attending the Institute, it was proposed that some better way could be found for them to put their faith into practice, "to show Christian love through the practice of medicine."

The Baptist World Alliance agreed to sponsor the resulting plan to tour mission hospitals throughout the world, sharing medical knowledge and surveying the needs of medical missions.

Six doctors, including Dr. Dibble, made the tour. The others were Dr. Gabe Payne, a Kentucky pediatrician; Dr. Robert Hingson, director of anesthesiology at Western Reserve University; Dr. Blanchard Antes, Ohio obstetrician; Dr. Charles Black, Louisiana surgeon; Dr. John Cleland, Oregon surgeon.

Two of the team were Episcopalians, two Southern Baptists, one an American Baptist and one a Methodist. In an unusual demonstration of inter-faith cooperation and personal concern for the peoples of the world, they toured 100 hospitals and 50 schools and universities. They performed 120 surgical operations; administered 90,000 vaccinations against polio, typhoid, cholera and tetanus; distributed $100,000 worth of medical supplies, drugs and books; delivered 128 medical lectures at missions and schools; participated in 47 conferences with health officials and government leaders: gave 96 sermons and religious lectures in 27 countries.

In Nigeria they found 31 native doctors trying to serve 35,000,000 people. In one African country they met three American nurses who had delivered 900 babies. They inoculated 9,000 Gaza Strip children against polio and received the personal thanks of President Nasser.

Rarely did any member of the team get a full night's sleep. Over the China Sea their plane was struck by lightning. Time and time again they dug into their own pockets to buy food for starving children.

Beyond the immediate accomplishments of the medical odyssey was its effectiveness in dramatizing the work that must be done in remote corners of the world. Project Brother's Keeper is now a permanent function of the Baptist World Alliance in Washington.

It is not surprising to learn that Dr. Dribble played a part in the humanitarian venture for he has already contributed greatly to the medical welfare of members of his race in Alabama and the South.

Dr. Dibble's Humanitarianism

Editor, The Advertiser:

I should like to express to you my appreciation for your fine editorial of Jan. 18 regarding Dr. Dibble of Andrew Hospital in Tuskegee.

My husband, the late Dr. R. B. McCann of Seale, Russell County, being physician to people of a large area had many contacts with Dr. Dibble who was always eager to serve and seeking larger fields of endeavor. For this reason, I was particularly interested in your comment.

The Alabama Baptist some months ago, had an article describing the tour to which you referred. I was glad to have your report of their mission to suffering humanity.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — The three were not strangers. They were friends.

In the teemy, tropical East African town of Samia, Kenya, Nicholas Wandia Raballa was born of farmer parents 25 years go. During his boyhood, he labored in the cotton fields of Samia, attended the Catholic mission schools provided by the British government, and listened daily to his elders conjecture on the eventual doffing of British domination, and possible higher education for African youngsters.

Samia is some 7,000 miles from Alabama where Martin Luther King, jr., has become a symbol of a people's struggle for freedom, and where Tuskegee Institute has been a symbol of educational hope for the hopeless since 1881.

BROUGHT TOGETHER

But events of the day have brought Rabalia, King and Tuskegee Institute together with an uncommon sense of mutuality, and with a purpose as old as brotherhood.

When Kenya's Tom Mboya visited the U. S. last May to corral U. S. business and enlist educational aid for his people, the dynamic young political leader was at one time the guest of Dr. King in Atlanta. Pursuing his purpose, the visitor told King and others that he had arranged for transportation for a number of African students to the U. S., but that once here, they needed aid.

In turn, King called on the Southern Negro Leadership Conference which he heads, his church and a number of individual friends

In September, 81 students (an all-time high) left Kenya for study abroad — six going to schools in Atlanta, and four, including Raballa, to Tuskegee.

Raballa came to Tuskegee at the recommendation of U. S.-educated Dr. Gikonyo Kiano, of the Kenya Parliament, and former classmate of Mrs. Martin L. King at Antioch. In coming, Raballa joined 36 other foreign students who come from other parts of Africa, Indonesia, India, China, South and Central America and the West Indies.

AFRICAN STUDENT Nicholas Wandia Raballa (l) and Martin Luther King meet at Tuskegee Institute, where Dr. King praised the financial support given by churches and groups to make American study possible for Africans.

STUDIES CHEMISTRY

A junior, majoring in chemistry, Raballa hopes to become either a medical doctor or a research specialist. Meanwhile, his fees will be paid by King and his friends, numbered among them the Southern Negro Leadership Conference and several churches in Montgomery.

Already, says King, three Negro churches in Montgomery have each agreed to sponsor an African student at Alabama State college next year, and he is looking for churches to sponsor five more African students.

He sees the increase in African students in America as "a very healthy thing," and points out that "one of the tragedies of segregation is that you seem to get a misconception of Africa." The result, he says, is that "you get only half-truths about African culture. We come to the point of being ashamed of our heritage."

CITES KING

Ranked by LINK, a leading weekly newsmagazine in India recently, as the world's 11th most effective worker for "the cause of independence and freedom," Dr King has positive notions on the effect Africans in American schools will have on international affairs.

"It will work to the good of the U. S.," he says decisively. "The foreign students will go to responsible positions some day, and I am sure that some of the experiences they have will be lasting in their memories. This is a challenge to the U. S."

When Raballa, a lean, pleasant man of quiet manners, visited King in Montgomery recently, he was surprised to find his new friend so young and politically atypical. "He was so young, and approaches politics from the different point of view — from the humanitarian point of view."

King assured Raballa of his ready support, invited the student to visit him occasionally, but admonished him to "get what you came for" at Tuskegee Institute.

The smiling African shook hands with one friend, and turned to another to study.

FARMERS CONFERENCE

SOUTH 'GOING BACKWARD'

Tuskegee Speaker Warns Of Integration Deadlock

TUSKEGEE — Dr. Frank P. Graham, co-chairman of the National Advisory Committee on Agricultural Life and Labor, told an audience of Negro farmers here Wednesday that the South will start going backward if the deadlock over school integration is not broken.

Graham, of Chapel Hill, N. C., is a former president of the University of North Carolina and served a brief appointive term as a U. S. senator. He spoke at the 58th annual Farmers Conference at Tuskegee Institute.

"The resort to the forms of private education," said Graham, "is necessarily so complex . . . as to be practically impossible in meeting the desperate need for universal high grade education for the children of the people of the Southern states."

REVERSE TREND

"If this adamant deadlock is not resolved," he predicted, "the Southern states, which have been making economic, educational and social progress at a faster rate than the rest of the nation, will reverse the trend and will fall back to the detriment of the South, both races and the whole country."

Graham said he "seconded" the recommendation of the Fifth World Order Study Conference to the National Council of Churches that the President call a White House conference on "the whole question of obedience to the law of the land in the public school cases."

"Neither state troops in Arkansas, nor massive resistance in Virginia, nor the closing of any schools in any state can repeal the Supreme Court," Graham told the farmers. But "neither federal troops nor massive federal power can open the schools in a state in which the majority of the people are determined to keep them closed," he said.

REQUIRES STAGES

Graham said that "successful implementation" of the school integration decrees "requires stages in time and place."

"It requires growth in the cooperation of leaders of both races," he said.

There are indications, he said, of "a growing public opinion in the South for the cooperation of local, state and federal authorities in behalf of the equal right to vote as the very foundation of our democracy."

On the topic of voting, Graham said:

"While 60 per cent of the white people of voting age register in the 12 southern states, it is roughly . . . estimated the approximately 1,250,000 Negroes register out of five million Negroes of voting age is these 12 states."

Under the heading of international problems, Graham suggested a standby United Nations force and U. N. jurisdiction over international problems of polar regions and outer space.

At the conference, Dr. L. H. Foster, Tuskegee Institute president, presented the 1958 Farm Family Merit Award to the Fred Bennett family of Greenville. The Rural Minister Merit Award went to the Rev. H. J. Hawkins, Evergreen.

Easley, Vocational Agriculture teacher, the Rev. O. W. Holmes B. L. Reynolds Sr., Mrs. M. Easley, Mrs. E. Brewer, Mrs. B. Kirksey, Mrs. D. Curry, Mrs. G. Cuningham, Mrs. F. Pratt, Mrs. Dora Turner, and a delegation of 13 persons.

The theme for the conference was "Lifting the Levels of Living."

FOOD SHOW

Nutrition Parley Held At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP)—Americans' eating habits and improvements in food were chief topics discussed at a conference on food and nutrition here Friday night.

Harry Akin of Chicago told the group that Americans are finally learning how to dine rather than just eat.

Akin, treasurer of the National Restaurant Assn., said improvements in the food service business has made dining a part of the nation's culture.

The restaurant industry, he said, is now the nation's fourth largest and does a 16 billion dollar annual business.

Another speaker, Dr. Benjamin T. Burton of the research division of the H. J. Heinz Co., said research has reduced the loss of nutrients to a minimum in canned foods.

Food Institute At Tuskegee

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — The 14th annual Food and Nutrition Institute will be held here March 12-13. The theme of the institute will be "Critical Issues in Food Services and Nutrition." Participants will come from a six-state area.

Tuskegee food institute set

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — "Critical Issues in Food Services and Nutrition" will be the theme of the Fourteenth Annual Food and Nutrition Institute convening at Tuskegee Institute, March 12 - 13. This year's Institute will be jointly conducted by Edward W. Ramsey, Director, Department of Commercial Dietetics; Miss Mayme L. Powell, dean, School of Home Economics, and Mrs. Solona C. McDonald, Director of Hospital Dietetics, John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital.

Cooperating with these three areas of the Institute will be the Dietary Department of the Veterans Administration Hospital.

The Institute will deal with such subjects as: Human Relations in the Foods Industry; Food and Labor Control in Times of High Cost; What's New in the Profession and Designing Food Services for the Future.

TO HANDLE these provocative subjects and others equally important, the committee has obtained some of the outstanding persons in the profession. Included in this list are: Greenfield Mills Restaurant Manager, Dick Williams, Columbus, Ohio; Michigan State University Instructor in Hotel and Restaurant Accounting, Douglas C. Keister; Vice President W. E. Cavanah, "The Ranch, Inc., Montgomery, Alabama;

Also Dr. Benjamin T. Burton, Staff Assistant for Nutrition Research and Quality Control Division, H. J. Heinz Company, and Dr. Burnadine Lewis chairman, Division of Home Economics, Texas Southern University.

DR. L. H. FOSTER, president of Tuskegee Institute, will preside at the annual banquet session, the speaker for which will be Harry Akin, treasurer, National Restaurant Association, Chicago.

The Food and Nutrition Institute will draw participants from a six - state area. Both in - service personnel and young people in training will be greatly benefited by the sessions.

U.S. Medics Attend Clinic at Tuskegee

14n

TUSKEGEE, Ala. — Doctors and dentists from over the nation attended the 41st annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society which began at Tuskegee Institute Sunday and will last through Friday.

In 1949, the select group of outstanding physicians who had for years taken part in the clinic, sought an expanded teaching clinic, to keep the number of physicians who attended the annual meetings abreast of the newest and best in medicine and surgery. This program had the encouragement and support of both the Medical College of Alabama in Birmingham and of Emory University Medical College in Atlanta.

This new emphasis has met with marked success. There has been an effort to bring in the top men in the several specialties as guest lecturers and clinicians. This year's program includes such outstanding men as Dr. Stillman Smith, president of the National Medical Association, who spoke on Sunday, and Dr. Robert A. Hingson, professor of anesthesiology, Western Reserve Medical School, Cleveland, Ohio, who reported and showed movies at the Monday and Tuesday meetings of the "Brother's Keeper," world medical tour conducted last summer under the sponsorship of the Baptist World Alliance. Dr. Robert H. Vaughn also spoke Monday.

4-18-59

A NON-MEDICAL feature of the assemblies was the presentation of Commissioner Elmer A. Carter, chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination at a banquet on Monday. This was followed Tuesday by talks by Dr. William S. Middleton, chief medical director of the Veterans Administration; and by Drs. Eugene J. Van Scott, Dr. Bayard Carter and two panel discussions by Drs. E. T. Odon, R. T. Smoot, Calvin R. Dowe and J. D. Trader; and by Mrs. J. Mark Cox, Lee R. Shelton, and Dr. William V. Kyle. Dr. Hollon W. Farr lectured on "Head and Neck Surgery," and gave a medical-dental exposition the following day.

Other Wednesday speakers were: Dr. John R. McCain, Dr. Robert D. Mercer, Dr. George C. Hamill, Dr. Kenneth S. Landauer and Dr. Jacob Brody gave a report on the new program of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Thursday speakers included Dr. J. B. Johnson, Dr. W. A. Younge, Dr. Frank A. Perry, Dr. Robert H. Vaughn, Dr. David B. Bradley, Dr. Thomas M. Campbell, Dr. Fred D. Collier and Dr. Armen G. Evans, plus a panel which included Dr. G. C. Looney, Dr. C. C. Allen, Dr. A. B. Benson and Dr. W. E. Lewis.

Clinical society names Dr. Holmes

Afro-America Baltimore, Md.

TUSKEGEE INST., Ala. — In its final business and evaluation session, the John A. Andrew Clinical Society voted Dr. Booker T. Holmes, president-elect of the Medical section. Dr. Holmes is a practicing physician in Frankfort, Ky.

Dr. John Chenault, Bradenton, Fla., formerly director of orthopedics at the John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital, elected last year, will serve for 1960. The outgoing president, who presided at this session, is Dr. J. D. Merida of Cleveland.

The dental section elected Dr. T. S. Manning of Orlando as its president-elect. Dr. Sullivan Jackson, Selma, Ala., elected last year, will serve for 1960. He succeeds Dr. C. E. Williams of Chicago.

Dr. R. Stillman Smith of Macon, Ga., president of the National Medical Association, said Sunday night that the population increase is outdistancing th available supply of physicians and specialists. He is spearheading an effort to encourage more young people to consider careers in medicine and allied professions.

The Society voted to give study to the problem and have a progress report at its opening meeting on April 24, 1960.

Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr. was re-elected secretary of the society and L. A. Rabb, hospital administrator, was elected treasurer.

Andrew Clinical Society Meeting Slated April 12-17 At Tuskegee

Doctors and dentists from over the nation will journey to Tuskegee Institute this weekend for the opening of the 47th annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society beginning Sunday, April 12, and lasting through Friday morning, April 17.

This clinic is an integral part of the "Tuskegee Tradition" of meaningful service to the larger community. Back of these 47 years of service was the pioneer efforts of Booker T. Washington and the medical director of the John A. Andrew Hospital, the late Dr. John Andrew Kenney. They realized the limitations of the doctors of that early era and sought to provide an opportunity for the mutual exchange of advanced information and clinical techniques.

For a period of more than 20 years this clinic was a "Mecca" to the diseased and the infirm. Physicians would "save up" their difficult cases to bring them to the John A. Andrew Clinic.

With the advance in training and facilities for the proper care and treatment of patients in the area served by the clinic, it became unnecessary to "save up" the difficult cases until clinic-time. It was then that a group of physicians, led by Dr. Eugene H. Dibble, the late Dr. Charles R. Drew of Howard, Dr. Armen G. Evans of Cleveland, and the deans of Howard and Meharry medical schools, got together to plan a new program.

This program, launched in 1949, sought through an expanded teaching clinic, to keep the growing number of physicians who attended the annual meetings abreast of the newest and best in medicine and surgery. This program had the encouragement and support of both the Medical College of Alabama in Birmingham and of Emory University Medical College in Atlanta.

SUCCESS NOTED

This new emphasis has met with marked success. There has been an effort to bring in the top men in the several specialities as guest lecturers and clinicians. This year's program will include such outstanding men as: Dr. R. Stillman Smith, president of the National Medical Assn. who will be the speaker for the C. V. Roman public health meeting on Sunday, April 13, at 6:30 p.m. (Dr. C. V. Roman of Richmond, now deceased, was the first president of the clinic.)

A non-medical feature will be the presentation of Commissioner Elmer A. Carter, chairman, New York State Commission Against Discrimination, as guest speaker at the banquet on Monday evening, April 14. A native of Rochester, N.Y., Commissioner Carter is a graduate of Harvard University in the class of 1912. He has taught at Prairie View State College in Texas; served in World War I; served as executive secretary of the Urban League in Columbus, Ohio.

He entered public life in 1935 when appointed by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman to the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Council of New York. He has subsequently served on a three-man board of appeals of unemployment insurance.

In 1945, Carter was appointed by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey as a member of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination. He has remained a member of the commission since 1945, having been reappointed by Gov. Dewey in 1948 and in 1953, and by Gov. Averell Harriman in 1958. He was designated chairman of the commission by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller in January 1959.

TUESDAY SPEAKERS

On Tuesday, Dr. William S. Middleton, chief medical director of the Veterans Administration, Washington, D.C., will conduct a clinic at 8 a.m. and later that day will talk on "Chronic Lymph Node Disease."

Others appearing on the program on Tuesday include Dr. Eugene J. Van Scott, head, dermatology service, National Cancer Institute, who will speak on "Modifying Influences of Chemotherapeutic Agents of Skin Cancer"; "The Value of Pleural Biopsy and Thoractomy in Difficult Diagnostic Problems of the Thorax" will be discussed by members of the Surgical Service of the Tuskegee Veterans Administration Hospital.

Participants include Dr. J. Mark Cox, Dr. Lee R. Shelton, and Dr. William V. Kyle.

On Tuesday afternoon, Dr. Bayard Carter from Duke University will discuss "Problems in Diagnosis and Treatment of State O Intraepithelial Cancer." On Tuesday afternoon, also, a panel discussion, "Drug Therapy of Hypertension," will be conducted by Dr. E. T. Odom, Dr. R. T. Smoot, Dr. Calvin R. Dowe, and Dr. J. D. Trader from the Veterans Administration Medical Service.

On Tuesday evening, the Charles R. Drew Memorial Lecture will be held at 7:30 p.m. and will be delivered by Dr. Hollon W. Farr of Cancer Memorial Hospital in New York. Dr. Farr will speak on "Head and Neck Surgery."

Dr. John R. McCain, from Emory University Medical School; Dr. John F. Hume, of Tuskegee Institute; Dr. Robert D. Mercer, from the Cleveland Clinic; and Dr. George C. Hamill, from Maxwell Air Force Base, will be the speakers on Wednesday morning. The medical-dental lecture will be given by Dr. Hollon W. Farr.

High lighting the activities on Wednesday afternoon will be a report on the new program of the National Foundation and the effectiveness of the poliomyelitis vaccine which will be given by Dr. Kenneth S. Landauer and Dr. Jacob Brody respectively.

THURSDAY EVENTS

The speakers on Thursday morning will include Dr. John B. Johnson from Howard University Medical School; Dr. W. A. Younge from St. Louis, Mo.; Dr. Frank A. Perry from Meharry Medical College and Dr. Robert H. Vaughan from Columbus, Ga. The Psychiatric Service of the Tuskegee Veterans Administration Hospital will conduct a panel on "The Use of Tranquilizing Drugs." Participants include Dr. G. C. Looney, Dr. C. C. Allen, Dr. A. B. Benson, and Dr. W. E. Lewis.

Dr. David V. Bradley, from Meharry Medical College; Dr. Thomas M. Campbell of Tuskegee Institute; Dr. Fred D. Collier from the University of Alabama; and Dr. Armen G. Evans of Cleveland, Ohio, will be the speakers on Thursday afternoon.

Dr. Robert A. Hingson, professor of anesthesiology, Western Reserve Medical School, Cleveland, Ohio, will report at the meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society on a world medical tour conducted last summer under the sponsorship of the Baptist World Alliance.

This project, known as "Brother's Keeper," involved travel of more than 45,000 miles. This team made movies of health activities during its entire tour. On Monday, April 13, at 1 p.m., Dr. Hingson will show movies taken in Hawaii, Japan and Korea.

On Tuesday, April 14, at 1 p.m., he will show movies on Hong Kong and the Phillipines, and on Wednesday, at 8 a.m., on Burma and India.

Dr Hingson is well known in Alabama, having been born in Anniston. He is a graduate of the University of Alabama and Emory University Medical School in Atlanta. He is a dedicated Christian and is interested in medical problems and medical progress throughout the world.

On Monday afternoon at 3:45 p.m. Dr. Robert H. Vaughan, thoracic surgeon of Columbus, Ga., will speak on "Chest Infections and Their Possible Sequelae."

Clinical Society Ends Meeting With Naming Of New Officers

TUSKEGEE — Dr. Booker T. Holmes, a Frankfort, Ky., physician, was named president-elect of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society in the society's final business and evaluation session Friday.

Dr. John Chenault of Bradenton, Fla., former head of orthopedics at John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital, will serve as president for 1960, succeeding Dr. J. D. Murida of Cleveland, Ohio.

Major emphasis at the session was on the problem raised earlier in the week concerning the acute shortage of doctors and specialists, especially in the South.

Dr. R. Stillman Smith of Macon, Ga., president of the National Medical Assn., had said Sunday night that the population increase is outdistancing the available supply of physicians.

The society voted to study the problem and prepare a progress report for next year's meeting.

Dr. Eugene H. Dibble Jr. was re-elected secretary of the society and L. A. Rabb was elected treasurer.

The dental section named Dr. I. S. Manning, Orlando, Fla., as president-elect. The current president, Dr. Sullivan Jackson of Selma, succeeds Dr. C. E. Williams of Chicago.

AT TUSKEGEE TODAY

Clinical Sessions To Open

TUSKEGEE—Doctors and dentists from all over the nation will meet at Tuskegee Institute Sunday through Friday for the 47th annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society.

Heading the list of more than 30 distinguished speakers is Dr. R. Stillman Smith, president of the National Medical Association. He will speak Sunday evening at the C. V. Roman public health meeting.

MIDDLETON

The late Dr. Roman was the first president of the Andrew Clinic, which was formed in 1912 by Booker T. Washington and the late Dr. John Andrew Kenney, medical director of the John A. Andrew Hospital at Tuskegee Institute.

For several decades the clinic was a Mecca to the diseased and infirm as physicians saved their most difficult cases to bring them to the meeting.

BLANK VAUGHAN

In 1949 an expanded teaching clinic was instituted to keep attending physicians abreast of the latest medical developments.

Other speakers who will be heard include Dr. William S. Middleton, chief medical director of the Veterans Administration in Washington; Dr. Harvey Blank, professor of dermatology at the University of Miami School of Medicine; and Dr. Robert H. Vaughan, thoracic surgeon of Columbus, Ga.

Dr. Middleton, former dean of the University of Wisconsin Medical School and private adviser to the Surgeon General of the U.S. Army during the Korean conflict, will discuss "Chronic Lymph Node Disease."

Dr. Blank will talk on "Principles in the Clinical Diagnosis of Skin Lesions." He is a former consultant to the U.S. Army Surgeon General and to the Institute for Nuclear Studies of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Dr. Vaughan is a native of Tuskegee and a 1941 graduate of the University of Alabama. His topic will be "Chest Infections and Their Possible Sequelae."

A non-medical feature will be the presentation of Elmer A. Carter, chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, as guest speaker at the Monday evening banquet.

Cancer, blood transfusions, the polio vaccine, pregnancy and diabetes, the treatment of burns, cerebral palsy, tranquilizers and heart disease are among the many other subjects to be discussed during the six-day clinic.

Shortage Of Negro Doctors Cited At Medical Meeting

TUSKEGEE, Ala. (AP) — The United States faces a critical shortage of Negro doctors, the president of the National Medical Assn. said Sunday night.

Dr. R. Stillman Smith of Macon, Ga., head of the national organization for Negro physicians, said the shortage "affects not only the medical care of Negroes, but also the health of the entire country."

Smith was opening speaker at the 47th annual meeting of the John A. Andrew Clinical Society. About 350 white and Negro doctors and dentists from over the nation are attending the six-day conference, which will close Friday.

"While Negro health needs are not and should not be met exclusively by Negro physicians," he said, "generally the quality of care provided for the Negro population is directly related to the number and quality of Negro physicians."

In 1950, he said, Negroes made up 10 per cent of U.S. population, but Negro physicians composed only 2.2 per cent of the national total. Six years later there were about 4,000 Negro physicnans and surgeons out of a total 218,061 in the country, he said.

Smith told the conference that another example of the need for more Negro medical men is the fact that there is one white physician to 770 white people, but only one Negro doctor to 4,567 Negroes.

The same problem exists with Negro specialists, he said. They constitute only 1 per cent of the national total.

Smith delivered the annual C. V. Roman Public Health Lecture. The late Dr. Roman was first president of John A. Andrew Clinic at Tuskegee Institute, the famed Negro college where the meeting is being held.

Experts in medicine, surgery and dentistry will address the gathering.

Among the scheduled speakers are Dr. William S. Middleton of Washington, chief medical director of the Veterans Administration; Dr. Harvey Blank, professor of dermatology at the University of Miami School of Medicine, and Dr. Robert H. Vaughan of Columbus, Ga., a thoracic surgeon.

ALABAMA STATE APPROPRIATION
TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE

GOV. JOHN PATTERSON
SCHOOL FUND TEST (?)

School Fund Test Hinted in Alabama

Times-Union P. 7 Home Ed. 4-9-59

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 8 (AP)—Segregationist Alabama legislators may use the annual appropriation to Tuskegee Institute to see if state funds can be allocated to private schools as a weapon against integration.

Although Tuskegee is a privately operated Negro school, the Legislature has appropriated funds each year for more than a decade to help train students in specialized fields which aren't available in state-controlled Negro colleges.

The current allocation is $350,000, but Tuskegee President L. H. Foster asked an interim study committee today for an additional $288,000 for next year.

There was widespread speculation among members of the Legislature at one time that the funds might be cut off as a protest against continuing demands for integration.

Then, too, Gov. John Patterson and some legislators have accused Tuskegee faculty members of helping promote a mass Negro boycott of white merchants in Tuskegee. Negroes have refused to trade with white stores for nearly two years in protest against a law which has virtually eliminated Negro voting in that city.

The measure enacted by the Legislature in 1957 rearranged the town boundaries and left all but a few Negroes outside the city limits, depriving them of a vote in city elections.

Instead of cutting off the appropriation to the famed Negro school, however, some legislators have suggested using it as a precedent for spending public funds to support private schools on the grade school and high school level.

The governor has advocated closing the public schools if necessary to forestall integration.

The plan, still in a tentative stage, was disclosed today by legislative leaders who wouldn't be quoted by name. It would work this way:

All or part of the requested Tuskegee appropriation would be enacted with the understanding that some taxpayer would contest it in court as an unlawful expenditure of state funds.

Alabama Will Test Use Of State Funds

Tuskegee Grant To Be Taken For Court Test Of School Aid

BOUNDARY CHANGE

The measure enacted by the Legislature in 1957 rearranged the town boundaries, leaving all but a few Negroes outside the city limits and depriving them of a vote in city elections.

Instead of cutting off the appropriation to the famous Negro school however, some legislators have suggested using it as a precedent for spending public funds to support private schools on the grade school and high school level.

The governor has advocated closing the public schools if necessary to forestall integration.

The plan, still in a tentative stage, was disclosed Wednesday by legislative leaders who would not be quoted by name. It would work this way:

All or part of the requested Tuskegee appropriation would be enacted with the understanding that some taxpayer would contest it in court as an unlawful expenditure of state funds.

HIGH COURT AIM

The complaining taxpayer would try to bring in a federal question with the idea of getting it ultimately to the U.S. Supreme Court.

If that court ruled the appopriation unconstitutional, segregationists could tell the Negroes in effect "we tried but the Supreme Court wouldn't let us."

But if the court approved the allocation of state funds to the private Negro institution, state authorities would construe it as an endorsement of the use of tax money to support other private schools.

Is Tuskegee A Case For Test?

Dr. L. H. Foster, president of Tuskegee Institute, has petitioned the Legislature for an increase in the state appropriation from $350,000, current sum, to $638,000.

The school is privately controlled, of course. For years it has been allocated state funds to supply certain training for Negroes not available elsewhere in Alabama.

Down through the years Alabamians have pointed proudly toward Tuskegee. Such appropriations in the past have been generally applauded and have won legislative okay without any real controversy.

Today the situation has become complicated. Whether any faculty members have been engineering or participating in the Negro boycott of white Tuskegee merchants we cannot say. But an uneasy situation exists in the Macon County seat. It is difficult to determine what is the relationship of the school people to the boycott or to efforts to win voter registration. It is clear that there was motivation, from the Negroes' viewpoint, for such activity. The Negro community at Tuskegee Institute was in hard fact gerrymandered by state act out of the community's municipal limits. This was clearly a reprisal on the part of an aroused Legislature.

A number of Negroes from the Tuskegee community did appear before the Civil Rights Commission hearing in Montgomery.

The public will conclude that there is a connection between the Negro citizens making up the Tuskegee Institute family and a boycott against white merchants, and pressures for the vote which led to participation by some in the civil rights hearings.

It is reported a plan has been suggested for making an appropriation, but for someone subsequently to test it in the courts. The aim would be to carry the issue to the highest court to seek a ruling on whether state funds constitutionally can be given to a private school. If the ruling should be that they could, then it would be hoped a precedent could have been established for subsequent award of state money to white private schools.

Using the Tuskegee Institute request for such a purpose could lead to a serious deterioration of the relationship between the institute and white Alabamians generally. This could upset a very cordial relationship of many years standing. But the hard fact is that whites will use whatever means they can to find ways of evading integration. The apparent fact that Tuskegee Negroes have not been active in pressing for integration, on the record at least, will be offset in many white minds by the Tuskegee community boycott and presence of Tuskgee community Negroes at the civil rights hearing.

There is undoubtedly going to be a lot more discussion of the entire situation.

Ex-State Senator Urges Continuance Of Tuskegee Institute Appropriation

By HERSCHEL CRIBB

A former state senator from the Black Belt Wednesday asked the interim committee on Finance and Taxation not to cut the appropriation to Tuskegee Institute.

John H. Pinson of Geiger said the "best way to keep segregation is to keep Tuskegee."

Dr. L. H. Foster, president, then asked for an increase of $288,000 in state funds. The school now gets $350,000 a year.

Pinson reminded the committee that the "state asked Tuskegee to take the state appropriation, Tuskegee didn't ask the state."

The state-sponsored program in five major areas was begun in 1943, Pinson said, during Gov. Sparks Administration. He said the school had done an excellent job since.

He said "nothing has ever done more to maintain the status quo in segregation" than the 1943 act to send state money to the school, Pinson concluded. He called himself a Black Belt Democrat segregationist, and added he has been a trusty of the school for 17 years.

President Foster explained how much of the proposed increase would be used in each of the five fields the state helps finance.

In graduate instruction, he said $45,000 more would be spent on agriculture, $35,000 additional on home economics.

In professional instruction, he said the engineering outlay would be upped $93,000; nursing, $50,000 and veterinary medicine, $65,000.

Foster said most "acute and critical need" is for engineering.

In reply to a question, he said there is "no great opportunity" in Alabama at present for his school's engineering graduates but this would seem to be increasing."

The funds to build facilities to house the state programs initiated in 1943 were raised from foundations and other outside sources, Foster told the committee.

He said such outlays could be valued $3.7 million dollars for the past 16 years, though not all of this was "out of pocket" money. Students of school worked on some of the projects, he said.

He said he would forward a list of total foundation grants to the school to the committee. One senator asked for such information.

In concluding his statement, Dr. Foster said "unless major financial relief is had, Tuskegee cannot continue these state programs in a satisfactory manner."

INTEGRATION WEAPON SEEN

Private School Precedent May Be Decided In Macon

By REX THOMAS

Segregationist Alabama legislators may use the annual appropriation to Tuskegee Institute to see if state funds can be allocated to private schools as a weapon against integration.

Although Tuskegee is a privately operated Negro school, the Legislature has appropriated funds each year for more than a decade to help train students in specialized fields which aren't available in state-controlled Negro colleges.

There was widespread speculation among members of the Legislature at one time that the funds might be cut off as a protest against continuing demands for integration.

Tuskegee asks 82 per cent hike in funds

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 8— (AP)—Tuskegee Institute asked the Legislature today for an 82 per cent increase in the appropriation it receives from the state.

President L. H. Foster submitted a budget to the interim committee on finance calling for a grant of $638,000 next year, compared with the current appropriation of $350,000.

Although it is a privately endowed institution, the famed Negro school has received an annual appropriation from the state for many years to provide training for Negroes in specialized fields which isn't available in state-supported Negro colleges.

Foster said the additional funds are needed to meet the needs in agriculture, home economics, engineering, nursing and veterinary medicine.

DOWN THE HALL, meanwhile, another interim subcommittee heard a prediction the National Democratic Party will get none of Alabama's electoral votes in the 1960 presidential election.

Montgomery Atty. Lea Harris made the comment in urging approval of a bill to divide the electoral votes among the political parties according to their pro rata share of the votes in the general election.

Since the State Democratic Executive Committee has knocked out the national party loyalty oath, Harris said Alabama's electors in 1960 probably will vote for a third party presidential nominee as they did in 1948.

But if his proposed bill is enacted, the attorney said the Democrats will get some of the electoral votes at least.

HEINZ HEIR WILLS $100,000 TO INSTITUTE

Tuskegee Institute was notified this week of a $100,000 bequest from the estate of the late John L. Given. Tuskegee was among the 51 institutions bequeathed sums amounting to $4,500,000.

Mr. John L. Given was the grandson of the late H. J. Heinz, founder of the H. J. Heinz Company. This company has, for many years, had an active interest in the Tuskegee Institute Department of Commercial Dietetics. This week, Dr. Benjamin T. Burton of the H. J. Heinz Nutrition Staff will participate in the 14th Annual Food and Nutrition Institute.

Ford Foundation Grants In Alabama Profit State Institutions $3,956,171

A total of $3,956,171 has been paid out in grants in Alabama by the Ford Foundation since its inauguration by Henry and Edsel Ford in 1936.

Of that amount, the largest single type of grant, totalling $1,985,000, has been to supplement and raise college teacher salaries.

The salary grant is open to all four-year, regionally accredited, private colleges and universities in Alabama.

Next on the list of Ford's grants is hospital aid, totalling $1,732,400. This figure represents moneys paid out to all voluntary, nonprofit hospitals in Alabama to help improve and expand their services.

EDUCATIONAL TV

A relatively new innovation takes third place honors in Ford's list of gifts—educational television with grants totalling $180,000.

Fellowships to Alabama residents have totalled $35,380, and university training and scholarship amounted to $23,391 since 1936.

For the first 14 years of operation, the foundation gave its funds largely to educational and charitable organizations of special interest to members of the Ford family.

But in 1950, as a result of increased funds from the estates of the founders, it was constituted as a nationwide philanthropy.

OVER $1 BILLION

Thus far, it has given more than a billion dollars to some 6,000 organizations and individuals in the 49 states, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and in 47 foreign countries.

More than 90 per cent of the total has been granted during the past eight years, largely to American institutions. At the present time, the foundation has 12 grant-making programs, each directed at one or more problems of national importance.

A board of 15 trustees is responsible for all grants, appropriations and expenditures.

In Alabama, grants from the Ford Foundation have been broken down in each of the categories to show where the money has gone:

TEACHER SALARIES

College teacher salaries, the largest single item on the Alabama budget, includes help to these institutions:

Athens College, Athens, $57,500; Birmingham - Southern College, Birmingham, $240,500, plus an accomplishment grant of $149,500; Howard College, Birmingham, $310,500; Huntingdon College, Montgomery, $178,500;

Judson College, Marion, $77,500; Miles College, Fairfield, $141,500; Spring Hill College, Spring Hill, $241,000; Stillman College, Tuscaloosa, $71,000; Talladega College, Talladega, $100,000; Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, $417,500.

Hospital aid, number two on Alabama's Ford Foundation budget, totalled $1,732,400, broken down as follows:

JACKSON HOSPITAL

Jackson Hospital and Clinic, Montgomery, $41,600; Montgomery Tuberculosis Sanatorium, $85,000; St. Jude's Catholic Hospital, Montgomery, $62,100; St. Margaret's Hospital, Montgomery, $65,500;

Birmingham Baptist Hospital, $163,300; Carraway Methodist Hospital, Birmingham, $122,800; Children's Hospital, Birmingham, $27,100; Jefferson Tuberculosis Sanatorium Society, Birmingham, $130,700;

Ford Foundation Grants In Alabama Profit State Institutions $3,956,171

A total of $3,956,171 has been paid out in grants in Alabama by the Ford Foundation since its inauguration by Henry and Edsel Ford in 1936.

Of this amount, the largest single type of grant, totalling $1,935,000, has been to supplement and raise college teacher salaries.

The salary grant is open to all four-year, regionally - accredited, private colleges and universities in Alabama.

Next on the list of Ford's grants is hospital aid, totalling $1,732,400. This figure represents moneys paid out to all voluntary, non-profit hospitals in Alabama to help improve and expand their services.

EDUCATIONAL TV

A relatively new innovation takes third place honors in Ford's list of gifts—educational television with grants totalling $180,000.

Fellowships to Alabama residents have totalled $35,380, and university training and scholarship amounted to $23,391 since 1936.

For the first 14 years of operation, the foundation gave its funds largely to educational and charitable organizations of special interest to members of the Ford family.

But in 1950, as a result of increased funds from the estates of the founders, it was constituted as a nationwide philanthropy.

INSTRUCTIONS TO PROSPECTIVE APPLICANTS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE EDUCATION ACT LOANS

1. You must meet all of the following requirements in order to be eligible to apply for a loan under the National Defense Education Act:

   a. Be a United States citizen, or a person in the U. S. in permanent resident status.

   b. Be a full-time student, either on the graduate or undergraduate level, or be accepted for admission on a full-time basis.

   c. Be able to prove your need for a loan in order to complete a course of study at Tuskegee Institute.

   d. Have a cumulative grade point average of not less than 2.5 (B-), and demonstrate evidence of your capability to maintain a good academic standing.

2. If you are eligible, and desire a loan, you should:

   a. Secure an application blank from Mr. L. W. Davis, the Institutional Representative, who is located in Room 12, Administration Building.

   b. Fill out this application in complete detail. (Note: In most instances it will be necessary to send the application to your parents or guardians to obtain the information required in Section III thereof).

   c. Return the completed application promptly to the Institutional Representative.

Tuskegee Institute Accepting Student Loan Applications

Tuskegee Institute began this week to accept applications through its institutional representative, L. W. Davis who serves as budget officer, for student loan scholarships under the National Defense Education Act of 1958.

Dr. A. A. Foster, president of the Institute, reported earlier that the sum of $18,145 had been allocted to Tuskegee Institute and will be made available immediately to those who can qualify.

The U.S. Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, administers the program. The office states that the purpose of the program is to stimulate and assist in the establishment of funds at institutions of higher learning for the making of low-interest loans to students in need of finances to continue their study.

Students who qualify may borrow up to a maximum of four years. None of the money has to be repaid until one year after leaving college. Any student who teaches five years in the public schools after securing the loan will have one-tenth of the loan cancelled each year up to five years, or half the total loan.

Students interested in getting loans this summer are requested to file their applications immediately. All applications should be submitted well in advance of the semester in which entrance is desired.

A PUBLIC RELATIONS PUBLICATION OF TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE

FEBRUARY 11, 1959 VOL. I NO. 5

NATIONAL DEFENSE STUDENT LOAN FUND

The President's office announces that a Federal capital contribution in the amount of $18,145 has been received by Tuskegee Institute to establish a National Defense Student Loan Fund. This money has been made available under the National Defense Education Act of 1958, and the Act is being administered by the Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, in Washington, D. C. The purpose of the program is to stimulate and assist in the establishment of funds at institutions of higher learning for the making of low-interest loans to students in need of finances to continue their study.

TUSKEGEEGRAMS Wed. 2-11-59

The primary and most essential condition of any applicant's eligibility for a loan is that he be able to establish need therefor in order to complete his or her course of study. In this connection, detailed information must be furnished concerning the applicant's personal and family resources. To be eligible for a loan, an applicant must also be a United States National or a person who is in the United States in a permanent resident status; a full-time college student on either the undergraduate or graduate level; in good academic standing; and capable of maintaining such standing.

The Act specifies that in the selection of students to receive loans, special consideration shall be given to students with a superior academic background who express a desire to teach in elementary or secondary schools; and to students whose academic background indicates a superior capacity or preparation in science, mathematics, engineering, or a modern foreign language.

Loan application forms and further detailed information may be obtained from the Budget Office on February 15.

TUSKEGEE'S FIRST SUMMER SCHOOL -- 1910

Checking the Tuskegee Institute records -- the first Teachers' Summer School was held in 1910. Since that time, each year during the summer session, new faces are seen on the Institute campus, in search of new and improved methods of teaching, a richer background of subject matter content, or pursuing courses for advanced degrees. Many of the summer school participants study together in groups -- workshops and institutes--sharing mutual interests, and a feel- of kinship develops as that of a family which works and relaxes together. Such an experience is rewarding and lasting. The summer school that had its beginning forty-nine years ago is still a challenge to the Tuskegee Institute personnel to make each year's experience a little richer.

Two other events of note took place in the year 1910-- Tompkins Hall, the students' dining hall,was dedicated on February 22 and White Hall, a dormitory for women,was opened for women students.

Through the years, both of these buildings have played an important part in the life of Tuskegee Institute students.

Tuskegee Grads Challenged Not To Bury Talents

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 8-20-59

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala — The 158 graduates of the Tuskegee Institute Summer Commencement were challenged to bury — not their talents — but fear and pride. The challenge came from Dr. Earl E. Dawson, president of Lincoln (Mo.) University, who addressed a commencement crowd of 500 at the Kresge Hall auditorium last Friday night, August 14.

Dr. Dawson saluted the graduates as "trustees of a great United States" who "have an important rendezvous with destiny," and admonished them that "the greatest mistake a man may make is to fear that he will make a mistake."

He likened their challenges to those received by the Biblical servants who received various talents. He centered attention on the third servant who buried his talent and was penalized with a total loss of talent.

The third servant failed to invest his talent wisely for two reasons — pride and fear — said Dr. Dawson. The third servant, he said, decided that if he took the risk and failed, he would very possibly be required to find the money somewhere to pay it back. He decided to do nothing, bury the money and sit tight.

"Behind this fear," he said, "was very definite pride. It was a pride that resented the fact that his fellow servants had been assigned greater tasks than his. It was furthermore, a pride that could not take a chance on failure. If he did nothing with the money, no one could ever prove that he could not have made a great success if he had wanted to do so."

The graduates included four officers in the commissioned through ROTC, one doctor of veterinary medicine, and 16 bachelors of science in education and 61 masters of education, the largest department represented.

Basil O'Connor To Speak At Meeting Of B'nai B'rith

Basil O'Connor of New York, president of the National Foundation, formerly the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis since its inception in 1938, will be the featured speaker on June 21 in Hot Springs at the B'nai B'rith District Seven convention.

O'Connor will address the men's and women's convention of B'nai B'rith from seven southern states, when B'nai B'rith, America's oldest and largest Jewish service organization . . . will pay tribute to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital's president, Mrs. Louis (Gladys) Harrison of Chicago.

The institution, founded by B'nai B'rith in 1916, is the only hospital devoted exclusively to the clinical research and treatment of arthritis where patients regardless of race, color or creed cannot pay to enter the Hospital.

Mrs. Harrison, president of the hospital since 1952, a prominent club and civic leader of Chicago, is one of the few women in America to serve as president of a hospital. She will be presented the humanitarian award of District Seven by its president, Robert N. Banks, of Pine Bluff.

O'Connor, a former law partner of the late president, Franklin D. Roosevelt, served as chairman and president of the American Red Cross from 1944 to 1949. He currently is president of the International Poliomyelitis Congress and the American national council for Health Education of the Public, Inc., and has been president of the National Health Council (1957-58).

He is president of the Harry S. Truman library, Inc. and he is honorary chairman of the Board of Governors of the National Vitamin Foundation. O'Connor has been active also as a board member of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Inc., and is sponsor and member of the General Assembly of World Brotherhood. He is also a member of the New York state committee to employ the handicapped.

In 1958 O'Connor was made a member of the Royal Society of Health (MRSH). He also is a member of the Congress committee for the Eighth World Congress of the International Society for the Welfare of Cripples.

BASIL O'CONNOR

From 1948 to 1951 O'Connor was a member of the president's committee on religion and welfare in the Armed Forces. From 1946 to 1951 he was a member of the committee to visit the school of public health of the Board of Overseers of Harvard College. He is an ex-officio member of the advisory services for orthopedics and poliomyelitis of the National League for Nursing.

On January 8, 1957, his 65th birthday, O'Connor at a dinner in his honor was presented by the New York Academy of Sciences with a gold membership card and with a citation naming him its first layman "gold member" for "outstanding scientific achievement and promotion of science."

In 1958 O'Connor became the first layman in history to receive the Albert Lasker scientific award of the American Public Health Assn. The award cited him "for extraordinary administrative leadership in the eradication of crippling poliomyelitis through development of an effective vaccine."

In 1952 O'Connor received the medal for merit of the United States of America. In addition, he has been decorated by 16 foreign governments and Red Cross societies and in 1950 was awarded the Folke Bernadotte memorial medal by the League of Red Cross Societies.

Other participants in the program with O'Connor honoring Mrs. Harrison will be Mrs. Milton T. Smith, women's president, B'nai B'rith, District Seven; Label A. Katz, President of B'nai B'rith and Maurice Bisgyer, executive vice president of B'nai B'rith and Dr. Simon Noveck, director of adult Jewish education. B'nai B'rith.

Refusal To Enroll Negroes In School To Bring Legal Action

MOBILE, Ala. — (SNS) — Refusal to enroll "seven" or "eight" Negro persons who seek admission to the practically all white State Vocational School here is expected to bring legal action designed to win their admission.

The Mobile Beacon, highly respected weekly here, said Feb. 28 that is learned "from a reliable source" that action "may be filed soon in federal court" designed to open the way for Negro students to enroll at this state-supported school.

Meantime the Beacon said it had information that "atleast seven Negro war veterans were refused application forms to apply for training in office machine repair, welding machine shop, electronics, (and) air conditioning" at the State Vocational School located on Fulton Road.

The Beacon said it "was told that Attys. Charles F. Wilson of Pensacola, Fla. and Vernon Z. Crawford of Mobile were consulted last April about the filing of a suit, following the refusal at that time to permit six Negro veterans to file applications for trade courses at the school."

On Feb. 27, Dr. Frank R. Stewart, state superintendent of education, Montgomery, confirmed that Negro persons are trying to enroll in the Mobile trade-preparing school. It is understood that Feb. 26 Mr. Stewart conferred with Atty. General McDonald Gallion and Trade School Director Clay Knight over the matter. The daily press said a Montgomery source placed the number of Negro applicants at eight.

Of the seven state-sponsored trade schools specializing in manual arts and industrial crafts, only one of them enrolls Negro students, that being the State Vocational Trade School in Jefferson County.

In Birmingham, a new court suit was believed to be in the making after the Birmingham Board of Education rejected requests by several Negro students for transferrals to close-to-home schools, which enroll white students.

Leaders of the Montgomery Improvement Association have announced that their next legal target is the dual school system in Montgomery.

On the other side, there was increased activity to perfect machinery for a privately-operated all white school system. Segregationists lawyers and legislators are working on plans to revise the school districts to avoid a ruling by the federal courts that no division of a state-operated public school system may be closed as a defense against complying with the U. S. Supreme Court's ruling while any division still operates.

Negro leaders, unlike the white segregationists, are not working on coordinated, united, specialized strategy for a change-over of the traditional two-division school system to a non-discrimatory school system. Nor does there appear to be any effort to utilize the "Lisy Case Decision" which legally, though not actually, opened the doors of the University of Alabama to qualified Negro students.

Negroes Ask Trade School Enrollment

MOBILE, March 18 (UPI)— Four Negroes today asked for applications for admission to the State Vocational School here and were told to return later.

J. L. Leflore, a Negro leader, said four Negroes went to the trade school this morning and requested application forms.

He said they were told School Director Clay Knight was not there and were asked to return later.

He said three were instructed to return Friday and two others, one in the group and another not with the four, were told to come Monday.

Earlier in the year a group of Negroes inquired about enrolling in certain courses at the school, which is operated by the State Education Dept. and is not connected with the public school system.

They did not then ask for application forms.

Negroes Eye State School Enrollment

State School Supt. Frank R. Stewart disclosed Thursday that a group of Mobile Negroes had indicated they wished to enroll in the all-white State Trade School in Mobile.

Stewart declined to say how many Negroes sought admission in the school or what action, if any, had been taken.

Instead, he merely issued a statement confirming the development and said no more:

"A few Negroes have presented themselves at the State Vocational School in Mobile. Some of them expressed an interest in enrolling in certain of the courses offered by the school."

FOLLOWING CONFERENCE

Stewart's statement came following a conference with Clay Knight, director of the school. Earlier both school officials had huddled with Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion for two hours.

Neither Knight nor Gallion would comment on the development.

While Stewart declined to say how many Negroes were seeking to enter the school it was learned from another source that the number was eight.

The state operates seven such trade schools in Alabama which specialize in instruction in manual arts and industrial crafts. All are segregated and only one —Wenonah Trade School near Birmingham—is for Negroes.

Negroes File State School Entry Forms

MOBILE (AP) — Three Negro men attempting to enroll in an all-white state vocational school were permitted to fill out information forms at the school Friday.

There was no indication from school officials as to how the forms will be handled.

A fourth Negro applicant also will be given a separate interview Monday.

Clay Knight, director of the State Trade School, identified the three Negroes who filled out the forms Friday as John Henry Willis, 22, Earl R. Ponquinette, 27, and Ernest L. Koen, 27, all of Mobile.

The fourth man who will be interviewed Monday was listed as Norman Evans, also of Mobile.

PACKER AT BASE

Koen listed himself as a packer at Brookley Air Force Base and the other two said they were unemployed. Willis said he was last employed in a branch post office at Mobile. Ponquinette said he formerly worked at Brookley as an aircraft mechanic.

Willis said he wanted to enroll in a course in woodworking and cabinet making. Ponquinette is seeking to apply for courses in electricity, and Koen in typewriter and office machine repair.

Knight said the information form is required of all persons seeking trade school training in the state schools.

The four were among seven Negroes who sought to apply for enrollment at the Mobile school last month. They were refused admission forms.

The four appeared again at the school Wednesday and were given separate appointments Friday and Monday.

Koen was accompanied by another Negro who asked that he be permitted to sit in on the interview. His request was denied and the school secretary said she would arrange a separate interview for him. He declined and said he was not an applicant for enrollment.

The second man declined to give his name. He later was identified by school officials as A. S. Crishon of Mobile. Crishon is an insurance agent and Negro leader here.

A Pensacola, Fla. Negro attorney, Charles Wilson, has been retained by the group. Wilson said he plans to file suit in U.S. District Court at Mobile if the Negroes are not enrolled.

There are seven of the state vocational schools in Alabama. Six are for white students, and the seventh, at Wenonah near Birmingham, is for Negroes.

Operations of the trade schools are supervised by the State Education Department. They have no connection with the public school systems of the state.

Trade school to be built in Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 4— (AP)—Alabama's seventh state trade school will be built in Montgomery with funds from the newly approved $100 million school construction bond issue.

The State Board of Education voted unanimously yesterday to set aside for a Montgomery school about $1 million of the bond issue's $2,435,400 earmarked for trade schools.

Montgomery city officials are expected to furnish about 30 acres of land for the new vocational school, but the exact location has not been determined.

State vocational schools for white persons are in Mobile, Tuscaloosa, Dothan, Gadsden and Decatur. There is a Negro trade school in Birmingham.

Negroes Try To Enter Schools

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (AP) — Negroes are trying to enroll at an all-white state vocational school at Mobile.

State School Supt. Frank R. Stewart refused to say Thursday how many Negroes are seeking entrance or if any action has been taken, but another capitol source said eight Negroes are involved.

"A few Negroes have presented themselves at the state vocational school in Mobile," Stewart said. "Some of them have expressed an interest in enrolling in certain of the courses offered by the school."

Stewart conferred Thursday with Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion and the trade school director, Clay Knight. None would comment on the talks.

This newest target of Negro integrationists may differ from a case in Birmingham where eight Negroes have applied for admittance to white schools.

Birmingham School Supt. Frazer Banks said earlier this week he rejected seven of the applicants and the eighth is pending under provisions of the state school placement law. The law enables local boards to assign pupils to certain schools.

It had not been learned whether the placement law can be used at trade schools. Stewart would not discuss the matter.

INTEGRATION IS SOUGHT

Several Negroes Trying To Enter Mobile School

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 26. —(AP)— State School Supt. Frank R. Stewart announced Thursday that Negroes are seeking enrollment at a vocational trade school at Mobile.

Mr. Stewart declined to say how many are involved, but other sources fixed the number at eight. Neither would the state superintendent say what action, if any, has been taken.

He issued the following statement and refused to add anything to it:

"A few Negroes have presented themselves at the State Vocational School at Mobile. Some of them have expressed an interest in enrolling in certain of the courses offered by the school."

The school director, Clay Knight, conferred with Mr. Stewart and Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, but had nothing to say publicly. Neither did Mr. Gallion.

Seven trade schools specializing in manual arts and industrial crafts are operated by the state under supervision of the state Board of Education. All are segregated and only one, the school at Wenonah near Birmingham, admits Negro students.

Negroes Ask Entry Into Trade School

A group of Negroes have applied for admittance to the all-white state trade school at Mobile, it was learned today.

No details were available and school authorities were unavailable for comment.

However, it was learned that the trade school director, Clay Knight, conferred in Montgomery today with State School Supt. Frank R. Stewart and that both of them conferred with Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion.

Gallion declined to comment.

The trade school is one of a series of such institutions operated under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Education.

Fourth Negro May Seek To Enter Trade School

MOBILE (UPI) — A fourth Negro may Monday is expected to seek an admission application to the state trade school here.

Clay Knight, director of the vocational school, declined comment on three Negroes obtaining information forms Friday in the first step toward admission to the all-white school.

The three were Ernest L. Koen, 27; Earl R. Ponquinette, 27; and John Henry Willis, 22, all of Mobile. Morman Evans, another Negro, has an appointment to see Knight Monday morning to request an information form which must be filled out as one of several steps toward admission.

Koen, a packer at Brookley Air Force Base here, asked to enroll in a course in repair of typewriters and office machines; Ponquinette, unemployed aircraft mechanic, is seeking entrance to a course in electricity; and Willis, a part time postal worker, sought enrollment in woodworking and cabinet making courses.

Negro attorney Charles Wilson of Pensacola, Fla., said last week he would take the cases to U.S. district court if the admissions are denied.

Five Negroes Seeking To Enter Trade School

MOBILE, Ala. (AP)—An all-white state vocational school at Mobile has given information forms for five Negroes seeking to apply for courses.

Officials of the trade school have declined to say what disposition will be made of the forms.

Four had been filled out last week. The fifth was prepared Thursday by Frank E. Lee, 27, of Prichard. Lee sought to apply for a course in radio and television repair.

The school director, Clay Knight, said another Negro appeared but was refused an appointment when he declined to give his name or present occupation.

The state superintendent of education, Frank Stewart, declined comment at Montgomery on the developments. Six of the seven trade schools operated by the state Education Department are for white students. The seventh, for Negroes, is at Wenonah near Birmingham. The trade schools have no connection with the local public school systems.

Charles Wilson, Negro attorney from Pensacola, Fla., said he has been retained to represent the Negroes seeking to enroll here. He said if they are refused he will take the case into U.S. District Court in Mobile.

Trade School Interviews 4 Negro Men

MOBILE (AP) — Four Negro men seeking to enroll at an all-white state vocational school here have now been interviewed at the school.

The fourth filled out an information form at the school Monday. The other three filled the forms out during separate appointments at the school Friday.

School officials did not disclose what disposition will be made of the forms. They said they are required of all persons seeking to apply for trade school training.

SPOT PAINTER

The school director, Clay Knight, said Norman Evans, 22, Mobile, filled out the form Monday and asked to be enrolled in a course in electricity. Evans listed his place of employment as a spot painter for an automobile painting company here.

Those interviewed Friday were John Henry Willis, 22; Earl R. Ponquinnette, 27; and Ernest L. Koen, 27, all of Mobile. Koen said he was employed as a packer at Brookley Air Force Base. The other two said they were unemployed.

The four, all listed as veterans, were among seven who requested admission last month. The four returned to the school last Wednesday and were given individual appointments.

Charles Wilson, Negro attorney from Pensacola, Fla., said recently that the group has retained him. He said he will file suit in U.S. District Court at Mobile if the Negroes are denied admission.

ARKANSAS

Negro Boys Are Victims In Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — (UPI) — Twenty-one Negro boys burned to death early today when fire swept through their dormitory at the Arkansas Negro Boys Industrial School 12 miles south of here.

The figure was established by Bill Strubing, a lieutenant in the fire marshal's section of the Arkansas state police.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who went immediately to the scene, said he was told that the doors to the one - story brick veneer building were locked, and there was no caretaker in the building during the night.

Faubus said he would begin an immediate investigation.

The fire broke out in the room of the caretaker, who was ill and not at the school.

One pumper truck from Little Rock went to the scene, but the blaze was out of control when it arrived. The firemen pumped water from a swimming pool to cool the gutted building.

L. R. Gaines, the Negro superintendent said the building, erected as a WPA project in 1938, went up "like watchsticks."

He said 68 boys were asleep in the barracks - like room of the building when the fire was discovered. Many kicked the glass and screens out of the windows in their mad scramble to escape.

WAKENED BL SCREAMS

One of the boys who escaped said the screams of other boys woke him.

"The room was so filled with smoke I could hardly see," said Noah Fortner, 16. Everybody was trying to get out through the windows. I pushed one boy aside and crawled out."

Robert Raymon, 15, said he awoke and found the room filled with smoke.

"I heard boys screaming," he said. "The only thing I could think of was how to get out of there. I ran toward the window nearest my bed and kicked out the screen and left."

The school, occupying 10 buildings, is near the small town of Wrightsville, about 12 miles south of Little Rock.

Gaines said the fire started from defective wiring in the room of the caretaker, who had been ill for several weeks and was not occupying his quarters.

NOT OVERCROWDED

Frank N. Lovelace of Little Rock, superintendent of buildings and grounds for the state hospital, said the building was not overcrowded nor in a rundown condition. He said the dormitory had room for 150 boys.

"Considering the age of the building, it was in pretty good condition," Lovelace said.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus went to the school about 6:15 a.m. He said he had inspected the school personally about a year ago, and that "everything was fine." The governor was visibly shaken as he taked with firemen.

"From the information I have gathered," he said, "the boys were locked in. This is something that should not have been."

Carver Registering Vocational Students

Registration for vocational courses is now being offered at Carver Vocational School.

Persons may register for the following courses until Monday, Feb. 2: catering, radio and television, sewing, shorthand, typewriting, tailoring and office machines.

Veterans may enter radio and television and the tailoring course under the GI bill.

State To Establish Vocational Units In Atlanta, Other Areas

A Negro vocational school, to be set up as part of Carver High School, with dormitory facilities to be built on the old Gammon Theological Seminary site, will be part of a state-wide vocational educational plan for Negro and white students, according to Governor Ernest Vandiver.

Governor Vandiver and State Superintendent of Schools Claude Purcell Saturday issued a joint statement declaring that $1,050,000 in state funds had been approved for use in extending the state's trade school program.

First action on the proposed development of a trade school for Atlanta Negroes was taken recently when the Atlanta Board of Education took an option on the land where dormitory facilities for the extended vocational school will be built.

The proposed vocational school here will serve Negroes throughout the Greater Atlanta vicinity. It is estimated that the project for Negroes will eventually run over a million and a half dollars. The choice of Atlanta for the location was due to the greater number of job opportunities here for well - trained Negroes with industrial skill.

SIMILAR TO OTHERS

The Atlanta school for Negroes, with boarding facilities, reportedly will be similar to those already in operation for white students at Americus and Clarksville.

Another project for Negroes in the vocational education program will be developed at Savannah and is scheduled to be opened July 1. The trade school formerly operated at Savannah State College is being transferred to the Sol Johnson High School there, and reportedly will have new equipment just acquired by the State.

The four centers where the first schools are scheduled to go into operation, with state money matched by local funds, are Albany, Augusta, Columbus and Rome. Separate schools for both whites and Negroes are included in the plans for the first three named cities.

The Columbus program calls for a quarter of a million dollars for the Negro schools, including $125,000 state money and 125,000 local funds. A hundred thousand dollars of this money is already available, and the remainder is said to be forthcoming as the program develops.

Superintendent Purcell explained that already the Department of Education has been operating two state trade schools. Those two schools have for some time been filled to capacity. The Department recently, with the approval of The State Board of Education, launched plans to establish area trade schools throughout Georgia to meet the needs of young people and adults who need more vocational training.

In addition, the 85th Congress enacted the National Defense Education Act, which allotted to Georgia, among other funds, a million and a half dollars that can only be used for vocational-technical training necessary to the nation's defense.

TO AID INDUSTRY

Governor Vandiver said, "The setting up of these schools will give our people, both Negro and white, the training they need to get and hold good paying jobs in industry, keep our standard of living high, and do much to continue to attract new industry to Georgia where it can be sure of finding these well - trained workers."

The total funds necessary for setting up the proposed eleven schools, half from state and half from local sources have been estimated at $7,110,000.

The fifty - fifty operation by the state and local school systems will work this way: the local system will provide the site, maintain and operate the building; the state and local system will share equally the cost of the building and equipment, and the state will provide instruction.

Some of the proposed courses will be: electronics, instrumentation, diesel mechanics, air conditioning, automotive trade training, sheet metal and welding, television, laboratory technician, machine drafting and hydraulics. Regular trade vocational courses like radio repair, office training, appliance repair, carpentry, bricklaying and practical nursing already offered in trade programs will also be included.

Augusta, Ga.

Our program will come to its conclusion with an Appreciation Night observance and Fellowship hour on Monday night, May 18, at 8:00 o'clock, with Mrs. S. H. Delaney serving as program chairman for this program.

We at Butler Street C.M.E. Church are extending a warm welcome to all our friends and we are asking your support at all of our programs.

REPRESENTATIVES from several community agencies who attended a luncheon Wednesday, May 13, at noon held in the Parkway's Blue Room to discuss the role that they will play in urging unskilled persons to take advantage of courses of study and training obtainable at Dunbar Vocational high school. It is predicted that in the new era, the new deal with Chicago's rapid expansion, there will be a need for skilled workers in many fields. In order to meet the challenge these leaders have launched a campaign to help those persons desiring to take advantage of Dunbar's many courses of study. Seated left to right: Everett M. TO ADMIT ALL — View of the administration building at McDonogh School for Boys in Pikesville, Baltimore County. The school's Board of Trustees has voted to admit boys regardless of race beginning in Sept. 1959. McDonogh was established 85 years ago with funds left by Baltimore-born John McDonogh, who ..willed it was to admit all poor boys. The 22-foot monument in photo is life-size figure of Mr. McDonogh who freed his slaves, had no white overseers on his plantations, and left their management to colored men who were given an opportunity to obtain an education.

Senate Kills Merger Of Training Schools For Negroes, Whites

Ban Is Voted On Parkway Service Areas

Post

By a Staff Reporter

ANNAPOLIS, April 3 The Senate, without a word of debate today killed a bill designed to end segregation of Maryland's training schools.

Sponsored by Dels. Margaret C. Schweinhaut and Edna P. Cook, both of Montgomery County, the measure would have merged the Montrose and Barrett Schools for delinquent girls.

At present Montrose, at Reisterstown, is operated for white girls while Barrett is restricted to Negroes.

The merger was originally proposed by the Department of Public Welfare because of imminent expansion of Friendship International Airport, adjoining the Barrett School grounds at Glen Burnie.

Mississippi Vocational College Rounding Out Its 9th Year

Itta Bena, Miss.—Beginning proudly in the heart of the mighty Delta of Mississippi on a sprawling 450 acre plot of rich soil is The Mississippi Vocational College, the youngest and yet one of the most advanced institution of higher learning in the nation.

Rounding out its ninth year of operation, this institution has grown from a cotton producing cotton field to a quarter million dollar plant and 14 students at the time of its opening, to six million dollar plant and seven hundred students to date.

Following the swift history of this institution, one can visualize an inscription emblazoned above this magnificient educational mecca, "The greater part of progress is the desire to progress."

At the helm of this educational dominion is the dynamic and untiring Dr. James Herbert White, who clings to the adage that "progress is the law of life and that cost is the farther and compensation the mother of progress." He diligently works for complete and sound programs offering the best there is, in sound educational principles.

As the most modern educational outlet of the Delta and the State, MVC is not concerned with publicizing its power and dominion, but rather to excel others in the knowledge of what is excellent. Working from the point that "excellence is never granted except as the reward of labor," the faculty and staff of MVC are hand-picked, coming from all areas of these United States. Using its own and other curriculum specialists, there has been established a working core of instruction of the highest calibre, embracing two levels of instruction, a four-year study program and a lower college-terminal program. The curriculum is built around five major divisions of concentration and designed to offer more than fifty major field of interest in the liberal arts and technical education.

Students at MVC enjoy the most ultra-modern dorms and recreational facilities available. The social programs are designed and channeled into the highest degree of wholesome activity causing each student to develop clean habits of living. Another major student facility is a bus transportation system covering a radius of two hundred miles, enabling students throughout the Delta to communte daily to classes. The school sponsors the four major sports, and basketball and football looms high, producing four seasons of championships and "All-American" players.

This truly is a living functioning example of the statement, "progress is mans' distinctive mark alone." with a history dating back less than ten years, a physical plant in advance of thirty years' work, an academic program working to preserve and increase the intellectual heritage of the ages, and a philosophy that "Excellence is the ultimate source of a full and enjoyable life, MVC has embedded its roots quickly and nourishingly into the soil of cultural instruction, sending forth a steady file of reasonable men and women to take their places efficiently and assuredly in every walk of life.

The six million dollar plant consists of the President's home; twelve faculty homes, a gigantic faculty guadrangle, four ultra-modern dorms, a laboratory school, home economics building and music studio, college grill, cafeteria, two shop buildings, classroom building, trades building, gymnasium, a completely new and air-conditioned administration- auditorium and a science-library-classroom building. Going under construction at present time is a $212,000.00 air-condtioned student union building and an infirmary.

Should one be called upon to sum up the physical progress and cultural excellence of this young institution of higher learning, he would simply point out that the wise and resourceful Administration in mindful that, "new times demand new measures of instruction as well as men of new minds; the world advances, and in time outgrows the laws which in our fathers day were best, and doubtless, after us too, some purer scheme must and will be shaped out by wiser men."

This institution, in its proper motion, struggles desperately to ascend to its native seat, the idea of descent and fall is adverse, for grounded in the timely philosophy of MVC is the basic principle that greatness or brightness infers not excellence, but cost is the father and compensation the mother of progress.

Winds Lash Negro School

Widely scattered thunderstorms lashed Mississippi yesterday, but major damage was reported in only one area.

The damage was reported at Itta Bena, about eight miles west of Greenwood, where a barn and dormitory of the Mississippi Vocational College were battered by high winds.

Damage to the Negro college was estimated at about $4,000. College officials said high winds accompanying hard rains ripped the roof and sides from a barn and sent sheets of tin slicing through the campus residential area. There were no injuries. A dormitory was also damaged.

The heaviest rainfall came at Jackson where 2.22 inches were reported in a two-hour period late yesterday afternoon.

Parts of Southwest and West Jackson were without ilghts for an hour and a half and television station WJTV was off the air during the power failure.

The Lake Catherine area south of Jackson was struck by high winds and roof tops and trees were reported damaged in that area.

Monticello in south central Mississippi reported a rainfall of 1.76 inches, but no damage resulted.

Nannie Burrough's Testimonial in Washington Is Heart-Warming, Deserved

BY ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON—Miss Nannie Helen Burroughs, founder and president of the National Trade and Professional School for Women and Girls, and president of the Women's Auxiliary to the National Baptist Convention, was honored with a testimonial at Metropolitan Baptist Church Sunday, by the D. C. Federation of Civic Associations.

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, delivered the keynote address. Dr. Johnson praised Miss Burroughs for training her girls in the art of homemaking as well as giving them a Christian background.

Graduates of the Nannie Burroughs School have inspired clean and vigorous living in many millions homes throughout America and abroad, declared the speaker. She has served as "an astringency of iron and quinine for people who are sick in self-respect," concluded Dr. Johnson. "She is a woman who keeps her eye on eternity and her feet on the ground. She knows where she is going and she will not go backward."

A plaque was presented to Miss Burroughs by Dr. Herbert Marshall "in appreciation of dedicated services through the years in interest of humanity." At the beginning of the program a white orchid was presented the honoree by Earl Prioleau, president, and Miss Phyllistine Conway, vice president, of the Junior Federation.

The meeting was presided over by Dr. Phillip T. Johnson, president of the federation.

MISS BURROUGHS came to Washington from Louisville, Ky., in 1907 with a bright dream to establish a school for young Negro girls. She brought along with her the know-how needed to accomplish this dream, and by 1910 the school was officially opened.

A few years ago she dedicated a $250,000 dormitory, debt-free. A $125,000 chapel is now under construction. Miss Burroughs began her crusade for advancement of womanhood at the age of 19 and her unflagging Christian will to fulfill an urgent mission is still a powerful force for good. In addition to her educational work, Miss Burroughs has for the past 10 years as president of the three-million member woman's convention, an auxiliary of the National Baptist Convention.

PATRICIA STEVENS FINISHING SCHOOL

MISS JULIA SLOWE
"They didn't ask, so she didn't tell them"

They never knew the difference—

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 7-25-59 P. 1

BALTIMORE. Miss Julia V. Slowe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Slowe of 2512 W. Lanvale St., explained to the AFRO, this week, why and how she had enrolled and studied at the Patricia Stevens Finishing School of North Charles Street, completing a course in modeling.

"My mother went with me to apply for entrance. They interviewed me. My mother paid the $519.75 tuition and I was enrolled.

"No one asked whether I was colored or white, and I didn't volunteer the information."

MISS SLOWE said that she had been in the school for several weeks, when it dawned upon her, from remarks made that the school did not intentionally accept colored students.

"Then I purposely stayed. Now I am purposely revealing their attitude and my race. It's all so silly. There are many white girls in the school who have skins that are darker and hair more curly than mine. And they use the same methods of beautification that are used by many of my friends," said the dark - eyed brown-haired beauty.

ON WEDNESDAY of this week, William Howard, manager of the school, which has branches throughout the country, told the AFRO "at the moment, no, we do not have facilities" for colored students.

Mr. Howard added: "We teach makeup here and hair styling you know."

This conversation followed with the AFRO reporter:

Q— What would be the difference between them -whether a person is white or colored? Don't you have some white people of varying colors — you have blondes, brunettes, some of whom are darker than others don't you?

A — Yes, but makeup is usually matched to skin coloring, color of hair and the clothes that you're wearing, and the girl who has a very pinkish complexion wearing a pale green dress would never wear a certain type of makeup, and a girl with a different coloring would wear a little different type of makeup.

Q— That is the only reason then you do not take colored applicants?

A— Well, that, and hair styling too. Hair styling seems to be a little bit difficult. It isn't everybody that can handle that.

Q— I see. Do you plan to take any colored students?

A — Eventually, I think that we are going to get into that phase of it, but I don't know when though.

Q— Thank you so much.

MISS SLOWE took the 10-month course at the school. During this time she said, she was coached in drama and dancing; taught proper makeup, which included beauty treatments and hair care.

She was also instructed in posture, walking, how to sit, how to walk up and down stairs, what to do with her hands and given rhythm exercises, Miss Slowe explained.

She also said that she studied general grooming and wardrobe planning, which included color and line, accessories, basic shopping and budgeting.

Other classes included those in manners, men etiquette and hosting, and she attended the regular day classes, Miss Slowe said.

MISS SLOWE, 19, hopes to become a professional model. She plans to get a job in New York, where she can continue her studying until she is financially able to study abroad.

She is 5' 6½" tall, weighs 130 and her measurements are 34, 24, 36.

GRADUATION CEREMONIES HELD AT PINEY WOODS COUNTRY LIFE SCHOOL

Students Demonstrate Skills During Unique Commencement

By BONITA APPLETON
Daily News Staff Writer

A unique but traditional commencement exercise that included vaccinating a squealing porker and preparing a full course dinner on stage was enacted yesterday at Piney Woods Country Life School.

Visitors from several states and Old Mexico watched 11th-12th grade students capably demonstrates practical skills they had learned while acquiring an education.

And friends and parents sat proudly in the newly constructed rock amphi - theater among the tall pines and sweetgum trees and watched with quiet happiness as the 50th commencement exercises got underway with familiar spirituals.

The exercises marked a half century of struggle for a school that began under an oak tree, passed through two tornadoes and three fires and has continued to grow.

"Piney Woods School for colored boys and girls is a 'work your way' school where needy young people without a dollar, but the determination to get a practical education can come and work his or her way from breakfast to commencement and a diploma," said Dr. Laurence C. Jones, beloved founder and president of the school.

"This school is different from the ordinary conception of a school, because Piney Woods School is a way of life," he said. "It has continued to grow as a result of racial cooperation and good will. It would take pages to tell of the friendly co - operation from local white friends, churches, and the Jackson newspapers that have had a big part in the building up of the Piney Woods School."

Dr. Preston Bradley, pastor of the Peoples' Church in Chicago, Ill., delivered the commencement address. Paying tribute to Dr. Jones, he quoted Ralph Waldo Emerson: "Every great institution is the lengthening shadow of a great personality."

Dr. Bradley told the group that the "Little Professor of Piney Woods" had begun to build "with two hands, a heart, and a dream." The graduates were reminded that the real product of any school is character.

Senior class salutatorian Joan Payton of Eudora, Ark., reminded visitors and graduates that students can work their way through school and learn by doing. Co-salutatorian John Mixon of Poplarville told of the half-day-school, half-day-work schedule that instills in students the essentials of holding a job.

SEWS STRAIGHT SEAM

Shirley Jenkins of Braxton demonstrated the method of sewing a straight seam when making a uniform skirt. She began with step one "get the measurements of the person for whom the garment is being made. Press the material, lay the pattern on the straight of the grain to keep the seams correct. Cut it out and fit it to make sure there will be no necessary alterations, thread the machine and make sure you are sewing straight." She then sat down on stage and proceeded to make the garment, calmly under scores of eyes watching every move.

Ruth Pierce pointed out the necessity for well balanced diets and reminded that "proper food gives energy for work and play, is vital to a long life and makes for a happy disposition." The meal prepared on stage by Gloria Moore of Smithdale and Deonia Jones of Jackson included fried chicken, potato salad, sliced tomatoes, turnip greens, cornbread, iced tea and sweet potato pie delicious enough to make anybody forget the caloric counter.

Barbara Wheaton of Montrose set the table and served the meal.

Laying tile, Bennie Windham reminded that "you must first smooth the rough places, fill all the cracks in the floor, sand it free of dust and leaven the room by using the two straightest walls. Lay the tile from the center of the room," he said as he went to his work bench and began.

White shirts fresh from the laundry couldn't have looked better than the ones Emma Dell Williams finished ironing. She told the audience to "make sure your iron and ironing board cover are clean, set the iron and begin." When ironing a shirt, "first iron the yoke, then the cuffs, the inside of the collar, the sleeves, then begin with the front and iron the shirt. Lastly, iron the outside of the collar."

Folding the shirt was another art in itself and Emma Dell is past master of that technique as well: "First button the shirt, then fold one side to the center, take the other side and fold to meet it. Then fold from the bottom half way and then fold again."

MAKES BRICK

Furr Smith demonstrated the brickmaking technique that has enabled the school to be entirely self sufficient. Smith told the group that the school can produce 1500 to 2000 bricks a day using sand that comes from the river nearby.

Anyone who's ever needed a plumber would have listened intently as Eddie Johnson and Charle Foster explained the intricacies of their job. The two then proceeded to connect a kitchen sink.

Band member Edith Faye Powell who has played music for seven years proved her ability to direct a band, and direct it well. "Build a firm foundation."

She then began with the basses and explained the purpose and the sounds of each section of the band. Then she assembled them into one group and played the march "Building a Band" for the audience.

Jesse James Hayward told of painting techniques and before the interested eyes of the audience showed how to paint a wall.

Hazel McMichael of Kosciusko reviewed the method of straining milk and making butter used in the dairy at Piney Woods. John M. .on of Poplarville told of his work in the dry cleaning plant while Earl Stewart gave helpful hints to follow when selecting a dairy cow. "Look for bright eyes, a strong backbone, and an appearance of contentment," he pointed out.

Earl Needham of Decatur told of the necessity of vaccination and then he and helper Samuel Monroe of DeKalb calmly vaccinated a squealing porker on stage.

Betty Jo Johnson told of the work of the Glee Club and then led the group in singing the spirituals "Ride on King Jesus" and "Old Ship of Zion".

Argola Smith and Catherlene Roman exhibited their skill at Mimeographing a message that came out letter perfect and sharp as an original copy.

Vocational Schools To Train Students On Equality Basis

All Facilities And Courses Made Available To Students Without Regard To Race Is Interpretation of Statement Issued At Beginning of New School Year. Complaints of Quality of Education May Cease

The Board of Education of the Nashville public school system is announcing its committment to public education for the present school year quite differently to what has been the custom.

They seem to be recognizing the wise decision which has been set there of disbanding racial segregation either for whites or for colored persons. They seem to be saying that the system is prepared to go the "last mile" toward agreement with the U. S. Supreme Court and the Supreme Court of Tennessee in their interpretation of the "law of the land" as to public education.

Without saying so, the board, out of the mouth of supervisor T. L. Keys, is making available to prospective students of both races the studies and facilities at both Hume-Fogg Technical and Vocational High and Pearl Vocational High School.

In a letter addressed to the editor of the Nashville Globe, and dated September 1, Mr. Keys says the following:

"Please find enclosed brief description of adult training to be offered by the City Public Schools, beginning September 8. Any publicity you see fit to give this announcement will be appreciated."

T. J. KEYS
Hume-Fogg Tech., and Voc. High School

The enclosed information from Mr. Keys is headed "City Public Schools Adult Evening Classes." The information is as follows:

CITY PUBLIC SCHOOLS ADULT EVENING CLASSES

Evening classes for adults will be offered again this fall at Hume-Fogg Technical and Vocational High School and at Pearl Vocational High School.

These classes are a part of the adult education program of the City Public Schools and are conducted without cost to employed or temporarily unemployed persons who wish to improve their job ability and earning power.

Class work or shop work taken must in all cases supplement the daily work of the person enrolled, since these classes are designed to improve the worker on his job rather than to train for a new type of work.

Classes offered last winter at either Hume-Fogg or a Pearl and which may be conducted this fall include:

Blueprint Reading (Building Trades)
Blueprint Reading (Machine)
Dressmaking
Electricity
Human Relations
Industrial Electronics (General)
Industrial Electronics (Office Machines)
Interior Dedcorating
Job Instruction Training
Machine Shop
Practical Shop Mathematics
Radio and TV Service
Refrigeration and Airconditioning
Renovation
Retail Selling (Basic)
Selling (Advanced)
Sewing
Structural Steel Drafting
Tailoring
Tool and Die Design
Transportation and Traffic
Trowel Trades
Welding (Acetylene)
Welding (Arc)

The above and any other classes for which fifteen or more requests are received from persons eligible for training may be conducted without cost to class members.

Enrollment will be taken and classes organized during the week beginning September 8. Additional information concerning enrollment in the above classes or other classes to be requested may be had by contacting:

T. L. Keys, Room 204, Hume-Fogg Technical and Vocational High School. Phone AL 5-3418 or Evening School Supervisor, Pearl Vocational High School. Phone AL 5-5106

Quite apparently the City Board of Education has of it own volition and without being subjected to a lawsuit, ended what has been a constant complaint of a number of prospective students of our technical high schools. These have held that the training offered at Pearl Technical High did not include much desirable training, and not nearly as rich as that afforded the students who attended Hume-Fogg Technical High. But that was before the Court decision which held that the same provisions for education must be provided for ALL students as was uprovided merely for SOME students.

The same legal provisions for education now voucsafed for students in Nashville is exactly what the courts have endorsed for all of the states. It was not surprising that Nashville made its provision to include students of both races.

Andthis "new order" is likely to be received just as calmly as was the provision for desegregation passengers who ride the buses in Nashville.

Bus desegregation got the newspaper headlines when it took place in places in the Deep South but not in Nashville.

It could be said that the "new order" in Nashville was to be expected because of the attitude of the best people of this city.

As quiet as it is kept, Nashville's white and colored people for the most part are as close as "nineteen is to twenty." Colored domestics are present on the homes of the best people here and they and the white employees maintain a "mutual admiration society" of vast proportions. It is the bad people of both races who cause most of the trouble.

End Discrimination in Trade Unions, NAACP Urges AFL-CIO

NEW YORK — Continuing racial discrimination with certain unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations is charged in an 11-page documented memorandum made public here Sunday by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The memorandum, dated Dec. 1 and prepared by the Association's labor secretary, Herbert Hill, and addressed to George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, civil rights department, cites complaints received from NAACP members and other Negro workers in various sections of the country alleging discrimination by trade union internationals and locals.

Pattern of Discrimination

Discrimination in the labor movement, the memorandum charges, follows a pattern of total exclusion, segregated locals or the separate lines of progression restricting the job classifications available to Negro workers. "In addition to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen which exclude Negroes by constitutional provision, many international unions affiliated to the AFL-CIO continue to exclude Negroes by tacit consent and other AFL-CIO unions limit Negro membership in most instances to segregated or 'auxiliary' locals," the document assert.

Mr. Wilkins wrote to George Meany, AFL-CIO president, on Dec. 19, calling attention to Mr. Hill's memorandum and expressing the conviction that "discrimination can be eliminated only through a systematic program on the part of the leadership of the AFL-CIO to enforce its basic policy of non - discrimination throughout the organized labor movement."

Difficulties Recognized

The NAACP, Mr. Wilkins said, is "not aware of some of the difficulties faced by the AFL-CIO in implementing the just policy it has set for itself. Some of these difficulties stem from long-established, but unjust traditions and practices within certain international unions themselves. Some are rooted in the present climate of opinion in the South and in other sections of the country. Some, undoubtedly, are connected with politics within unions and with the general program and priorities of the organized labor movement."

Since the merger of the AFL and CIO three years ago, the NAACP leader told Mr. Meany, "the Association has cooperated diligently with the civil rights department and with affiliated international unions in attempting to resolve problems of discrimination and segregation. In addition, representatives of the NAACP national office were active in efforts to defeat 'right to work' legislation in Ohio, California and elsewhere."

Mr. Hill's memorandum sets forth affidavits of Negro workers alleging discrimination by the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks; the United Paper Makers and Paperworkers Union; the Hodcarriers Buildng and Common Laborers Union of America; International rBotherhood of Electrical Workers; Plasterers and Cemenit Masons International Association; and Plumbers and Pipe Fitters Union.

In Tulsa, Okla., an all-Negro local of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks petitioned the union's Frisco System Board for a merger with the white local in view of the desegregation of schools in Tulsa. This petition was rejected and the union continues to maintain Jim Crow locals in that city, the memorandum points out.

Unions, Decisive Factor

"In many industries in basic sectors of the American economy," the document charges, "the racial practices of the trade union certified as the collective bargaining agent will be the decisive factor in determining the status of Negro workers. All too often there is a significant disparity between the declared public policy of the national AFL-CIO and the day-to-day reality as experienced by Negro wage earners in the North as well as in the South."

As of Dec. 31, the NAACP had not received a reply to Mr. Wilkins' letter.

Negro Carhops Taken Off Jobs After Protest

Jackson Daily News
Jackson, Miss.
Jan. 10-2-59

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP)—Negro male carhops have been taken off their jobs at a drive-in restaurant after a throng of white men boycotted the place and warned the owner to get rid of them.

Tommy Priakos, the owner, said the two young men, students at Arkansas AM&N College for Negroes, had not been fired.

"I'm just holding back until things kind of cool off," Priakos said Monday night. He said the suspension period is indefinite.

None of the boycotters showed up Monday night, and only a few were present after the Negroes were removed Saturday, Priakos said.

The white men, numbering from 60 to 70, first showed up last Tuesday night. They crowded the inside of the white establishment and jammed the driveways with their cars, lingering for hours over coffee and cheap soft drinks, Priakos said.

Priakos said the men would not tell him if they represented any segregationist group, but a police spokesman said some were members of the Dollarway Citizens Council, an anti-intergration organization.

Segregationist feeling mounted here recently over an effort by three Negro students to enter the school.

The school board is studying their petition.

Little Rock Father Fired

The Pittsburgh Courier
Little Rock, Ark. — Ellis Thomas, father of Jefferson Thomas, Central High School integrated Negro student, has been fired from his job with the Little Rock plant of the International Harvester Co.

1-3-59

When Central opened Aug. 12, and Jefferson was in attendance before other Negro children were admitted, the father, Mr. Thomas, was arrested by Governor Faubus' state police and charged with carrying a gun.

Ellis Thomas

When Thomas was released, Aug. 13, he went immediately to the Harvester plant and explained to the office manager what had happened. The office manager stated that he had discussed the matter with the district manager and they had decided that Thomas should take some time off until things cooled down.

16-c

ON NOV. 1, the office manager called Mr. Thomas to the office and informed him that his job had been terminated.

Mr. Thomas appealed to Brooks McCormick, executive vice president of International Harvester, who wrote him: "I, personally, am sincerely sorry that your services are no longer required in our new district office, but I feel that the reason for that is purely one of economics as indicated above in our contracting janitor services."

Mr. Thomas had written Mr. McCormick that he felt that the only reason his job was being terminated was because of the attendance of his son, Jefferson, at Central High School.

NAACP Presses Discrimination Charge

Rail Clerks Facing Probe

Oct. 8-1959

NEW YORK (ANP) — The State Supreme Court of New York has been called upon to investigate alleged discrimination within the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks international union.

Court action was taken after all steps for remedial action within the union had been exhausted. The case revolves around two instances of racial discrimination involving the brotherhood, although many other cases have been reported.

The cases of discrimination in this suit were brought to the attention of the Kings and Rockland Counties (N. Y.) branches of the NAACP, thus referred to Herbert Hill, national labor secretary of the association.

IN LINE WITH his duties to investigate charges of discrimination because of race in connection with employment, and in the trade unions, Hill made a study of the matter.

As a result of that study the NAACP labor secretary sent a memorandum to Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department. This report was accompanied by a letter from Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP.

Hill also communicated with J. Carlton Yeldell, labor relations secretary of the national office of the national Urban League who likewise had investigated the complaint of racial discrimination in connection with this matter.

FINDINGS MADE by the labor executives of the two national organizations were sent to the president of the brotherhood six weeks ago with a request for a reply, but none had been received at the time of filing the complaint with the courts.

Hill's report revealed that William Scott, plaintiff in the case, had apparently given leadership in a campaign to broaden the Protective Committee from a one-man to a three-man committee within his lodge.

The lodge membership overwhelmingly adopted this change against the strong opposition of General Chairman Harry J. Chapman and Anthony J. Riccio. Scott was subsequently elected to membership on the Protective Committee and served as its secretary for 17 months preceding his nomination and election to the chairmanship of this committee in December of last year.

Problems developed from time to time between Ricco and Scott during the time the latter was serving as secretary of the Protective Committee. Charges brought against Scott by Ricco and Chapman were voted down by the lodge with only two dissenting votes.

EDWARD LANZA, Grand Lodge organizer, who is said to oppose Negroes in integrated lodges holding any key posts, sided with Riccio on racial grounds.

Another Grand Lodge officer, James W. Hartley, is said to have expressed dislike and contempt of Negroes.

In conversations with the former president and financial secretary of Lodge 173, he is alleged to have stated that: "You don't have to worry about them d— n— or take any crap off them because we white members are in the majority in our brotherhood."

IN VIEW of this information the NAACP official looked with suspicion upon the action of the Grand Lodge in setting aside the Dec. 18, 1958, election of Palisades Lodge 173.

"We find it difficult to reconcile this action with the prior status of William Scott as secretary of the Protective Committee for 17 months preceding this election," said Hill.

Set Aside Jail World Negro Pilot Atlanta Ga. Case Order Sat 2-4-59

DENVER (ANP) — Marion O. Green, 30-year-old Negro pilot from Lansing, Mich., has received another set-back in his attempts to obtain employment as a pilot on a regular basis with a commercial airline, when a judge in a district court, set aside a "hire a Negro pilot" order filed by the state anti-discrimination commission against Continental airlines.

The commission issued the ruling July 22 that Continental had discriminated against Green because of his race in his attempt to obtain a pilot's job.

Judge William A. Black, in setting aside the order, said the July order was void because there had been no new hearing. His ruling nullified the commission order of last Dec. 22 that the airline employ Green.

Judge [illegible] in issuing a new order without [illegible] a second hearing had [illegible] the consecutive terms of [illegible] aims.

Green's attorneys and the [illegible] mission were given 30 days to [illegible] an appeal with the [illegible] court.

Denver White House Committee Issues 'Job' Report

Sees Gradual Progress In Job Opportunities For Minorities

The Call

DENVER. — "The progress of American minority groups toward equal job opportunity has been gradual on the Negro front somewhat striking during the last ten years."

This is the essence of the "Employment Opportunity" report released last week by the Denver committee of the Colorado White House Conference following its Oct. 8 meeting.

Instrumental in completing the state's questionnaire on "Employment Opportunities for Youth of Varous Ethnic and Cultural Groups" were agencies such as the Urban League, Denver Commission on Community Relations, State Anti-Discrimination Commission, Anti-Defamation League, etc.

The survey represents a look at the overall "job opportunities" for minorities in Denver and surrounding areas. Similar reports from 63 counties will be compiled and sent to the state White House committee prior to the state conference which meets here Nov. 21. Approximately 31 delegates from the state will meet in Washington March 7, 1960, for a week-long study of where American youth stand now and in the future.

The White House Conference is called by the president every 10 years.

Some questions and answers of the Denver Committee report follows:

1. What are the principal ethnical racial groups in your county?

Spanish ancestry, 6 per cent; Negroes, 3.6 per cent; Jews, 3 per cent; American Indians, 1.1 per cent; Orientals, 0.8 per cent. (Figures based on 1950 census).

2. What do you consider to be the principal problems in providing equal career opportunities for the youth of these racial and ethnic groups?

Job discrimination against minority group people. Lack of counseling and guidance services to motivate youth to secure skills and to overcome feelings of rejection. Raising sights of parents, who have had limited education and employment skills.

3. Is it necessary for youths of ethnic and racial groups in your county to move away from their home communities in order to find adequate job opportunities?

There are probably more opportunities in the Denver area than larger population and more industrialization. But opportunities for minority youth in private industry is still severly limited.

4. In terms of equal job opportunities, how have conditions changed in your county since 1950?

Passage of the F.E.P. law has helped, but it is still hard for minority youth to obtain entrance employment that a non-minority youth of the same qualifications. There are increased opportunity in public utilities, public schools, federal, state and city government.

Negro Discrimination In D.C. Employ Probed

The District Commissioners' new Human Relations Council has launched its first investigation.

Leon Chatelain, jr., council chairman, and David A. Sawyer, executive director, disclosed yesterday that the council is going ahead on a discrimination complaint which has addressed to the council by mail. It alleges discriminatory practices affecting several Negroes in the city's employ, they said.

Mr. Chatelain said further details about the complaint, which was referred to the Commissioners and sent back to the council with a request for the investigation, will not be disclosed at present. Publicity might hamper the inquiry, he explained.

Mr. Sawyer, who will conduct the inquiry, was asked to report back at a council meeting in two weeks.

At a council session yesterday, a group of civic leaders cited 10 city departments to which they said the council ought to give attention with respect to the status of Negro employes. They labeled these agencies "problem areas."

The departments mentioned were fire, police, executive, general administration, procurement, personnel, buildings and grounds, highways and traffic, licenses and inspections, and sanitary engineering.

Most of the District government's Negro workers, the group said, are laborers and messengers. Most city agencies have taken only token steps toward putting Negroes into high-level posts, it asserted.

The civic delegation also complained about mostly "token" integration in public utilities and in other fields of employment outside of the District government.

The delegation referred to "regretable" racial designations in newspaper ads, especially for real estate, and to some extent in news stories. And it complained of widespread discrimination against Jews in certain employment areas and real estate developments.

Racial Bias In U.S. Hiring Reduced

But Committee Notes Problems

Washington, Aug. 27 (AP) — A presidential committee has reported that racial discrimination in Government employment practices has been reduced, but some major problems remain to be solved.

To effect full compliance with the nondiscrimination policy respecting race, color, religion, or national origin, the committee listed these important problems still requiring solution:

1. To identify discrimination wherever it occurs.

2. To remove improper conditions and practices which foster the possibility of discrimination.

238 Complaints Heard

3. To determine whether those situations in which minority group members are absent—conspicuously—are due to lack of qualified applicants or to the practice of discrimination.

The committee said it heard 238 complaints in the year and a half ending June 30. A total of 85.7 per cent were made by Negroes and 5 per cent by Jews.

"In most cases," the committee said, "the specific charges were not proved, but in many cases remedial action was deemed necessary. . . .

"Of the cases which reached the committee, corrective action was recommended in 14 per cent, with a positive finding of discrimination in half of these."

The committee, known as the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy, helps Government departments and agencies enforce the anti-discrimination policy. Archibald J. Carey, Jr., Chicago attorney, is chairman, and Branch Rickey, head of the nation's newly formed third major baseball league, is vice-chairman.

"Federal employment (2,356,000 last June 30) is more available to minorities than private employment," the committee said. "But federal employment, like private employment, may reflect the pattern and climate of the local community. Nevertheless, the agencies have displayed genuine concern in the elimination of discrimination when it appears."

Discrimination Claimed On Washington Projects

Irving Ferman, executive vice chairman of the Presidential committee, said the McCloskey Company had offered to bypass the union and bring Negro workers from Philadelphia to meet the anti-bias clause.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, chairman of the committee, has rejected the proposal as evading the issue, Mr. Ferman said.

"We simply cannot let this east front be built with any suspicion of discrimination," he said.

NEGRO JOB DISPUTE BRINGS PLEA TO U.S.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25 (AP)—Government action was sought today to settle a dispute over the hiring of Negroes for construction on the Capitol and other Government buildings.

Negro workers say they have refused employment on the projects.

The President's Committee on Government contracts said it was taking the problem to the General Services Administration, contracting agency for the Government.

The contract with the McCloskey Construction Company of Philadelphia bans job discrimination because of race under an executive order applying to all Government contracts.

The company, however, has an agreement to hire only workers referred to it by local 201 of the Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Union. The Union, which has two Negro members, denies any racial discrimination.

Short Vacation For Negroes Is Ruled Unfair

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UPI) — A trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board ruled today that two employers committed unfair labor practices by reneging on promises to give Negro workers the same vacation benefits granted white employees.

The examiner, A. Bruce Hunt, said Intracoastal Terminal, Inc., and Louisiana Processing Co., Inc., illegally discouraged union membership by failing to give Negroes two-week vacations.

The employers posted a notice in August, 1957, announcing that all employees would receive two weeks' vacation in 1958. A few months later, Teamsters' Local 270 won the right to represent workers at the two firms. Last summer, Negro workers found that they would still get only one week vacation.

Mr. Hunt said "the new policy had a natural tendency to discourage Negro employees from joining the union."

Sharp Cut Seen In D.C. Job Bias

[illegible]discrimination in employment in the District has been reduced greatly in the last 10 years, the executive director of the Commissioners Council on Human Relations said last night.

David A. Sawyer, addressing the 71 [illegible] graduating class of the Phelps Vocational High School, said that although there are times when the American Negro may feel that prejudice is standing in the way of a job or promotion, "discrimination in employment will become less a problem."

Mr. Sawyer appealed "to each and everyone . . . to avoid the pitfalls of self-pity and the self-indulgent explanations for your own lack of effort."

He noted that many city governments have set up agencies to insure job opportunities for every qualified applicant regardless of religion, color or race. The District makes every firm doing business with it sign a contract agreeing that there will be no discrimination against employes or job applicants, he said.

Mr. Sawyer described Washington as "a community which in 10 years has shifted from a community in which Negro men and women met discrimination at every turn in life . . . to a community where we have wonderful schools and access to the books and facilities that will help us to learn more."

Six of the graduates learned a few minutes before the exercises that they had passed their apprenticeship examinations. James Boseman, Maurice P. Purvis, Raymond Taylor and Royal Tucker in electronics and James Easterling and Everett Greenfield, in the sheet metal division, were those qualifying for apprenticeships.

School Supt. Carl F. Hansen presided at the commencement exercises.

District Asks Talks With Builders to End Job Discrimination

Commissioners Act to Enforce Contract Clause

By Connie Feeley
Staff Reporter

The District Commissioners agreed yesterday to call a meeting of leading District construction contractors to urge them to eliminate racial discrimination in hiring.

The move is an attempt to enforce the nondiscrimination clause which is in all District Government construction contracts.

The meeting probably will be in mid-September, according to Leon Chatelain Jr., chairman of the Commissioners' Council on Human Relations.

The Council recommended the meeting during a closed session with the Commissioners. Chatelain left the session saying that the Commissioners had unanimously approved a written report from the Council.

Unions Accused

The report said recent investigations "clearly indicate racially discriminatory membership patterns on the part of the mbajority of the District of Columbia building trade labor organizations."

These labor unions, for the most part, have exclusive employe referral arrangements with contractors, the report continued.

"It is clear, from our discussions and appeals for the need for compliance, that these arrangements result in a distinct pattern of violation of the nondiscrimination-in-employment clause which appears in all District Government contracts," the report said.

Since the District has no contract directly with the unions, the Commissioners will attempt to work through the contractors, Chatelain said.

Apprenticeships Cited

Chatelain said the Council has also found discrimination in the selection of trainees and apprentices within construction unions.

"It is apparent that Negroes have been and are currently intentionally ignored and deliberately excluded in the planning and execution of apprenticeship programs," the Council's report said.

In addition to recommending the meeting wih tleading contractors, the report suggested that the District Department of Buildings and Grounds inspectors, who check construction jobs to see that contract plans are carried out properly, should also investigate for employment discrimination.

Further Consideration

This recommendation was approved "in spirit" only, according to Commissioner Robert E. McLaughlin, and will be considered furhter after the meeting with contractors. The Commissioners did not direct the Department of Buildings and Grounds to carry out this suggestion, McLaughlin said.

This suggestion would apparently put the inspectors in the position of gathering evidence for any future breach-of-contract suit the District might choose to file in an effort to force nondiscrimination.

Negroes Urged to Win Job Equality

The Rev. E. Franklin Jackson, President of the Washington Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said yesterday that Negroes have a civic responsibility to campaign for equal employment opportunities.

The minister spoke at a panel discussion on "The Economic Situation in Washington and Its Remedies" sponsored by the D. C. Federation of Civic Associations.

The panel was part of a series of Federation programs observing Civic Responsibility Week which ended yesterday with an awards banquet at the Hotel Continental.

Jackson said that as consumer Negroes should individually work for equal job rights by speaking out to employers who refuse to hire non-whites.

To the local baker or dairyman who practices hiring discrimination, the Negro customer should say: "If you expect to eat your bread and drink your milk, you're going to have to be considerate of us with respect to jobs."

Howard University President Mordecai W. Johnson encouraged Negroes to practice civic responsibility by working to improve their own neighborhoods. The other panel member, economist Phillip Stoddard Brown, said non-discrimination in employment is "perhaps the most important civic responsibility these days."

U. S. Agency Says Persuasion Gets Firms on Contract to Hire Negroes

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

The President's Committee on Government Contracts stated yesterday its new direct approach to the problem of job discrimination is showing significant, though still small, results.

In the last two months, the Committee said, nine plants in the South and elsewhere holding Government contracts have hired Negroes for jobs previously open only to white persons.

Total number of Negroes and plants involved is relatively small. But the figures represent stepped-up progress in the Committee's efforts to win compliance through persuasion with the non-discrimination-in-employment clause which has appeared in all Government contracts since 1941.

The Committee, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, had until recently served in large part as interdepartmental clearing house for complaints (800 in six years) which were sent to Government contracting agencies to investigate and try to settle. The results were generally unspectacular.

Last spring the Committee decided to play a more aggressive role. As a first step it hired as staff chief Irving Ferman, who had been Washington representative for the American Civil Liberties Union.

Ferman and his staff collected from Government contract officers a list of their toughest unsettled complaints and hit the road, armed with the title "President's Committee" headed by the Vice President, for a series of "educational" conferences to persuade company officials they should comply with the law.

No Government contract has ever been revoked because of job discrimination. Lawyers say it is difficult to prove and some question whether it is legally a revocable act since it does not involve performance of the contracted work.

The Committee said its recent work had these results:

• In Dover, Del., a synthetic rubber products plant employing 1700 white persons but no Negroes hired seven last month, including skilled factory workers, a laboratory technician and a personal clerk. Management had given up two previous attempts to hire Negoes because of worker opposition. In this case as in others, the Committee said it said it persuaded the employer not only to accept qualified Negroes but to go out and recruit them as notice that the once-closed door was open.

• In Fort Worth, Tex., an aircraft manufacturer employing more than 20,000, but no Negroes above unskilled jobs, hired two Negro girls for clerical jobs, including one in the personnel office where she could be seen by anyone seeking a job. The company recruited the girls after exhaustive screening. An "orientation" program was put on for employes. There is no segregation in the plant.

• A North Carolina tobacco plant hired two Negro office workers and a laboratory technician and announced it would accept Negro applications for other work previously closed to them.

• In St. Louis, an electrical equipment manufacturer which had never had a Negro on its 1700-man payroll asked the Urban League for qualified Negroes and hired four.

• A Hamilton, Ohio, safe manufacturer who had never employed a Negro despite four years of prodding by the Government hired one in a semiskilled position.

• A stationary supply company in Los Angeles hired two Negroes as apprentice pressmen. Elsewhere in California, an electric power company furnishing powe tor Government buildings hired two Negro clerks. Two oil refineries in southern California hired Negro chemists, which meant moving Negroes into once all-white small towns.

Race Squabble Develops on U.S. Project

By EARL MAZO
Herald Tribune News Service

WASHINGTON — A squabble has developed between the President's Committee on Government Contracts, a large Philadelphia contractor, and two local unions over the failure to hire Negro electricians and rodmen on the projects to extend the Capitol and build a third office building for the House of Representatives.

The construction work is costing the federal government $78,000,000.

The President's Committee, which monitors the standard anti-discrimination clauses in contracts between the government and private firms, has instructed Matthew H. McCloskey, the prime contractor, to stop hiring on the basis of race, and to give jobs on both projects to qualified Negroes.

McCloskey, who is treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, has insisted the fault lies with the union shop stewards who have done the hiring to date. He reportedly has appealed to George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, and other top echelon labor leaders to help persuade the local unions to permit the hiring of Negroes.

Meanwhile, the President's Committee is understood to have prepared a ruling which places the responsibility on Mr. McCloskey and points out that the law permits him to bypass the union if it discriminates, and hire outside the union membership.

If the situation is not otherwise resolved, the President's Committee, of which Vice President Nixon is chairman, can recommend that the Government Contracting Agency cancel its contracts with the McCloskey firm.

Irving Ferman, the committee's executive vice chairman, indicated however that his group believes the contractor is likely to comply within a couple of weeks.

The controversy arose in July when a Negro rodman complained, formally, that he was denied a job even though he was a member of the Rodmen's Union. (Rodmen are specialists in foundation structural work.)

An investigation by the presidential committee staff showed Negroes were also being refused other skilled jobs, especially as electricians. The staff found Negro employment on the two mammoth Capitol Hill projects was limited to helpers and truck drivers.

3 CAPITAL PROJECTS SAID TO BAR NEGROES

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26 (AP) — A spokesman for the President's Committee on Government Contracts said Monday that qualified Negro workmen were being denied jobs on three major Federal projects in Washington.

Irving Ferman, the committee's executive vice president, said the discrimination involved construction of the new East Front of the Capitol, the new House Office Building, and a third government structure.

Mr. Ferman said the contractor involved on all three projects was Matthew McCloskey of Philadelphia, and that the discrimination grew out of Mr. McCloskey's agreement with local Rodmen's Union 201. Rodmen put steel reinforcing rods in cement.

Mr. Ferman said he had conferred with Calvin L. Walker, business agent for the union, after Mr. McCloskey had said his hands were tied by his agreement with the local.

Mr. Ferman did not disclose what his next step would be other than to say:

"We fully intend to bring this to Mr. McCloskey's attention as we have in the past with the hope that there might be fuller compliance on Mr. McCloskey's part in hiring qualified Negro workmen."

McCloskey Denies Bias Charge by U. S. Committee

"This situation is a sub-contractor problem. The case in question arose when a sub-contractor engaged in setting reinforcing steel rods informed a Negro job applicant who sought work that he had already hired the necessary men for the particular job and additional workers were not needed."

McCloskey said the job applicant then made a formal complaint to the President's Committee which monitors the standard anti-discrimination clauses in contracts between the Government and private firms.

The McCloskey firm has the principal contracts for extending the Capitol and for building a third office building for the House of Representatives.

Irving Ferman, executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, of which Vice President Richard M. Nixon is chairman, indicated in Washington the committee has prepared a ruling which places the responsibility on McCloskey and pointed out that the law permitted him to bypass the union if it discriminates and hire outside the union membership.

Thomas McCloskey said as far as the McCloskey firm is concerned all the hiring is done for the firm by supervisory employes in the field. He said he understood that in the case of subcontractors the workers are either hired by union shop stewards or the sub-contractors.

U.S. NOT LIABLE

Wage Suit of Negro Workers Is Rejected

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9 (UPI)—The Supreme Court today rejected the contention of a group of Negro railroad workers that the federal government must pay them the back wages they claim were denied them because of their race.

The court acted in a brief order without a written opinion. Its dismissal of the Negroes' suit left standing an opinion of the U.S. Court of Claims absolving the government of all liability in the case.

The high court's ruling featured an unusually light "decision Monday" following its action Saturday upholding the back-to-work order against the 500,000 steel strikers. The steelworkers' case interrupted a two-week recess by the justices.

In other major actions, the court:

Budweiser Case

Agreed to decide whether Anheuser-Busch, Inc., violated the antitrust laws by cutting the price of Budweiser, a so-called national beer, in the St. Louis area while maintaining higher prices elsewhere.

Refused to review an order by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) directing Carter Products, Inc., to drop the term "liver" from the brand name of its famous Carter's Little Liver Pills. The 1956 FTC order rejected the idea that the pills would help a sluggish lvier.

Denied a hearing to Edward Novak, sentenced to death in Delaware County, Pa., for murdering his fiance and her mother. He claimed his constitutional rights were violated because he was not allowed to fire his attorneys.

Arguments Heard

After handing down these rulings, the high court heard arguments in the highly publicized case of Rudolf Ivanovich Abel, who was convicted in a New York federal court of spying for Russia. He was sentenced to 30 years in prison.

The railroad workers' suit against the government was filed by 47 Negroes who worked for the Missouri-Pacific Railroad from 1933 to 1956. During this period, the line was operated by trustees appointed by a federal court in Missouri.

The Negroes contended they worked as brakemen as well as porters, but received less pay than white brakemen. They sued the government for the difference.

Our Changing Economy

Discrimination Raises Labor Cost

By Philip Stoddard Brown

WHAT HAPPENS to unemployment when business is good? "Does it dry up like a raisin in the sun?"

In the experience of Washington, the answer is "No." Instead it continues to "fester like a sore and then run." Largely because of unemployment, about 25,000 persons (13,000 of them children) were being helped by the District Department of Welfare when I last inquired. Groups of unemployed young men (with nothing to do and no spending money) can be seen any day, in mid-afternoon, loitering on street corners in many sections of Washington.

Brown

Over 25,000 persons were unemployed in February, despite the fact that Washington is said by the Labor Department to have "job opportunities for local workers slightly in excess of job seekers."

Some part of that total consists of persons unemployed because of seasonal slack and the customary ebb and flow of jobs. But government employment is 7000 or so higher than a year ago and the turnover is low. Construction activity has been extraordinarily high. Trade has benefited by an early Easter, the meeting of Congress and the record inflow of people from out of town. Manufacturing in Washington consists largely of food processing, printing and other stable activities performed in large part for the Government.

By and large, it's a tight labor market, with a very low turnover. Local employers, with the help of employment agencies, are recruiting in other cities.

Fields Closed to Negroes

Much of current unemployment—perhaps half—is attributable to the harsh discrimination of many Washington employers against Negroes, older people and those physically handicapped. The financial community is virtually closed to Negroes, except at the custodial and messenger levels. Two large department stores and many specialty stores insist upon "all white" sales and office staffs. Similarly, employment in insurance, real estate and many other fields is virtually closed to Negroes.

Because most unions in the building trades refuse to apprentice Negroes, hundreds of qualified boys graduated annually from local vocational schools—many remarkably well trained—have no opportunity to become plumbers, machinists, plasterers, tile-setters, roofers or stone masons.

Racial discrimination has become increasingly expensive in terms of labor costs. A store needs a highly competent sales clerk. The United States Employment Service could easily supply a Negro woman with high aptitude scores—perhaps one now working in a drug store or restaurant at the minimum wage—but the order is for a white girl. Since the better qualified white girls usually have good jobs, the agency can supply only what is left.

Banks and building and loan associations forego hiring Negroes with superior high school, or even college, training to take on and train (often at considerable expense) whites who, in some cases, have mediocre school records and no great aptitude for the jobs they are hired to perform.

When talented Negroes can't get jobs even as waitresses, sales clerks, bookkeepers, bank tellers or carpenters—and can find jobs only as cleaning women, stock attendants, elevator operators, porters and common labors—this crowds the lower rungs. Also, when those who have studied and done well in home economics, accounting, carpentry, printing or the liberal arts can't move up the ladder, this undermines the efforts of parents, teachers and guidance counselors who are continually saying: "The way to get ahead is to study and train yourself."

Police, Welfare Costs

Discrimination in employment is a luxury—costly also in terms of relief and crime prevention. The savings in public expenditures that could be achieved by opening up jobs to resident Negroes, rather than hiring outsiders, surely would be enough in a few years' time to finance swimming pools, tennis courts, a public theater, concert hall, university and a lot of other improvements that are held to be "luxuries" beyond the public means. One who doesn't believe the savings would be this great has only to study the budget recently submitted by District officials and ask what is behind the need for such huge welfare and police expenditures.

Whatever makes for higher labor costs and higher taxes ought to be a matter of concern for the business community—a "natural" for the Board of Trade. But no committee of the Board has ever considered an educational program to bring about equal job opportunities for Negroes, so far as I can discover. The "outside" suggestion that this subject be put on the agenda of the Annual Outlook Conference was rejected . . . No Negro businessman has ever been invited to become a member of the Board of Trade.

Even though no large business or civic group in Washington has undertaken an educational program in this field, or even gone on record as favoring equal job opportunities, a lot of effective work has been done by the Urban League—on a very modest budget—by the United States Employment Service and by a small group of businessmen who have constituted themselves as a Committee for Job Opportunities. This last group meets once a month to talk over any ideas that come to mind. Members devote such time and energy as they can spare from their jobs to talk with fellow businessmen wherever they encounter them—trying to persuade them to hire on the basis of merit and skill.

A Start Is Made

A few companies have made great progress in integrating their organizations. Some others, such as D. C. Transit, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. and a few department stores, have made a modest start in recent years. In no case has there been any significant problem from within or without, after a firm decision by top management to go ahead.

Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell tells that when he employed the first Negro sales people at Macy's, after World War II, he hired an outside firm to check on customer reaction. One-third of those interviewed as they emerged from the store said they hadn't really noticed that the sales clerk who had waited on them was Negro. This same reaction has been typical in Washington. Fears of employers turn out to be imaginary.

But still, timidity is the rule among businessmen, even though, as the president of a big chain of department stores recently told a gathering of local merchants: "You take far greater risks in other things you do, with far less prospect of gain."

To have to justify a policy of equal job opportunities on the basis of profits is discouraging but, except for this argument, progress in lessening discrimination would be even slower. American business isn't so democratic as we like to think.

5 Unions Facing Charges on Bias

NEW YORK—Both St. Louis and New York are faced with charges of racial discrimination in five labor unions, with the Eastern faction being faced with a hearing on allegations that it refuses to admit Negroes.

In St. Louis, NAACP executive secretary Roy Wilkins charged some labor unions in that area are practicing discrimination against Negroes.

Wilkins said discrimination is being practiced by locals of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks Local 100 of the International Hod Carriers Buildings and Common Laborers; Local 309 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Local 90 of the Plasterers and Cement Masons International Association.

The NAACP, Wilkins said, has filed complaints against each local.

MEANWHILE, IN New York the first public hearing on charges that a waterfront union has refused to admit Negroes has been scheduled by the State Commission Against Discrimination for 10:30 A.M. on May 5.

The hearing will involve the Checkers and Clerks Union, Local 1, of the International Longshoremen's Association.

Religious Groups Invited To Job Discrimination Talk

Five hundred representatives of religious groups will meet ... to discuss ... because of race, creed, color or national origin. They have been invited by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts. The Committee was ... to explore opportunity for ... Government contracts.

Speakers at the opening 10 a. m. session, at the Sheraton-Park will include John A. Roosevelt, New York investment banker and committee member; the Rev. Martin Luther, leader of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus strike, and A. Philip Randolph, president of the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters.

Five workshops will be held at 2 p. m.

Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh will be the principal speaker at the 12:30 p. m. luncheon and will discuss the Administration's civil rights program. A question-and-answer period will follow.

This is the first meeting of ... called by the President's Committee. Other ... have been held with ... education, industry, labor, private social agencies, trade groups, and minority groups organizations.

The counsel of the participants will be sought on ways that the policy of equal job opportunity can be put into practice. The delegates will explore practical ways of advancing equal job opportunities at the local level.

Government contracts carry clauses forbidding discrimination in employment.

Presidential Committee Request

D. C. Council Agrees to Seek End Of Discrimination in Trade Unions

The Commissioners Council on Human Relations agreed yesterday to work toward ending discrimination against Negroes in building trades unions here.

The Council support was requested during a meeting with John A. Roosevelt, chairman of the District Subcommittee of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

The Committee called last month for enforcement of non-discrimination clauses in Government contracts for southwest Washington projects. The Committee said no Negro electricians worked on the Capital Park Apartments, the first major building to go up in the Southwest redevelopment area.

Contractors answered that no Negro electricians had been furnished them by unions. Union spokesmen said Negroes were not willing to wait for apprenticeship openings.

"That apartment building is almost completed," said David Sawyer, executive director of the Council. "But there will be others and that's what we hope to work on. We'd like to sit down with some of the union representatives and try to work out this impasse."

Roosevelt who is a son of former President Franklin D. Roosevelt, gave Council members a report on his group's work during a closed meeting. Sawyer reported later that he suggested that the Council cooperate with his subcommittee in overcoming discrimination in Washington.

Negroes Asked To Not Push For Job Rights

End Of Job Bias Sought By VP Nixon

By Alice A. Dunnigan for ANP

WASHINGTON — Addressing the Religious Leaders Conference here Monday, Deputy Atty. Gen. Lawrence E. Walsh spoke ... conference of 22 church groups invited to the capital by the Administration, were told by Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh to seek "limited" objectives in fair employment practices at the present.

The Justice Department official urged the conferees to support a bill which would give Congressional recognition to the President's Committee on Government Contracts instead of seeking a fair employment practices committee like the one which operated during World War II.

Walsh urged the delegates to follow up demanding that Congress authorize the Federal Government to bring suit against school districts which continue to discriminate on racial grounds.

Vice President Richard Nixon, who heads the President's Committee, told the religious leaders:

"We need your help. You represent a tremendous amount of power for good. I urge you to go back to your communities and mobilize the moral support of the American people for non-discriminatory policies in employment and for the whole program of civil rights for all Americans, regardless of race, color or national origin."

of the work of he NAACP as one of the "finest political education activities that has been conducted in our time."

The approximately 500 religious leaders who attended the one-day conference upon invitation of Vice President Nixon heard the Deputy Attorney ... explain ... the Administration's position that the Government should not initiate school desegregation cases, but he agreed that individuals or organizations like the NAACP should take the initiative.

Walsh spoke out in favor of the Administration's proposals in the field of education, employment and the right to vote. More liberal measures, he contended, might not have the same chance for passage, although they are well intended bills.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS STUDY JOB DISCRIMINATION

Religious leaders from 34 states came together to give counsel and advice on the abolition of job discrimination in American industry. The conference which was called by the President's Committee on Government Contracts was attended by theologians and officials of national denominational bodies, bishops, rabbis, pastors, elders and lay religious leaders. They represented leaders of Protestant, Catholic, Jewish and Eastern Orthodox communities throughout the United States.

Speakers represented business industry, labor and religion. Among them were Dr. Martin Luther King, A. Philip Randolph, John Roosevelt and former New Jersey Governor Alfred E. Driscoll.

The Rev. King claimed that it is not only immoral, but almost murderous ... to deny any group honest work and fair play. He pointed out that many whites want to end discrimination but need spiritual leadership and guidance. And unless the church provides this leadership it will be recorded in history that "in this tremendous era of change the churches were unwilling to furnish moral leadership."

BE PREPARED FOR OPPORTUNITIES

He also urged leaders of minority groups not to overlook the importance of "urging their people to achieve excellence in their various fields of endeavor. We must be ready and prepared to enter the doors of opportunity as they open."

Randolph pointed out that unemployment is the result of economic malajustment. "But strangely enough," he added, "there is such a thing as racial unemployment."

He impressed upon these leaders the necessity of encouraging Negro youth to acquire, along with white workers, new skills through apprenticeship and in-plant training systems, as well as enter approved schools for technical and scientific training. "In order that they may constitute a vital and necessary segment of the productive machinery in this vast nuclear revolution of today and tomorrow."

The afternoon session was broken up into workshops where discussions were held and recommendations made on what could be done by the Conference participants to implement the work of the President's Committee.

CHURCHES SHOULD BE RELIGIOUS 'VOICE OF AMERICA'

Almost every workshop agreed that a better educational job is needed in the various communities to alert the people of their rights for employment in industries holding government contracts. This might begin from the religious platform. The churches throughout the country might serve as a "Religious 'Voice of America' speaking for equality, justice and fair opportunity for all."

John Roosevelt, who is a member of the committee, had already made it plain that the committee itself is not an enforcing body. Its only jurisdiction is to advise, recommend, and educate. But in spite of its lack of enforcement powers "it has been able to bring about some significant and encouraging changes in the employment patterns of many industries in all parts of the country."

At the close of the meeting, Vice President Nixon, chairman of the committee urged those present to keep him informed on what they are specifically doing in their communities to improve this problem.

NAACP Appeals to Ike's Committee

Charge Four Large Firms With Job Discrimination

WASHINGTON — Four large industrial corporations and a Federally aided educational project are charged with unfair employment practices in complaints filed with the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

In submitting the complaints on behalf of NAACP members, Herbert Hill, the association's labor secretary, urged the committee to revoke the contracts of those employers who are "blatantly violating the anti-discrimination provisions in the contracts they have with the Federal Government."

Concerns named in the complaint filed by Mr. Hill include the Monsanto Chemical Company, Monsanto, Ill.; Glenn L. Martin Company, Patrick Air Force Base, Fla.; Kansas State College of Agriculture-U. S. Department of Agriculture Extension Program, Wichita, Kans.; P. Lorillard Company, Greensboro, N. C., and the Railway Express Agency, Inc., New York City.

Mr. Hill also conferred with Dr. Joseph Houchins, chief enforcement officer of the committee, regarding previously filed NAACP complaints. The committee has not revoked a single contract since it was created by executive order in August, 1953.

AMONG THE COMPLAINTS currently pending with the committee are actions against Boeing Aircraft Company, Wichita, Kans.; Western Electric Company and the Communications Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Greensboro, N. C.; Lion Oil Company and the International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO, El Dorado, Ark., and the Cessna Aircraft Corporation Wichita, Kans.

• Also the National Cash Register Company, Dayton, Ohio; Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, Wichita, Kans.; Bohr Aircraft Corporation, Riverside, Calif.; Carbide and Chemical Company (Division of Union Carbide and Chemical Corporation) and Galveston Metal Trades Department, AFL-CIO, Texas City, Tex.; Frigidaire Sales Corporation (Division of General Motors Corporation), Emeryville, Calif., and U. S. Industrial Chemical Company (Division of National Distillers Company) Ashtabula, Ohio.

There are some 40 others, according to NAACP records.

Bias in Labor's Ranks

That the A. F. L.-C. I. O. is opposed to Negro segregation is beyond any question. By its constitution it is pledged "to encourage all workers without regard to race, creed, color or national origin to share in the full benefits of union organization." It has set up a special department charged with the duty of protecting all the civil rights of its members. But now comes the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People with affidavits and other evidence, submitted to Federation President Meany, to show that practice and principle are far apart in some of the federation's affiliates. Included is a declaration of intention to invoke court action in five specific cases if the federation doesn't act soon—in Illinois, Missouri and Oklahoma.

The N. A. A. C. P. material documents several kinds of anti-Negro discrimination in the federation's ranks—notably in the railroad and construction industries. The constitutions of the railroad enginemen and firemen and the trainmen, both federation affiliates, exclude all nonwhites from membership, as does the independent Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. In these fields, where the union shop prevails, a closed door to union membership is a closed door to a job.

Other affiliates such as the railroad clerks—whose president is a member of the Civil Rights Department—restrict Negro membership to segregated locals. Still others, which have constitutional prohibitions on discrimination, practice it by "tacit consent" and make collective bargaining agreements with employers which limit Negroes to manual jobs, with curtailed seniority and other rights. Cases cited by the N. A. A. C. P. also involve the common laborers, electrical workers, plasterers, plumbers, paper makers and oil and chemical workers.

This is a formidable bill of complaints, but fortunately for the cause of equal rights, it was neither presented nor received in bitterness. After all, organized labor is committed to the same objectives as the N. A. A. C. P. and is in a unique position to help it reach them. It is encouraging that President Meany's answer has pledged the federation to "do everything possible to cooperate."

Cites Harm Done By Job Bias

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell said that discrimination in employment, lack of responsibility by some labor leaders and management, and the failure of our educational institutions to pursue excellence, discipline, and faith were among the signs that we may be failing in "the moral use of our human resources."

The Secretary spoke to the National Conference on the Moral Foundation of Economic Growth, meeting at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington, D. C.

In view of the grave need for proper growth posed by an exploding population, intense social change, and a deadly international challenge, the Secretary maintained that "we must ask ourselves a basic moral question: Growth for what purposes?"

MEANINGLESS

The answer given by the Secretary was that growth was indeed meaningless unless moral restraints and incentive directed such growth to the betterment of individual lives, and provided each man with full opportunity for personal growth. He called such growth "the moral use of human resources."

Secretary Mitchell detailed the kind of moral responsibility he feels must be borne by citizens in every walk of life before economic growth becomes meaningful.

Of discrimination and civil rights he said: "Consider the figure of a Negro or a Jew or another minority group member, standing before closed doors while the nation cries out for his skill and energy and ability, and he cries out to give it. We deny ourselves by denying opportunity to our brothers."

Of labor-management relations Mitchell said: "For his part the employer must realize the moral responsibility he bears toward his employees, and toward the community in which he operates and lives. No man lives in a vacuum. And employees, for their part, should consider well the moral responsibility for a fair day's work for a fair day's pay, an obligation too often honored in the breach."

Montgomery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negro labor leader today asked unions, industry and the government for an effective ban on racial job discrimination in the handling of government contracts.

A. Philip Randolph, president of the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, made his appeal in a speech prepared for an equal job opportunity conference sponsored by the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

General

HUNDREDS INVITED

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, who heads the committee, invited about 500 religious leaders representing 22 major church groups to attend the conference.

Randolph said some Negro workers are denied membership in some unions through a color bar in the organization's constitution or other forms of discrimination.

He added: "But the whole problem of discrimination against Negro workers does not lie at the door of the trade unions. Business is also culpable, and so is the government."

John Roosevelt, New York investment banker and a son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, said in a prepared speech that discrimination in employment is not only morally wrong, but that it may affect the nation's economy and security.

Roosevelt said "we cannot and we must not let prejudice erode our manpower resource. It is too high a price to pay for something that benefits none and hurts everyone."

PHARMACIST GIVES VIEW

Alfred E. Driscoll, president of Warner Lambert Pharmaceutical Co. and former governor of New Jersey, said in his prepared talk that generally private enterprise is making progress toward "first-class citizenship" for all citizens.

In another prepared statement, the Rev. Martin Luther King, the Negro minister who led a bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., said: age and the resoluteness to support the government where it determines to make examples of discrimination in dramatically canceling some large contracts where the 'principle of brotherhood is violated for refusing to operate within the framework of the contract."

Smith, Davis To Push Own Fair Job Bills

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Sen. Fred J. Smith and Rep. Corneal A. Davis, sponsors of companion bills for the creation of a fair employment practices commission for the state, said that they plan to continue their efforts for the passages of their bills despite recent statements by Gov. William G. Stratton that he will give administrative support to two measures to combat race discriminations in employment.

Davis said: "The governor has made promises before. We want actions instead of promises, and therefore we are going ahead with our plans to schedule early hearings on our bills.

"If the governor proves this time he is sincere, his efforts will merely augment, not hurt ours."

Smith commented that: "The governor has given lip service to FEPS legislation ever since his campaign for the office in 1952, but has failed to deliver a single vote. I am still unconvinced of his sincerity," he said.

Approved By House Committee

Measure Would Prohibit Racial Discrimination

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — (UPI) — The House Labor committee unanimously approved a bill Tuesday night, February 10, that would prohibit racial discrimination in employment by the state of Missouri.

The House measure No. 123 introduced by four Negro members, Representatives Leroy Tyus, James P. Troupe and Henry Wheeler, all St. Louis Democrats, and J. McKinley Neal, Kansas City Democrat, prohibits discrimination by the state because of race, color, creed or national origin.

A violation would be punishable by imprisonment in a county jail for not less than 30 days and not more than a year or by a fine of not less than $100 or more than $500, or both.

A large delegation of Negroes and a number of white persons appeared in behalf of the proposed legislation which they termed a "moral issue."

Committee members were told that Negroes with college degrees are working at menial jobs because of discrimination and that passage of the measure would open some doors and provide them with needed positions. They said it would establish Missouri as a "liberal state."

Many of the witnesses were ministers. Representatives of the Missouri Commission on Human Rights, the Missouri Association of Social Welfare, the Missouri Council of Churches and the State Labor Council (AFL-CIO) appeared before the committee. No opponents appeared.

By HELEN SPEED

A group of 10 Kansas Citians motored to Jefferson City Tuesday to attend a hearing on House bill No. 123 which would prohibit discrimination in state employment because of race, creed, color or national origin.

The bill was introduced in the general assembly by Representative J. McKinley Neal of Kansas City and Representatives Leroy Tyus, Henry W. Wheeler and James P. Troupe, all of St. Louis.

Representative Neal, vice-chairman of the House Labor committee, presided during the hearing Tuesday night on House bill 123.

Ministers Speak

Speakers from Kansas City included: the Rev. S. C. Scott, vice-president of the Kansas City NAACP branch who served as chairman of the Kansas City delegation; the Rev. Kenneth Waterman, pastor of the First Presbyterian church; the Rev. Rubin T. Fields, moderator of the New Era Baptist District association; the Rev. H. Williams, president of the Kansas City Baptist Ministers' union; the Rev. C. L. Dixon, moderator of the Midwest Baptist District association and John H. Davis, a member of the executive committee of the Kansas City NAACP.

J. R. Rollins, president of the Missouri State Labor Council, A. F. L.-C.I.O., of St. Louis also spoke.

In his remarks to the Labor committee, the Rev. Mr. Scott said that House bill 123 should be passed by the legislators because economically right." He said that all individuals should be given equal job opportunity in state employment.

The Rev. Mr. Waterman told the committee that he was speaking for the bill because "it is morally wrong to discriminate against a person because of the color of his skin." He pointed out to the group that he is pastor of a Presbyterian church which previously was all-white but which is now integrated.

Fight And Pay Taxes

The Rev. Mr. Fields said that in time of war, Negro citizens fight alongside other Americans. "When it is time to pay taxes, the Negro is required to pay his share. By the same token, if they are qualified for jobs, then they should be given the same opportunities as other citizens."

The minister added, "I can do something about most of the conditions which come before me but there is one thing that I cannot change—the color of my skin. And because of that, I am discriminated against.

The Rev. Mr. Dixon pointed out that passage of House bill No. 123 is long past due.

The Rev. Mr. Williams said that he represented all of the Negro Baptists of Kansas City. He said that 90 per cent of the members of his congregation, Park Avenue Baptist, own their own homes.

Those persons who have regular employment, he said, keep their homes in good repair. Those without regular employment, of necessity, let their property run down. "We are not asking for anything special because we are Negroes," the minister said, "but we are seeking the same opportunities that other American citizens have."

Most of the speakers concluded that if the state would set the example by eliminating discrimination in employment, private businesses would follow.

Other persons from Kansas City who attended the hearing were: Miss Elinor Thompson, Miss Nina Jean Woods, Miss Helen Speed, Mrs. Julia Massey and Titus N. Collins.

The bill now goes to the full House for consideration.

A hearing on House bill No. 273, which would eliminate and prevent discriminatory practices in employment in private industry because of race, creed, color or national origin, has been set for March 18, at 8 p.m., the Rev. Mr. Scott said.

Berry Describes Job Bias In State

SPRINGFIELD—Edwin C. Berry, executive director of the Chicago Urban League, appearing before a House Committee here charged that Negroes in Illinois are suffering greatly from employment discrimination. Berry gave testimony on the Equal Job Opportunities Bill currently under consideration.

"Many industries," he continued, "totally exclude Negroes and others assign them to menial jobs with little opportunity for advancement."

Referring to a statement he made in 1957 about the availability of jobs for qualified Negroes, Berry noted that even when Chicago was experiencing a severe labor shortage, qualified Negroes had difficulty landing jobs.

As an indication of the extent of job discrimination of Illinois, he pointed to a set of surveys by the Bureau on Jewish Employment Problems. The Bureau has estimated from many years of surveys that upwards of 90 per cent of the job orders placed with private employment agencies in Chicago specifically exclude consideration of Negro workers.

Berry said that, "Although some companies have begun to utilize merit employment practices, there still exists a great disparity between a white workers' chances for getting a job and those of his brown brother with the equal or even superior qualifications.

The Urban League is a member of the Illinois Committee for Equal Job Opportunity and is represented on the general committee and subcommittee by Dr. N. O. Calloway and H. B. Law of the League Board of Directors. Ray Lewis of the League's professional staff and Berry are also members.

Dr. Holman Of State NAACP Raps Stratton On Job Law

PEORIA, Ill.—Dr. L. H. Holman, president of the Illinois State Conference of NAACP branches, charged in a speech here superv[illegible] that "if Gov. Stratton had wanted it, we would have FEPC at the present time."

Dr. Holman declared: "The present recession or depression has hit the Negro hard. I have been reading with great interest in recent weeks the usual overtures made by the Governor concerning FEPC. If Gov. Stratton had wanted it, we would have FEPC at the present time. Those of you who were active in 1953 know the bill was defeated 29-13 in the Senate. This is the nearest we have come to passing the bill. This same bill that will probably be introduced in the new legislature was modified several times to meet the approval of the Governor."

The Joliet dentist told the NAACP meeting that only one Republican voted for the bill, Edward J. Saltiel and that "the Republican Senators had a gentleman's agreement to defeat the bill."

Lashing out at segregated schools in Illinois, Dr. Holman pointed out that in East St. Louis during the year 1956-57, 5,260 Negroes were in jim crow schools. He stated: "This figure rose to 7,157 in 1957-58. The NAACP leader called for the integration of Negro school teachers and the elimination of all racial barriers in public and private housing.

Glimco Denies Abata's Charges Of Race Bias

By ADOLPH J. SLAUGHTER

Joseph P. Glimco, the chubby cherubic union boss of Chicago's Checker and Yellow cab drivers, Monday denied categorically the charges of Dominic Abata that racial discrimination was rampant in the administrative policies of teamster affiliate Local 777.

Sitting in his carpeted, paneled office at 1213 S. Blue Island ave., Glimco charged Abata was using horse opera tactics and emotionalism to convince Negro taxi drivers that they are being discriminated against.

NO NEGROES

High point in Glimco's attack against Abata, who is leader of a dissident group of cab drivers seeking to overthrow the Glimco regime as bargaining agent, was that for the entire 14 years that Abata headed the union (from

JOSEPH GLIMCO

1937 to 1951), not a single Negro ever became a member of the union.

He pointed out that when Abata resigned from his union post in November, 1951, the first Negro was hired two months later, and today they are the dominant force in the taxi cab industry.

Assisted by his union counsel, Alfred Kamin, Glimco admitted that at present no Negro holds an executive position in the 5,000-man union. However, he added, with ascent from Kamin, that no Negro has ever been nominated or denied the privilege of being nominated.

Asserting the elections are democratic and run in accordance with the teamster and local union constitutions, Glimco declared that if a Negro wanted to run for office, he would be entitled to and would receive just as much consideration as anybody else.

The factional fight between Glimco and Abata which has now spread to the rank and file took on heated overtones of racialism when Abata and other members of the dissident group charged discrimination.

Glimco scoffed that he didn't know why Abata would insert race into his illegal efforts to gain control of the local when he never allowed a Negro into the union during his 14-year reign.

Glimco, who has been called a czar by his attackers who claim he has powerful underworld connections, said there are seven top positions in the union which have been held by most of the people for almost 20 years.

'RUMP ORGANIZATION'

He produced a letter from John T. O'Brien, international vice president of the Teamsters, which declared Abata's group "a rump organization misusing the name of Local 777."

Abata, currently a non-union, non-taxi-driving store proprietor would be ineligible to hold office, Glimco stated.

The union boss who also touched briefly on taking the Fifth Amendment before McClellan's congressional committee investigating into union racketeering stated his books were open for inspection, but that he would not allow McClellan's "witch hunting" committee to nail him to the cross on a statement he might have made 15 years ago but could not remember exactly what its content is now.

The powerful union leader ended his interview on an optimistic note emphasizing the accomplishments of the union and declared: "The cab drivers will be represented by the teamsters long after this is over."

Jewish Leader Says:

1,484 Chicago Firms Have Racial Bars In Employment

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Chicago is one of the "sore spots cities of job discrimination" in the United States — with some executives who "sweet talk" merit employment at a cost of over one billion dollars.

This was part of the testimony on job discrimination reported on by William Karn, executive director of the Bureau on Jewish Employment Problems.

At least 1484 Chicago firms are known to bar Catholics, Jews, and Protestants from office jobs" reported Karp. About 700 of these are "blue-chip" corporations, many of whom hold, or are eligible for, federal government contracts.

"GENTILE ONLY — No Catholics; "Caucasian Nordic Only"; and "Anything but a Catholic" are some of the specifications for jobs placed by many of these firms," he declared.

Karp spoke as an invited witness Monday in giving testimony at public hearings in the U. S. Courthouse before the Illinois Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission.

Job discrimination is a "manpower killer," Karp told the Committee, which wastes talents and abilities needed by the community and the nation i the atomic-space world of today.

JOB DISCRIMINATION handicaps the United States in world relations, said the witness. It is our Achilles heel. Nothing shakes confidence in American democracy than failure to provide equality of economic opportunity.

The federal gocernment has no choice but to lend its support ina crash - program to "out-law" discriminatory job-practices from the American scene.

The Bureau proposed 8 steps for immediate federal government action: A National Fair Employment Practices Act; Strengthen powers of the President's Committee on Government Contracts; Open apprenticeship training to non-whites; Require federally-supported state employment services to provide placement testing or testing services equally to all job applicants.

Establish specialized counseling and placement services to widen career horizons of minority students; Expand talent search activities among minority groups; Assure availability of federal scholarships to all talented young people irrespective of color, religion or nationality; Form an interdepartmental committee of such federal agencies as Bureau of Census, Bureau of Employment Security, Bureau of Labor Statistics, to make more available to the public, information on economic welfare and opportunity of non-whites and other minority groups.

Anti-Bias Bills Fought By Group

CHICAGO — (UPI) — The Associated Employers of Illinois Friday labeled two bills that would create an Illinois Equality of Employment Commission as "unnecessary and unfair."

"The record in states with similar fair employment practices," AEC Vice President W. W. Thorsness said, "convinces us that this pending legislation will be of little help in eliminating discriminatory hiring practices in Illinois."

Thorsness said he was acting as a spokesman for the employers group after the organization had based its opinion on a study of the records of 15 states where similar fair employment practices legislation has been in effect for as long as 10 years.

Thorsness said that in 10 years only 6,000 complaints were registered in all 15 states at an approximate cost of $9,000,000.

Minister Charges Plant Hiring Bias

MUNCIE, Ind. — (ANP) — The Rev. Anthony J. Oliver, local AME minister, is awaiting the results of an investigation by agents of the President's Committee on Government contracts into the unfair hiring practices of the Borg-Warner corporation's local plant.

In a letter from the office of President Eisenhower, signed by Gerald D. Morgan, deputy assistant to the President, in response to one sent the President by Rev. Anthony J. Oliver, pastor for the past two years of Shaffer Chapel AME church, the investigation into why Negro applicants for production work in the factory are not given employment was to be made last month.

Rev. Oliver began his crusade for Negro employment at Borg-Warner over a year ago. The reply to his appeal to Local 287 of CIO was that their contract with the firm gave preference to sons of former and present employees and that the union and company were bound by this agreement.

VITAL DEFENSE PLANT

He was also told that when this supply was exhausted, Negroes would be considered. The company informed the minister that although they had a contract for government work it was a small one, not requiring a large labor force. Approximately 2,000 are employed by the firm which makes vital defense items.

In July, 1958, Rev. Oliver wrote [illegible] President Nixon, who directed the activities of the President's Committee, and when the company policy was not changed, he wrote again in March, 1959. His inquiries were then referred directly to the President's office who stated that they would "diligently and expeditiously process this matter."

Appeals were made to congressional leaders and Rev. Oliver reports that Sens. Wayne Morris of Oregon and Paul Douglas of Illinois have given the matter serious attention.

UNION MEMBER FILES CHARGES

Job Discrimination Cited in Suit

(By Louisiana-Pictorial News Bureau)

BATON ROUGE, La.—A rebel unionist who charged his business agent became he couldn't get a job, reported Saturday he has filed charges against his local for "job discrimination."

Howard J. Roubique said charges were filed Jan. 16 with the New Orleans office of the national labor relations board. He also charged a picketing ruse with refusing him a job because he lacked a union referral slip.

The local was No. 138, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America (AFL-CIO), from which Roubique was recently suspended after he sought for an election of new officers.

NEGLIGENCE CHARGE

He charged present officers with negligence in allowing shortages in union funds to occur, which shortages resulted in firing of a former president and business agent L. A. Sumrall, later indicted for graft.

Roubique alleged acting business agent Murphy Gregoire last August, when he was refused a referral slip for a painting job at the Capitol House hotel.

Roubique was later found guilty in district court here of a charge of simple battery made by Gregoire, after the judge said he may have been provoked but "that did not justify violence."

The painting firm named in Roubique's charges is Bailey-Lewis-William of Texas, Inc., which had charge of the Capitol House painting job and reportedly offered Roubique a job if he could get a referral slip.

Roubique charged both the union and the employer with violation of the Taft-Hartley act, which he said, outlaws the system of referral slips and "discrimination" in doling out union cards.

SUIT FILED

Meanwhile, Sumrall Friday filed a court suit to recover $4900, which he said he paid union officials after a promise no effort would be made to prosecute him on the fund shortages charge.

In his suit, Sumrall contended that G. K. Fritz, union organizer from Jackson, Miss., told him he would not be prosecuted, nor would the fund shortage be made public, if Sumrall would pay back the money.

He did pay, he said, despite the fact he was innocent of any theft of union funds. He would not have paid the money, he said, had he been threatened with prosecution.

Named as defendants in the suit, in addition to Fritz, were Leo F. Innerarity and J. Windon White, both officers of the union local. Fritz reportedly has been in Baton Rouge since Thursday and will remain for a union meeting scheduled Tuesday night.

Bias Drives Out Skilled Workers

Negro Professionals Seen Badly Needed In U. S. Economy

Special to Journal and Guide

NEW ORLEANS — "A scheme of things which leaves a society no alternative but to drive out people whom it will need badly in another generation is suicidal," James P. Mitchell, U. S. secretary of labor, declared in a speech delivered for him here Saturday night.

"A great overlooked fact in the United States today," the secretary said, "is that we are in the act of throwing away a vast reserve of human talent that might well be the critical factor in determining our future economic welfare."

Mr. Mitchell's speech was presented for him by George Ledge, assistant secretary of labor, while the secretary was detained in Washington by talks on the steel strike at the White House. It was delivered at the dinner session of the annual executive committee of the Anti-Defamation league of B'nai Birth a Jewish service organization.

The labor secretary quoted an editorial from the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer which read:

"....The bulk of the Negro engineers and the Negro accountants must leave the South if they are to work. The engineer may have been educated largely at public expense. He may represent the very kind of person that the Southern economy most needs. Still he must go; there is little alternative in the scheme of things..."

"DISCRIMINATION itself is a failure to see the sameness between lives, the oneness that exists," Mr Mitchell said. "The word means to distinguish; it is ironic that modern usage has added the connotation: to disgrace and insult.

"Yet the fact that most racial discrimination is based upon differences that have been exploded as myth by every competent anthropologist means little in solving the practical problems that people of different origin have in living together.

"I THINK WE all know what the solution is. Too often we only perpetuate the problem by changing its context. That a Negro child who is considered by nature, inferior to a white child will be so considered despite the location of his desk, and what needs changing is not the location of the desk but the dislocation of the mind that [illegible] sideration."

Chemical Company Rejects Girl, Honor Science Grad

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A charge of discrimination by the Monsanto Chemical Co. was filed this week with the Columbia Commission by the NAACP in behalf of a 17-year-old East St. Louis, Ill., high school honor graduate.

Miss Brenda Nevills, a graduate of recently integrated East St. Louis high school, was told by a Monsanto executive that, "we do not hire Negroes for work in our chemical laboratories," during the course of a recent interview.

The young woman had been invited by Monsanto, as were all other high school seniors who had taken a year of chemistry. The invitational letter stated that there were, "several trainee positions open in the plant for high school graduates who have taken chemistry," Miss Nevills said.

"The letter asked that I call for an interview," she continued. "I was not employed by Monsanto although I believe I am fully qualified for the position of trainee," she concluded.

Court Rejects Plea In Negro Wage Case

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.
P. 1, 1-6-5

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

The Supreme Court yesterday refused to hear the appeal of 47 Negro railroad workers who said the Government owed them back wages denied them because of their race.

The Negroes worked on the Missouri Pacific Railroad during the period 1933 to 1956 when it was operated by trustees appointed by a Federal court. They said they were paid as porters, but did the work of higher-paid brakemen, whose union does not admit Negroes.

The suit contended the Government should pay the wage difference because the railroad was under Federal control. The Court's refusal to review left in effect a Court of Claims decision that the Government was not responsible because ownership of the railroad remained in private hands.

Other Court Actions

In other actions, the Court:

• Refused to hear the argument of two Philadelphia night clubs that a State law forbidding entertainers in a place selling liquor violated their freedom of speech.

• Refused to hear the appeal of a convicted double murderer in Pennsylvania that he was denied due process of law because the trial court wouldn't let him fire his court-appointed lawyers in midtrial. The case was carried to the Supreme Court by the attorneys he tried to fire.

• Let stand without review a Federal Trade Commission order that Carter's drop the word "liver" from the trade name and advertising of its "little pills" because they do not benefit the liver. The case began in 1943.

• Agreed to decide a question important to beer drinkers—whether it violates antitrust laws against price discrimination for a national beer distributor to cut prices in one locality below his national level to meet competition from local beer. Lower Federal courts called it legal.

To Decide Gas Case

• Agreed to decide a question of importance to the natural gas industry — whether, for rate purposes, when a producer signs a new contract with an old pipeline customer, he should file with the Federal Power Commission for a rate change or as a new producer for a new certificate to operate. The latter is considered easier to prove.

• Agreed to decide whether, in a suit to enforce an arbitration clause in a labor contract, a court may decide the merits of the case or merely whether the issue is arbitrable.

• Refused to hear appeals in four patent cases that said lower courts were setting too rigid standards for patentable inventions and asked the Court to define the term.

In its only written opinion, the Court unanimously ruled that a locomtive shifting more than 20 freight cars about 2 miles across another railroad's track and five grade crossings was a "train moving in interstate traffic" within the meaning of the Federal Safety Appliance Act and that the cars must be equipped with power brakes.

Appeal Of Old Rail Road Men Denied

Kansas City, Mo.
Fri. 1-13-59
P. 1, 1-6-5

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — The Supreme Court Monday rejected the appeal of 47 Negro railroad workers who sued the federal government for wages they claim were denied them because of their race.

The brief order left standing a court of claims decision which ruled that the men could not collect from the government.

The railroad workers were engaged by the Missouri-Pacific railroad between 1933 and 1956 when the line was run by trustees appointed by the U. S. district court for the eastern district of Maryland. The court took over while the railroad underwent reorganization of its capital structure.

The men claimed they worked as brakemen in addition to duties as porters but received less pay than white men working as brakemen.

They acknowledged this practice of different pay for Negroes and whites began prior to 1933 when the Missouri-Pacific was under private ownership but said it continued when the railroad was taken over by the government.

The court of claims, in rejecting the suit, said the government did not own the railroad nor employ the workers and therefore was not liable.

The court acted in a brief order without a written opinion. The dismissal of the suit left standing an opinion of the U. S. court of claims absolving the government of all liability in the case.

The high court's ruling featured an unusually light "decision Monday" following its action Saturday upholding the back-to-work order against the 500,000 steel strikers. The steelworkers' case interrupted a two-week recess by the justices.

NATIONAL RELATIONS LABOR BOARD

N.L.R.B. Aide Finds Racial Bias Used as an Anti-Union Weapon

Wed. 5-20-59

WASHINGTON, May 19 A trial examiner of the National Labor Relations Board found today that an employer had used race discrimination to discourage union membership.

Bruce Hunt made the finding in a report to the board in a case brought by a local of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters in Harvey, La., against Intracoastal Terminal, Inc.

The practice had been to give to white employes a paid vacation of two weeks a year and to five Negro employes one week. In 1957 the employer announced that the vacation policy would be two weeks, regardless of race, beginning in 1958. That announcement was made on the same day that the N. L. R. B. ordered an election to determine whether the employes wanted to choose a bargaining representative.

The Teamster Union was chosen by the employes and it was certified by the board in October, 1957. In the following summer the company returned to its old vacation policy in practice, although it made no formal announcement. Bargaining on the issue was fruitless.

The examiner concluded that the employer repudiated its vacation policy "because of the presence of the union, not because of the race of any employes."

"It follows," he added, "that the Negro employes had no cause to believe in 1958 that their race was again the reason or discrimination in vacations, but had cause to believe that the union's presence was the reason. That being so, I cannot escape the conclusion that the respondent's repudiation of the new policy had a natural tendency to discourage Negro employes from joining the union."

The examiner recommended that the company be directed to cease discouraging membership by withholding paid vacations under its announced vacation policy and that the Negro employes be compensated for the company's failure to give them the announced second week of vacation.

Former Anti-Bias Leader In N. J. Receives Tribute

NEWARK, N. J. — More than 700 persons recently paid tribute to Dr. Harold A. Lett, former assistant director of the New Jersey state education department's division against discrimination.

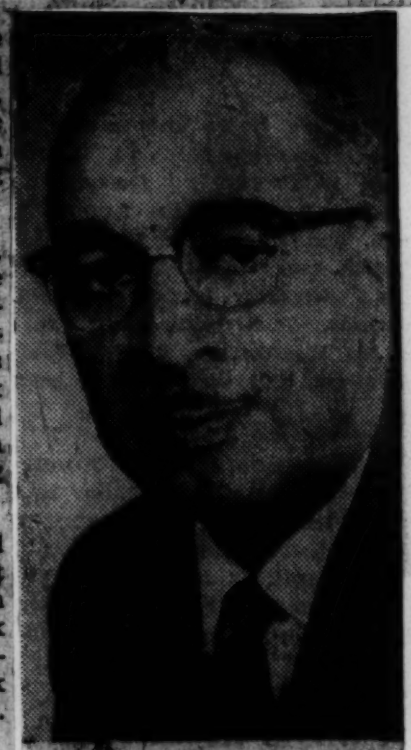
The testimonial for Dr. Lett, now assistant director of the commission on labor - management organizations of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, was held at Essex House hotel. Dr. Lett retired from the anti - discrimination unit in June after serving from its beginning in 1945.

SEVEN SPEAKERS lauded the human relations expert at the dinner. Dr. Robert Van Houten, president of Newark College of Engineering, presented Dr. Lett with a check and a scrapbook covering Dr. Lett's career.

The speakers were:

Julius Thomas, National Urban League industrial relations secretary; Dr. Frederick B. Routh, president elect of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officers; George S. Pfaus, New Jersey assistant commissioner of labor and industry; Theron A. Johnson, intercultural relations director of the University of the State of New York; also the Rev. Louis H. Berry, rector of St. Philip"s Episcopal church here; Mrs. Leonard D. Savoy, member of the Essex County Urban Leabue board and Dr. Ira DeG. Reid, sociology department chairman at Haverford (Pa.) college, who presided.

OTHER PARTICIPANTS were Mrs. Abraham Melik, dinner chairman; and Daniel S. Anthony, chairman of the Newark Commission on Intergroup Relations.



DR. HAROLD A. LETT
Is Honored

Dr. Lett was born in Michigan 63 years ago. He served with the Michigan labor department and the Pittsburgh Urban League before becoming secretary of the Essex County Urban league in 1934.

He has been a member of the Newark housing authority, serving as secretary and vice chairman, and a member of the Newark Citizens Committee on Municipal Government.

His wife is the former Miss Alene Simkins, leasing and occupancy supervisor for the Newark housing authority. She is slated to become manager of the new Spruce street project here.

Continued union discrimination noted by NAACP

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. — Many international unions are continuing biased practices against Negroes in spite of NAACP protests, an Association officer said here this week.

Herbert Hill, NAACP labor secretary added that, "if racial segregation and discrimination is immoral and wrong in public schools, churches and other institutions . . . then it is immoral and wrong within the American labor movement.

"This is especially true in those sectors of the economy where union membership is a condition of employment and where union racial practices determines the status of Negro workers," he said.

Hill was addressing the United Rubber Workers of America Educational Institute at Rutgers university.

He told the institute that many unions in the AFL-CIO" engage in discriminatory racist pratices in the North as well as in the South. These do serious harm to the economic well-being of colored workers and the entire Negro community.

HIRING BIAS FOUND IN LIFE INSURANCE

Report on B'nai B'rith Study Charges Few Jews Are Home Office Executives

By IRVING SPIEGEL

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith criticized yesterday what it termed "a clear pattern of discrimination against Jews" by life insurance companies in restricting the employment of Jews in executive posts in the home offices.

The league reported "some perceptible decrease" in bias against Jews, but said this improvement was reflected primarily in their employment in the sales branches of the insurance companies.

The report, based on a study of seven major life insurance companies, which were not identified, was presented at the opening session of the league's annual meeting at the Savoy Hilton Hotel. It was made by Judge David A. Rose of Boston, chairman of its civil rights committee. The league is devoted to combating bigotry and discrimination and to furthering human rights.

"In the branch offices, primarily concerned with selling insurance, 6.2 per cent of all executive employes are Jewish, but in home offices, only 3.6 per cent are Jewish," the report said.

The report termed it significant that "even among the 3.6 per cent" two-thirds were "clustered in jobs as actuaries, doctors, lawyers or accountants and hence could not be considered as administrative, front-office, or policy-making employes."

The branch offices of the insurance companies, the report noted, "were most apt to hire Jews where sales are to be made in cities with large Jewish populations." It added that five of the seven companies had home offices and sales branches in New York.

"In the New York sales branches of these five companies 10 per cent of executive personnel are Jews; in the home offices, only 4.1 per cent," Judge Rose reported.

Arnold Forster, general counsel and civil rights director of the league, who supervised the survey, said it covered 6,066 executives earning more than $10,000 a year. He observed that the companies represented more than half of the industry's $10,500,000,000 sales in 1958.

Mr Forster said that the companies studied "represented a cross-section in the sense that three were among the largest in the country, two were medium-sized and two were comparatively small."

SEEK TO "END MISSISSIPPI-STYLE HIRING"

Buffalo Women Unite to War On Jim-Crow Hiring Policies

BUFFALO — A new chapter opened in the fight against discrimination in this city as the Mothers Alliance picketed the downtown department store of the W. T. Grant Company.

Large signs carried by women, Negro and white, blasted Grant's for its bias: "End Mississippi-style Hiring"; "Grant's Likes the Color of Our Money but not the Color of Our Skin"; "Mothers Alliance Says: Discrimination Divides the Workers and Keeps Wages Low."

The demonstrations attracted the attention of thousands. Through the evening shoppers read the slogans, paused to watch the picket line and discussed about the store among themselves; "We're with you," Others remarked that they would not buy in the store until the discriminatory hiring practices were stopped.

The demonstrators distributed a leaflet which stated there are almost no Negro workers among Grant's employees and those few have been assigned to menial jobs. The leaflet demanded an integrated sales force and stated that "Negro girls have been consistently and coldly refused permission to fill out applications, while white girls applying at the same time were given them."

The Mothers Alliance picketed Grant's again in one week. This time it was in the heavily Negro populated Jefferson area. Another 1,000 leaflets were distributed. Response here was even more favorable than in the downtown area. One shopper said to an MA picket, "Good for you. We ought to break down rotten Jim Crow if we have to call out the whole city to do it."

The Mothers Alliance has compiled a file of cases of job applications where there is proof of discrimination and has completed a survey of Grant stores here which corroborates the complaints of the applicants. A detailed statement of charges was delivered to the office of Mr. Manca, store manager. Manca refused to see the delegation from the Mothers Alliance.

Mrs. Vera Spurill, president of the organization, reports that in a phone conversation with Manca before the picketing he expressed no intention of correcting the situation.

At the last regular meeting of the Mothers Alliance future plans were discussed and ways and means to broaden the campaign to integrate Buffalo's department stores were considered.

The organization is encouraging the public to spread the facts about discrimination at Grant's, asking Negro and other minority peoples to apply for jobs at the store, asking union support and urging people to buy where there is equal opportunity for all. And the campaign is getting results. Business is not as usual at Grant's.

FIGHT HIRING POLICY

JOB BIAS IS CHARGED TO STATE LABOR AIDE

An employment interviewer for the State Department of Labor was accused at a department hearing yesterday of misconduct in unlawfully engaging in discriminatory practices.

The interviewer was Mrs. Mildred Fanelli. Her accuser was Mrs. Catherine Goldman, who succeeded her in the high school employment division when Mrs. Fanelli began an eleven-month sick leave in February, 1958.

Mrs. Goldman testified that Mrs. Fanelli gave her two days of instruction in the routine of the position just before she left. The witness said that Mrs. Fanelli made dots on application cards that were to be sent to employers and explained that the marks were indications that the persons interviewed were non-whites.

Indications of race, creed or color on an application card are forbidden by department regulations. The charges against Mrs. Fanelli were brought soon after the State Commission Against Discrimination had alleged that discrimination was loosely interpreted or condoned in all echelons of the division.

Mrs. Fanelli acknowledged putting dots on the majority of fifty-four application cards offered as exhibits, but she was not asked what they meant. She had previously denied that the dots indicated non-whites.

The hearing continues this morning at 9:30 A. M. in the department offices at 80 Center Street. The examiner is Frank D. Murin, Deputy Industrial Commissioner.

STATE BIAS AIDE NAMED

Employment Officer to Work With Discrimination Unit

Mrs. Lila E. Dear of the State Labor Department's Division of Employment has been appointed liaison officer between the division and the State Commission Against Discrimination yesterday.

Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood had promised to name a liaison officer several weeks ago after an investigation disclosed some acceptance of discriminatory practices by division employes.

Part of the new liaison officer's functions, Mr. Catherwood said yesterday, will be to forward immediately to the State

...mission reports of discriminatory employment requests by employers based on religion, race, or national origin.

Mrs. Doar, an employe of the division since 1937, will receive $7,...4 a year.

Can't Get Hostess Job On Airline, Says Negro

Post + Times Herald

A 22-year-old New York night school student told the New York State Commission against Discrimination yesterday that she was unable to get a job as flight hostess with Capital Airlines in 1956 because she is a Negro.

The complaint was promptly denied by a Capital attorney, Macon M. Arthur, who told the Commission in New York that the airline had no policy against hiring Negroes on any flight positions.

Patricia Banks, of the Queens, said the airline had been "evasive" in telling her what her status was after she completed a course at a New York school for a career as a flight hostess and was interviewed for a job with Capital.

Miss Banks said the airline never "actually told me they wouldn't hire me," the Associated Press reported.

A Capital spokesman in Washington said that Miss Banks and 11 other applicants had been placed on a waiting list in 1956 after they had been graduated in a class of 30 from the New York training school. He added that 15 girls had been turned down at once, while 23 others were brought to Washington for interviews which led to hostesses' jobs for 20 of them.

Capital said that when a later check was made upon the availability of Miss Banks the airline was told that she had taken a job with another airline.

The Associated Press quoted Miss Banks as saying she had been told Capital would not hire her because she "had no public work experience and I had a tooth that needed to be fixed." She told the Commisison she had the tooth fixed but still was not hired.

New York State Discrimination Probe Launched

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The State Education Department and the State Commission against Discrimination (SCAD) are investigating complaints of discrimination by private dormitories for college students in New York State.

The Association of Colleges and Universities of New York also is participating in the study, which was touched off by complaints of two Negroes that they were unable to find quarters in private homes near the state teachers college at New Paltz.

The investigation will cover private and state-operated colleges. Education Commissioner James E. Allen Jr. said today the agencies conducting it would draft a program of corrective action if any discriminations were found.

A complaint was filed with SCAD after the New Paltz incidents. A faculty member and a visiting lecturer, both Negroes, said they had been refused private housing.

Continued Bias in Pier Hirings Is Charged by 2 Negro Leaders

By JACQUES NEVARD

Two Negro leaders charged yesterday that the "timidity of government agencies and collusion between the union and employers" had helped to perpetuate discrimination in waterfront hiring practices.

The State Commission Against Discrimination was sharply criticized for its alleged failure to take action despite "many complaints" that had been referred to it.

Also assailed were the Waterfront Commission, the President's Committee on Government Contracts, the Brooklyn Army Terminal, the International Longshoremen's Association and the New York Shipping Association.

The leaders were Edward S. Lewis, executive secretary of the Urban League of Greater New York, and Herbert Hill, labor secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

They said the main factor in discrimination against Negroes and Puerto Ricans on the waterfront was the "continuation indoors" of the old "shape" method of hiring.

Under the shape system—which was outlawed in 1953 when the Waterfront Commission was established—men who sought dock work had to circle the pier boss, who had the right to select or reject them. The process is incorrectly called a "shape-up."

The charge was made yesterday that the formation of Waterfront Commision centers to hire dockers had only taken the old "vicious, degrading and irrational hiring system" off the street adn put it inside state-leased buildings.

The officials spoke at a press interview in the headquarters of the Urban League, 204 West 136th Street. A seventeen-page report was made public at the same time. The report was entitled "An Indictment: Of the "shape-up" hiring system in the Port of New York which fosters racial and individual discrimination."

The study, which was made by the league's waterfront committee, described the shape as the "instrument of racial and individual discrimination, not only for the Negro and Puerto Rican workers, but for white longshoremen who are not favorites."

Of the 25,000 longshoremen who were registered to work in the Port on June 30, about 6,000 are Negro or Puerto Rican, the leagu's study noted. Most of the workers are given undesirable or dangerous jobs when they get work at all, the report declared.

Although Mr. Lewis and Mr. Hill criticized government agencies for their failure to act on complaints, they declared that a big part of the problem was the reluctantce of Negro longshoremen to testify on discrimination.

This reluctance was based, Mr. Hill said, on the fear of economic or physical reprisal "under the tradition of violence on the New York City docks."

Although the report recommended a hiring system in which regular jobs would be filled by seniority and casual jobs from a rotary hiring roster, Mr. Hill and Mr. Lewis made it plain that they favored the rotary hiring system.

STATE JOB AGENCY TO GET BIAS STUDY

Asks an Investigation Itself After Union Accuses It of Anti-Negro Policy

The state Labor Department's Division of Employment announced yesterday that it would investigation of its referral practices and personnel policies after new charges of discrimination were made by a labor union.

Stephen Mayo, acting executive director of the division, said that he had made the request for the investigation to the state's Advisory Council on Employment and Unemployment Insurance and to the State Commission Against Discrimination. The nine-member council is empowered to supervise the division.

The investigation was announced shortly after the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employes had charged high-ranking members of the division with failure to correct known discriminatory practices.

Alfred Wurf, assistant regional director of the union, made the charges in a report to Governor Rockefeller.

The union's report referred to incidents involving high school girls seeking jobs. The report mentioned an interviewer who had been assigned to two city high schools under a program sponsored by the division and the Board of Education.

In February, 1958, the union said, the interviewer, Mrs. Mildred Fanelli, upon leaving the division on sick leave, instructed her successor, Mrs. Kathy Goldman, not to refer any Negro students for jobs.

The report charged that Mrs. Goldman had been told by Mrs. Fanelli that application cards with heavy ink dots indicated that the students were Negro, and were not to be referred. The report said that Mrs. Goldman had reported the matter to her supervisors and that an investigation had disclosed that many of the students interviewed by Mrs. Fanelli had had their cards marked with dots.

"The record shows that there has been no effort of high-ranking Division of Employment staff to correct discriminatory practices within its jurisdiction," Mr. Wurf said. He also said that Mrs. Goldman, as a result of reporting the violations, "had been subjected to humiliating and insulting interrogation."

In announcing its request for an investigation, the Division of Employment said it would turn over its finding on the Goldman-Fanelli case.

The division also said that the findings in an investigation of charges that some interviewers referred only white or Negro persons according to an employer's wish would also be turned over.

Job Bias Probe By State Urged

By ALEX BENSON,
World-Telegram

A Bronx Assemblyman has demanded a state-wide probe of charges that "gentlemen's agreements" between business firms and the state Labor Department's employment division has led to racial discrimination against job applicants.

The charges were revealed by this newspaper Tuesday.

Assemblyman Ivan Warner, a Democrat, said yesterday that such agreements would be "the most despicable and diabolic conspiracy that could be perpetrated" with a state agency "acting in the role of a co-conspirator."

Wire to Governor.

He asked for the investigation in telegrams yesterday to Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz and State Industrial Commissioner Martin Catherwood.

He said the charges point up the need for passage of his bill, now in committee, which would permit the State Commission Against Discrimination to initiate complaints, instead of waiting until they are filed before taking action. The bill is given little chance of passage.

Two probes of the bias charges will begin tomorrow the World-Telegram was told today.

Stephen Mayo, acting director of the employment division, has asked SCAD and the New York State Advisory Council on Employment and Unemployment Insurance to examine the employment division's own personnel practices as well as the reported "gentlemen's agreements."

Records to Agencies.

Mr. Mayo also said he would turn over division records to the two agencies in the case of an interviewer who allegedly discriminated against Negro high school children seeking temporary jobs.

In a letter to Gov. Rockefeller, Alfred Wurf, a union leader, charged that the employment division failed to take action against the interviewer.

Mr. Wurf today urged Gov. Rockefeller to appoint an independent investigating body to probe the division, arguing that SCAD and the Advisory Council were "state agencies investigating another state agency."

Other calls for investigation of the employment division come from the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the New York State Careerists Society, Inc., an organization of civil service workers, and the Jewish Labor Committee.

ROCKEFELLER BARS 'ANY BIAS IN HIRING

Orders an Inquiry on State Employment Unit's Policy for Negro Applicants

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, March 27—Governor Rockefeller declared today that if there were any discriminatory practices within the State Employment Service they would be [illegible] immediately." Mr. Rockefeller was reacting to press reports that the service had taken care not to send Negro applicants to employers who had said they would not hire them.

The Governor [illegible] Martin P. Catherwood, Industrial Commissioner, the State Commission Against Discrimination for "prompt action to obtain the facts."

Mr. Rockefeller asked the commission to "determine whether there is any bias, intentional or unintentional" in the Employment Service's procedures, and to report its findings to him.

There is, he said, there should be a full disclosure of the facts. He said this would help to put a stop to such practices and that it would serve to clear employes of the service who had been discharging their duties faithfully within the terms of the state's civil rights law.

"It is of the utmost importance that our State Employment Service be conducted with absolute fairness, and in the spirit as well as the letter of our fair employment practices legislation," Mr. Rockefeller said.

The reports that brought the statement from the Governor said that there was a "gentlemen's agreement" with some employers that the service would not send Negro job applicants to them.

State laws forbid discrimination in employment on the basis of age, race or religion.

New Job Bias Charge Hits State Board

Interviewer Got Coverup, Union Aid Tells Rockefeller

By ALEX BENSON.
World-Telegram Staff Writer

A new charge of racial discrimination was hurled at the State Labor Department's division of employment today.

A labor leader ass[illegible] in a letter to Gov. N[illegible] A. Rockefeller that th[illegible] vision covered [illegible]

Four to [illegible] division "discouraged" employees from reporting bias cases to the State Commission Against Investigation.

The allegations came from Alfred Wurf, assistant regional director of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO. Speaking on behalf of his union, Mr. Wurf demanded an investigation by the Governor.

A spokesman for the employment division declined comment on the union letter until he could obtain a copy of it. "I expect we will have something to say about it when we've seen it," she added.

The union's action came after the World-Telegram yesterday reported the existence of "gentlemen's agreements" between some business firms and the division under which the division referred only whites or only Negroes for certain positions.

A division spokesman said a thorough investigation of the complaints, originally reported to this newspaper by division employees, would be made. The State Commission Against Discrimination also promptly announced it would conduct a probe.

According to Mr. Wurf, the employment interviewer who discriminated against high school girls was assigned to two city high schools under the joint placement program sponsored by the state employment division and the Board of Education.

Early last year, Mr. Wurf said, the interviewer went on sick leave, instructing her replacement not to refer any Negro youngsters for Easter jobs. The replacement was told by the interviewer that "heavy ink dots" on the application cards indicated the applicant was a Negro, Mr. Wurf said.

The new interviewer reported the incident to superiors, who ordered an investigation. The investigation disclosed, Mr. Wurf said, that the dots on the cards did indeed correspond to Negro applicants.

The investigation also showed that at least 13 placements recorded by the old interviewer were fraudulent, Mr. Wurf continued. As of last month, he wrote, the interviewer had been reprimanded for the fraudulent placements but no bias charges had been placed against her.

"The record shows," Mr. Wurf said, "that there has been no effort on the part of high-ranking members of the division of employment staff to correct discriminatory practices within its jurisdiction."

"The person who did her duty by reporting the above case of discrimination to her supervisor has been subjected to humiliating and insulting interrogation."

The interviewer who committed the alleged discrimination was put on another division job when her sick leave ended, said Mr. Wurf.

A second state agency announced an investigation of the Employment Division this morning.

George J. Mintzer, chairman of the New York State Advisory Council on Unemployment and Unemployment Insurance, a 9-man group appointed by the Governor, said the council intended to "get to the bottom of this."

"If people in hte division are cutting corners to make placements, we're going to eliminate it."

STATE LABOR CHIEF HITS BIAS 'LAXITY'

Catherwood Tells Job Aides to Avoid Discrimination After S.C.A.D. Report

By MILDRED MURPHY

State Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood denounced yesterday the "laxity" of personnel in the Labor Department's employment division in complying with the state law prohibiting discrimination.

He issued a statement ordering that all division personnel be warned that discrimination in any form would subject them to departmental charges and penalties.

He also ordered charges to be brought immediately against a placement interviewer who had marked dots on the cards of job applicants to distinguish between whites and nonwhites.

The commissioner's statement followed a report on Thursday by the State Commission Against Discrimination, which alleged that discrimination was loosely interpreted or condoned in all echelons of the division.

The report noted that placement interviewers had admitted a fear of being labeled as "trouble-makers" if they attempted to comply with the agency's official nondiscrimination policy. A state law prohibits discrimination because of race, color, religion or age.

"There is absolutely no excuse for any discrimination in any branch of the Labor Department," Mr. Catherwood said.

Liaison Officer Named

On the recommendation of the commission, Mr. Catherwood said he would soon appoint a liaison officer to work with the commission, particularly on job orders from employers seeking to avoid hiring Negroes or other race or religious groups.

He also appointed Deputy Commissioner George H. Fowler to work solely on discrimination matters and safeguards against them. Mr. Fowler will report to Mr. Catherwood.

Mr. Catherwood said he had asked the Division of Employment, in cooperation with the Advisory Council on Employment and Unemployment, to submit to him by June 1 a report on present procedures to guard against discrimination.

He also said he had ordered reports of bias-tainted employment requests to be sent to the S. C. A. D. He acknowledged that in the last two years the reports had been kept in the division.

Mr. Catherwood said the employe who had used dots on applicants' cards, Mrs. Mildred Fanelli, had been removed from job-referral work. Mrs. Fanelli, he said, had previously been reprimanded for making false claims on the number of job placements she handled.

Negro Girl Says Airline Refused Her

NEW YORK (AP) — A tall 22-year-old Queens College night school student said Tuesday Capital Airlines refused to hire her as a flight hostess because she was a Negro and used excuses such as her having a bad tooth.

Miss Patricia Banks, of Jamaica, Queens, told the State Commission Against Discrimination that the airlines never "actually told me they wouldn't hire me."

Testifying before the three-member commission on the advice of U. S. Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-NY), she said the airline was "evasive" in telling her definitely she would not be hired.

Miss Banks said she took a course at Grace Downs Air Career School in New York and it cost her more than $200 to prepare herself for a career as a flying hostess.

Miss Banks said she completed the course and applied for a hostess position with Capital Airlines in 1956. She testified that other girls in the class soon after were notified either that they had been accepted, rejected or were under further consideration.

She said neither the airline nor school officials told her one way or the other what her status was.

Macon M. Arthur, airlines counsel, denied charges by Miss Banks that the airline has a policy of not hiring Negroes on any flight positions. He also said the commission had no jurisdiction in the case because the airline hires its personnel in Washington and that Miss Banks waited well beyond the 90 - day limit to file a complaint on the advice of Powell.

Miss Banks contended that of the 1,350 persons employed by Capital in flight operation, none was a Negro.

"I was told that Capital would not hire me because I had no public work experience and I had a tooth that needed to be fixed," Miss Banks said, adding

"I had the tooth fixed and I certainly had experience with the public, but I still was not hired."

Arthur contended that her statements about the tooth and public experience were "hearsay and not made by any one in an official capacity of Capital Airlines."

Job Agency Group Says State's Data Show Little Bias

The president of an association of employment agencies has defended the agencies' record on the basis of a report issued recently by the State Commission Against Discrimination.

Chris A. Tobison, head of the 122-member Commercial Placement Council, said that while the number of employment complaints reported to the state agency had risen 66 per cent over last year, most of the complaints were against employers, not employment agencies.

Mr. Tobison said the report showed 212 employment complaints in the first three months of 1959. Employers were accused in 168 cases, labor unions in twenty-two and employment agencies in twenty-two.

Of the twenty-two cases against agencies, Mr. Tobison said, "nineteen were against nearly as many employment agencies in New York City.

"When you consider that there are 1,100 agencies in the city, and that they handle about half a million persons in three months," he added, "nineteen complaints seems infinitesimal."

The report also showed that the state agency disposed of 143 complaints in the first three months of 1959. Seventy-four cases were dismissed, thirty-five were filed under "no probable cause found" but other practices found and adjusted, and twenty-four listed as "specific complaint sustained." Ten others were dithdrawn or dismissed because of lack of jurisdiction.

Of the twenty-four justified complaints, twenty-one involved employers and three employment agencies, the report showed.

Mr. Tobison, who is also president of the Tobison Employment Service, 507 Fifth Avenue, said that the employment agencies "have worked very closely with S. C. A. D. since its inception and will continue to do so."

JOB AGENCY BIAS REPORTED RISING

State Agency and Study by B'nai B'rith Cite Instances of Discriminatory Hiring

COMPLAINTS INCREASING

All Kinds in New York in First Quarter Totaled 242, Against 169 a Year Ago

Two separate reports pointed yesterday to the growing number of complaints of discriminatory practices by employment agencies.

A report by the New York State Commission Against Discrimination for the first quarter of 1959 showed twenty-two complaints against employment agencies, compared with six in the first quarter of 1958.

A special report by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said private employment agencies in several sections of the country had become "the cat's-paw of job bias" and had thrown a "protective curtain" around discriminatory employers.

Elmer A. Carter, chairman of the state agency, said the number of complaints of all kinds for the first quarter was 242, compared with 169 in the first three months of 1958.

The report said the increase in complaints against agencies "may indicate the difficulties of obtaining employment in a period of relatively high unemployment."

The report showed that 189 complaints of all kinds were closed in the first quarter. Ninety-four, or just under one-half, were dismissed with no discriminatory practices or policies found. In thirty-nine others, no probable cause was found as to the specific complaint, but other discriminatory practices or policies were found and adjusted.

In thirty-one cases, complaints were sustained. They were adjusted after conciliation in all but two cases in which a hearing was ordered or a consent order issued.

Basis of New Complaints

Most of the new complaints—145 out of 242—were based on discrimination because of color. Discrimination on account of age—under a law that became effective July 1, 1958—was second with forty-nine complaints. The other complaints were based on national origin (27), creed (16) and other (5).

The Anti-Defamation League report, issued by its national director, Benjamin H. Epstein, said some employment agencies used secret symbols or other coding techniques on application forms to screen out job applicants belonging to minority groups. The league is devoted to safeguarding civil liberties and combating bigotry and discrimination.

The report said the screening system "works so well that discriminatory employers are relieved of the embarrassment of having to interview and confront unwanted job-seekers."

The report said policies of discrimination against Negroes, Jews and Puerto Ricans "are laid down by employers, not by private employment agencies." It added that 'n'onetheless, there is a growing body of public opinion that this should not absolve the employment agencies which collaborate with the bigoted employer."

The league report found that in Los Angeles, job discrimination was practiced on a wide scale."

State Discovers Bias In Own Job Service

Governor Hears Law Is Flouted To Meet 'Quota' of Placements

By Joel Seldin

Racial discrimination in the handling of job applicants has been found in the State Employment Service by the State Commission Against Discrimination, which investigated at the request of Gov. Rockefeller.

The S. C. A. D. report, sent to the Governor earlier in the week and released yesterday, accused the employment service, a division of the Department of Labor, of "weakness" and "indifference to the implications of discriminatory employment practices." The emphasis, S. C. A. D. said, was on producing a high volume of job placements rather than on enforcing the state law against discrimination.

The investigation was undertaken after the publication of a charge that a "gentleman's agreement" existed between employment service interviewers and certain large employers to send only job applicants with a particular racial or religious background. Another charge, by a union official, held that the employment service had "covered [illegible] case of an interviewer who used a code of dots to distinguish the application cards of white and non-white students.

Elmer A. Carter, chairman of S. C. A. D., in his summary of the eight reports produced by the investigation, said the charge of a "gentleman's agreement" was "justified by the evidence produced. . . ." Interviewers in the employment service, he said, do not believe that their supervisors are "entirely committed to the policy of non-discrimination."

"In fact, he suspects that he may be considered a bit of a 'trouble maker' if he does try to enforce the policy," Mr. Carter wrote.

In the "dot" case, he found that the service was more concerned with the interviewer's claiming "credit for placements for which she was not responsible," than with the discriminatory implications of the code. This attitude, Mr. Carter wrote, "could hardly impress any member of the staff with a feeling that supervisory personnel regarded this type of issue as one of paramount importance."

On the matter of "credit for placements," the investigators undertook an extensive analysis of the employment service's process for evaluating its own employees. It found "an unwritten, unspoken 'quota' of placements," resulting in a temptation to "cut corners by making the easier placements." This cutting of corners, it was found, usually means compromising with the pressures toward discrimination.

Personnel Policy

In another aspect of the service's personnel policy, S. C. A. D. found that in the New York City Commercial and Sales Office, at which the "gentleman's agreement" charge was leveled, only one of eleven Negro employees is assigned full time to the kind of job where discriminatory arrangements could be made. It also found a lower - than - average proportion of Negroes being promoted to supervisory jobs and a "feeling of unease among those members of non - white groups who wish to make the Employment Service their careers."

The investigation also found laxness in reporting to S.C.A.D cases involving discriminatory job orders. One interviewer was quoted as saying that top supervisory officials, if asked whether such a report should be filed, will tell the interviewer "not to be silly." Such reports the interviewer said, "make the State Employment Service look bad."

Recommendations

Calling his recommendation "self - evident," Mr. Carter proposed that supervisory personnel "must make it unequivocally clear . . . that one price the Employment Service will not pay for meeting any real or fancied quota for placements, or establishing or maintaining a 'cordial' relationship with employers is the price of tolerating or assuming limitations or specifications based on race, creed, color or national origin."

He suggested that the service appoint a full-time liaison officer to work with S. C. A. D. on the reporting of discriminatory job orders and on the service's orientation and training programs. He also proposed that the service's Advisory Council, particularly its public members, take a renewed interest in the possibility of discrimination toward the service's own employees.

Mr. Carter said he had received "every co-operation" in the investigation from Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood, head of the Department of Labor. He assured the Governor he was confident that the service's personnel "can be counted upon to act with the required vigor, if leadership and direction are provided."

NORTH CAROLINA

Segregation Bars In Industry Cited

More and better jobs in North Carolina's increasingly industrialized economy should be a prime goal for the State's Negroes, an Urban League official told Negro school teachers here last night.

Julius A. Thomas of New York, the League's director of industrial relations, urged North Carolina Negroes to take steps aimed at breaking down segregation bars in industry and business.

Eventually, Thomas said, "industries will realize it is not good business to exclude efficient workers solely because of their race."

But presently, he said, Negroes comprise only eight per cent of the industrial labor force in a selected group of North Carolina plants.

Thomas was speaking to 4,500 members of the North Carolina Teachers Association, holding a three-day annual convention.

Three Suggestions.

He urged a three-part program aimed at putting more Negro workers on production lines and in business offices.

He suggested:

—"You must become concerned about the problem of employment discrimination." He asked a "thorough study" of labor utilization by economics and sociology departments in Negro colleges to "point out the opportunities and the limitations faced by Negro young people."

—Formation of a Statewide committee to sponsor a program to "open the doors of industry and business to more qualified young people."

—Better preparation for Negro young people for work in industry and business.

Thomas said a recent survey of 23 North Carolina industrial plants showed that Negroes comprised eigh per cent of the work force. Southwide the average was six per cent.

He said that 19 Negroes in North Carolina were employed in clerical work in partially - integranted plants, but that a major problem is the relunctance of industrial and business firms to hire Negroes for anything more than unskilled jobs.

In a Southwide survey, only 4,200 of 26,500 Negro workers served in other than unskilled or semi-skilled posts, Thomas pointed out.

Becaue of "these unhappy statistics," Thomas said, "we urge you to join with us in a more vigorous effort to eliminate discriminatory employment practices in every section of this great country."

The three-day NCTA convention ends with a general session at 10:30 this morning. George Newell of Raleigh is general chairman for the convention.

W. T. Coleman Named to U. S. Job Bias Board

President Eisenhower Friday appointed William T. Coleman Jr., Philadelphia attorney, an alternate public member of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy.

The committee, which has five members, including two representing the public, directs inquiries and investigations into possible discrimination in departmental employment.

EXPERT ON PTC FARES

Coleman, 39, is one of the city's two experts on PTC fare cases. The other is his law associate, Harold E. Kohn. They are members of the firm of Dilworth, Paxon, Kalish, Kohn and Dilks.

Active in Negro affairs, Coleman was one of three attorneys who represented three Negro youths in their attempt to gain admission to Girard College. The legal move failed.

He was educated at Germantown High School; the University of Pennsylvania, where he graduated summa cum laude with major honors in government, and Harvard Law School, where he attained magna cum laude.

AIDE TO FRANKFURTER

During his career he served as law secretary to Judge Herbert F. Goodrich, of the Third Circuit United States Court of Appeals from 1947 to 1948 and as law secretary to U. S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter in 1948 and 1949.

He is active in civic and legal affairs and has written several articles on the law.

Four charged with job discrimination

There are 40 others, according to NAACP records.

WASHINGTON

Four large industrial corporations and a Federally aided educational project are charged with unfair employment practices in complaints filed last week with the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

In submitting the complaints on behalf of NAACP members, Herbert Hill, the association's labor secretary, urged the committee to revoke the contracts of employers who are "blantantly violation the anti-discrimination provison."

Concerns named in the complaint include Monsanto (Ill.) Chemical Co., Glenn L. Martin Co., Patrick Air Force Base, Fla.; Kansas State College of Agriculture, U.S. Department of Agriculture Extension Program, Wichita, Kans.; P. Lorillard Co., Greensboro, N.C.; and Railway Express Agency, Inc., NYC.

MR. HILL also conferred with Dr. Joseph Hoghins, chief enforcement officer of the committee regarding previously filed NAACP complaints. The Committee has not revoked a single contract since it was created in Aug. 1953.

Among the complaints currently pending with the Committee are actions against Boeing Aircraft Co., Wichita, Kans.; Western Electic Co. and the Communications Workers of AFL-CIO, Greensboro, N.C.;

Lion Oil Co. and the International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO, El Dorado, Ark.; Cessna Aircraft Corp., Wichita, Kans.; National Cash Register Co., Dayton, Ohio; Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., Wichita, Kans.;

BOHR AIRCRAFT CORP., Riverside, Calif.; Carbide and Chemical Co. (Division of Union Carbide and Chemical Corp.) and Galveston Metal Trades Department, AFL-CIO, Texas City, Tex.;

Frigidaire Sales Corp. (Division of General Motors Corp.) Emeryville, Calif.; and U.S. Industrial Chemical Co. (division of National Distiller Co.) Ashtabula, Ohio.

FIGHT ON JOB BIAS SPURRED BY NIXON

He Calls on the Religions to Mobilize Moral Steps for Meeting Problem

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 11 — Vice President Richard M. Nixon urged religious leaders today to "mobilize the moral support of the American people" for a fight against racial discrimination in employment.

He addressed 400 clergymen and lay leaders of religious organizations at a conference called by the President's Committee on Government Contracts, of which he is chairman.

The committee works by persuasion against discrimination in hiring by companies with Government contracts. It has sponsored many conferences covering industry, labor and local government, but today's conference was the first in the field of religion.

The Vice President opened the session. Other speakers, from the clergy, business, labor and Government, echoed his main theme, that racial discrimination was a moral problem religion could help to solve.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. told the meeting that job discrimination had resulted in "an appalling gap" between white and Negro living conditions. He is the young Negro minister who led the boycott against bus segregation at Montgomery, Ala.

He said that 43 per cent of the Negro families in this country earned less than $2,000 a year, compared with only 17 per cent of white families, and only 12 per cent of Negro families earned $5,000 a year or more, as against 40 per cent of white families.

Arraignment of Practice

"To deny any group honest work and fair pay is not only immoral, it is almost murderous," Dr. King declared. "It is deliberate strangulation of the physical and cultural development of the victims."

He asserted that discrimination "also debilitates the white person" because "it so often victimizes him with a false sense of superiority, thus depriving him of genuine humility, honesty and love."

He defined discrimination as a moral rather than a political issue and said that the churches had a special responsibility to "break the deadening silence which engulfs the well-meaning white people of the South." Many white southerners, he added, deplore discrimination but are afraid to "speak honestly or employ Negroes."

Lawrence E. Walsh, Deputy Attorney General, decried the "economic waste, moral brutality and international disadvantages" of racial discrimination.

He cited Federal employment policy as a bright spot. In the five major centers of Federal employment, he said, 23 per cent of the employes are negroes.

Presses Rights Plank

Mr. Walsh urged support for a plank in the Admiinstration's civil rights program that would make the President's committee a permanent agency with statutory support. It now has no regular appropriations status.

The greatest obstacle to the proposal, he commented, was not strong opposition but lack of enthusiastic backers.

He said he recognized that many at the conference wanted a Federal Fair Employment Practices Commision, but he declared that that broader proposal had no chance of approval in Congress.

The 400 persons at the conference came from thirty-four states. They paid their own way, some of them by raising funds in their congregations.

End To Building Trades Bias I District Of Columbia Area See

WASHINGTON (Special)—Hope for an end to the exclusion of Negroes from employment in certain building trades in the District of Columbia, where Federal construction projects are involved, was expressed Saturday by Irving Ferman, executive vice-chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

"Recent negotiations with government contractors indicate to the President's Committee that this distressful situation may soon be remedied," Ferman said, in an address to an economic and social workshop of the American Council on Human Rights which was conducted at Howard University.

The committee has substantiated the validity of complaints which have been filed with its staff alleging discrimination against Negroes in the hiring of skilled construction workers on such projects as Capitol East Fronb and the third House Office Building, Ferman said.

CAN NO LONGER ESCAPE

Despite evidence that initial blame for the situation may rest with certain building trades union locals, the Committee aide told his audience "we do not think that contractors can any longer sign contracts with the Government involving nondiscrimination clauses and then offer as a defense to noncompliance the exclusionary practices of unions with which they have labor agreements."

Ferman expressed confidence that the problem will soon be resolved with the cooperation of all concerned. He said the equal job opportunity program of the President's Committee can be symbolized in no better fashion than by free access to employment for all qualified workers on Federal construction projects in the nation's capital.

"These edifices must symbolize the hopes of free me nagainst the despair of communist totalitarianism, tnt they cannot do so as long as there remains any semblance of employment discriminaiion in their construction," Ferman said.

Hope seen for ending discrimination on US jobs

WASHINGTON

Hope for an end to the exclusion of colored persons from employment in certain building trades in the District of Columbia where Federal construction projects are involved, was expressed last week by Irving Ferman, executive vice-chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

"Recent negotiations with government contractors indicate to the President's Committee that this distressful situation may soon be remedied," he said in an address to an economic and social workshop of the American Council on Human Rights at Howard University.

The committee has established the truth of complaints alleging discrimination against skilled colored construction workers on such projects as the Capitol East Front and the third House Office Building.

Despite evidence that initial blame for the situation may rest with certain building trades union locals, the Committee aide told his audience:

"We do not think that contractors can any longer sign contracts with the Government involving non - discrimination clauses and then offer as a defense to noncompliance the exclusionary practices of unions with which they have labor agreements."

Mr. Ferman said the equal job opportunity program of the President's Committee can be symbolized in no better fashion than by free access to employment for all qualified workers on Federal construction projects in the nation's capital.

President's Unit Secures Better Jobs for Race

WASHINGTON — "You've got to break the ice. You have to get Negroes into pilot jobs. You have to persuade the contractor that he must take action to implement the Government's policy of employing Negroes."

Speaking was Irving Ferman, president of the President's Committee on Contracts, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, which works to end discrimination in hiring by companies with Government contracts.

Instead of asking contractors for a generalized commitment not to discriminate, the committee is now seeking a specific promise to hire Negroes for new jobs immediately.

Emphasis has been on white color and skilled industrial positions from which Negroes have been excluded generally in the South and many other parts of the country.

THE COMMITTEE pointed out what it considers "significant breakthroughs" in obtaining skilled jobs for Negroes in the South.

(1) One of the largest defense contractors, manufacturers of aircraft among many other products, has hired for the first time Negro clerical workers in its Fort Worth, (Tex.) plant.

(2) A nationally known company in Greensboro (N. C.) has employed Negroes for white collar jobs in the personnel and accounting departments, and one as a junior laboratory technician.

(3) The International Latex Company in Dover, Del., a strongly Southern-oriented area, hired its first Negro employes of any kind and arranged for the recruitment of skilled Negroes in the future.

FOR HELP IN finding qualified Negro employes, Latex turned to Dr. Jerome Holland, president of Delaware State College. Some years ago he was the Cornell University football star known as "Brud" Holland.

Dr. Holland said the Negro employes have been received without any incidents except some friendly approaches by white employes. He said Negro teachers and others in Dover were eager to train young men and women for Latex, because "they recognize the importance of having good people employed at this opportune time."

B'nai B'rith Hears Plea for Help by Volunteer Groups at Conference Here

By IRVING SPIEGEL

Irving Ferman, executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, said here yesterday the "most basic and crucial problem" confronting minority groups was discrimination in employment.

He urged volunteer agencies in the field of civil rights to put "greater emphasis" on the "bread-and-butter" problem of equal opportunity for employment.

His talk was one of a series on the problems of minority groups at the annual meeting of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in the Savoy Hilton Hotel.

He Finds 'Acceptance'

He said his committee, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, had found "a remarkable degree of acceptance and readiness" by business and industrial executives to integrate minority group members in their work forces.

Joseph Cohen, chairman of the league's community-service committee, said that Negroes had started to "act like the white majority as they near genuine equality," and this situation would call for "new accommodations" by all Americans.

Rabbi Albert I. Gordon, spiritual leader of Temple Emanuel, Newton, Mass., said that Jews were not settling in the suburbs to "escape civil rights issues" and their non-white city neighbors.

Rabbi Gordon, who wrote the sociological study, "Jews in Suburbia," declared that "far more important" changing social and economic factors accounted for the move to the suburbs by both Jews and Christians.

Not the least of these, he said, "are the factors associated with the increasing numbers of marriages, larger families, changing housing needs, improved economic income, better transportation and the desire for improved status."

Barney Balaban, honorary vice chairman of the league, urged the agency "to build for greater leadership as a human rights organization in the years ahead."

Contracts Group Cites Impasse, to Take Issue to GSA

The President's Committee on Government Contracts headed by Vice President Nixon sought Government action today to have skilled Negro workers employed on the reconstruction of the east front of the Capitol.

Irving Ferman, executive vice president of the committee, said he will carry the fight to the General Services Administration as the contracting agency on the part of the Government.

He said two months' negotiations with the McCloskey Contracting Co. of Philadelphia had failed to resolve the impasse. He added that he would undertake to arrange a meeting within the next few days with GSA Administrator Franklin Floete to discuss the matter.

Two Other Big Projects

Also involved are McCloskey contracts on the new House Office building and a new Government building being erected just west of the Health, Education and Welfare building on Independence avenue.

Mr. Ferman said the east front reconstruction holds a symbolic reference and added:

"We simply cannot let this east front be built with any suspicion of discrimination."

Involved in the dispute along with the McCloskey Co. is Local 201 of the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers (AFL-CIO) which supplies skilled workers for the three projects under an agreement with the contracting firm.

Democrats' Treasurer

Mr. Ferman said the head of the firm, Matthew McCloskey, who is treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, had been sympathetic to the committee's position but had taken no action on the comlaints.

Mr. McCloskey and representatives of his firm here were not immediately available for comment.

The dispute arose last summer when Alexander D. Thomas 55, of 4321 Kane place N.E., an iron worker, complained that he and others had been refused employment on the east front project.

Mr. Ferman said the committee investigated and took the complaints up with the McCloskey firm. He related that Mr. McCloskey said he would bring outside skilled Negro rodmen on the job if he could not work out an agreement with the union.

Proposal is Rejected

Later, the contractor proposed, Mr. Ferman said, that he bring from Philadelphia some Negro workmen previously employed by his firm as a move to avoid the referral agreement with the union. This would be possible under the Taft-Hartley law, it was pointed out.

However, Vice President Nixon rejected this proposal as violating the spirit and purpose of the President's committee in eliminating discrimination in the particular instance, in Washington.

At an October 13 meeting with Mr. McCloskey, Mr. Ferman said the committee would undertake to co-operate in working out the problem by conferring with union representatives.

A meeting with Calvin Walker, business agent of Local 201, failed to bring a solution, Mr. Ferman said, and an appeal to top AFL-CIO leaders brought a sympathetic hearing but no action.

Mr. Ferman said the committee had no desire to "bust unions" but added that the present system in operation was impeding the committee's work.

Cites Negro Hiring

At the time the controversy arose, Mr. Walker denied any bias on the part of the union and said it not only hired Negro rodmen but had assigned them at times to the three McCloskey projects.

Mr. Ferman said the local has two Negro members who have belonged to the union for 34 years. The referral system under the union's agreement with Mr. McCloskey, the committee official said, serves "to freeze" the situation and prevent other Negro rodmen from obtaining work on the projects.

Mr. Ferman said the McCloskey contract with the GSA bans any discrimination. With reference to this and the referral agreement the firm has with the union, Mr. Ferman commented:

"These boys can't have it both ways."

Powell Amendment Separates 'Sheep From Goats' on Issue Of Discrimination in Unions

Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 8-22-59

WASHINGTON — Representative Adam Clayton Powell separated the sheep from the goats in the House of Representatives Wednesday when he moved an amendment to the Shelley labor reform bill (favored by the unions) that would ban racial discrimination in union membership.

16c

The amendment offered by Powell read:

"Except that no labor organization shall discriminate unfairly in its representation of all employes in the negotiation and administration of collective bargaining agreement, or refuse membership, segregate or expel any person on the grounds of race, religion, color, sex or national origin."

In introducing the amendment, the New York Congressman asserted that he was striving "to remove the elements of hypocrisy and deceit which now exist in all of the labor bills before you."

Later, Powell promised:

"I will offer this amendment to other bills that come before us."

He raised the question as to what Communist news agencies might report about the action of the House.

"Will they print tomorrow that Khrushchev is going to come here to a land of hypocrisy, where black men, brown men, Orientals, Jews, Latin-Americans do not have a chance to work because the U. S. Congress refuses to give them that right?"

Despite Powell's eloquent pleading and the support of a few ultra-liberals, his amendment was voted down.

Remarks made by Congressman Cederberg, opposing the amendment, were of such a nature that Powell construed them to be a "personal attack" and asked that Cederberg's words be "taken down" for possible censure."

Later, Powell said: "Out of my Christian character and upbringing, which can be made more obvious by those who may not have it, I withdraw my request that the gentleman's words be taken down."

On the vote on his amendment, Powell demanded tellers, and he and Congressman Barden (North Carolina) were appointed tellers.

The sheep and the goats on both the Democratic and Republican sides ganged up with the Democratic goats from the North to defeat the Powell amendment 215 to 160.

Negroes Major Complainants

Job Discrimination Group Here

By BILL BOWLES
News and Courier Staff Writer

A committee appointed by the President to combat discrimination in governmental employment practices reported here yesterday that as many complaints come from the North as from the South.

Dr. Archibald S. Carey, chairman of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy, called the visit to the Naval Base "routine." Charleston is the 35th city the committee has "investigated" so far.

About the comparison of the number of complaints in North and South, Carey said, "I wouldn't attempt to say what section of the country is guilty most often of discrimination. One section might be more articulate in voicing complaints than another would be."

Thirty-five administrators of federal agencies in the Charleston area met with the five visiting members of the committee yesterday. Branch Rickey, the baseball executive, was one of the committeemen. He is vice-chairman.

Carey stressed that the group was not here to investigate any reported malpractice by Charleston governmental agencies. It was more for a discussion of employment policies, he said.

Carey explained the purpose of the group, which the President created in January, 1955, as that of providing a place of appeal for persons who feel that they are being discriminated against in their jobs.

The committee looks for discrimination based on three things: race, religion and national origin.

In the four years that the committee has operated, 80 per cent of the complaints have come from Negroes. Approximately 8 per cent have come from Jewish people, the second highest category. Third greatest number of complaints come from Latin Americans.

Carey said that many of the complaints have no validity. "And at least 80 per cent of them are resolved before they even get to the committee," he said. The chairman expressed satisfaction with the success of the organization. It is intended to make the agencies aware that fitness for the job is the only criterion for employment.

Rickey's Stand

The committee is not empowered with police authority. It can report its findings to the President. "So far we have not found it necessary to make recommendations for legislation," Carey said. "The committee has never failed to get cooperation from an agency."

The number of complaints received by the committee has been increasing since its formation. Carey feels that this is not a result of increased discrimination but of increased information among governmental employes. More people know of the existence of the committee than ever before, he said.

Asked whether the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had stimulated complaint action among the Negroes, Carey said, "No." He added, "I don't want to be misunderstood. The committee is not 'pro' anything. We merely investigate conditions as they are called to our attention."

Carey described the 2,300,000 employes of the federal government as the committee "staff." "We don't send out investigators as such. All federal employes are at the disposal of the committee for gathering the information on which we act."

The "action," he said, is merely to give advice to the person making the complaint, discuss the situation with the agency for which he works, or make a report. The latter action has never been necessary.

Carey said that most complaints are not about being unable to get employment with the government but about being unable to obtain promotions for which the complainant thinks he is qualified.

Members of the committee other than Carey and Rickey are Milton Biow, author of the "$64,000 Question" on television; W. Walter McCoy, of Washington, D.C.; and Dr. Ross Clinchy, executive director of the committee. Two members did not make the trip.

The committee left Charleston last night for Norfolk.

Teamster Longshoreman Pact Denied

Hoffa Probers Go Into Strike Threat; 'Harassed' Witness Balks Red Quiz

By Edward T. Folliard
Staff Reporter

The investigation of James R. Hoffa and his Teamster Union yesterday turned to Hoffa's reported threat to make an alliance with longshoremen and others and call a paralyzing Nation-wide strike.

Sen. John T. McClellan (D-Ark.), chairman of the so-rackets committee, began by called rackets committee, began by calling as a witness Louis Goldblatt of San Francisco, secretary-treasurer of the International Longshoremen's Union.

Goldblatt acknowledged that the teamsters and the longshoremen had set up a 11-man committee on the West Coast to settle problems growing out of overlapping, organization and automation, but he would not agree that there was any teamster-longshoremen "pact."

The hearing reached a heated, Fifth Amendment stage when Chief Counsel Robert F. Kennedy asked Goldblatt if he was a Communist, if he formerly went under the name of Louis Miller, and if he wrote a pamphlet in 1934 ("Young Communists in Action") that called for the "overthrow of capitalism" and the establishment of "a Soviet America."

Goldblatt laughed as the pamphlet was being read. Then he became angry, charged that he was being subjected to harassment, and invoked the Fifth Amendment to avoid saying whether he was or ever had been a Communist.

Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's Union, also took the Fifth last April when asked the same question by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

While Goldblatt was in the witness chair, Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., (D-N. C.) called attention to a news story from Brownsville, Tex., on May 19 which said that Hoffa threatened to call a Nation-wide strike if anti-trust laws were applied to unions. Next day Hoffa denied making such a threat.

McClellan, ignoring the denial, said at yesterday's hearing that Hoffa was raising a danger to the supremacy of the United States Government, and said it was up to the committee to determine whether laws were needed to protect the country and the welfare of its citizens.

Hoffa to be Quizzed

Hoffa is scheduled to appear before the committee next week, and will be questioned about a "pact" with the longshoremen, and also about corruption and gangsterism in his Teamsters Union.

Goldblatt took the Fifth Amendment several times yesterday after a talkative start. He refused to acknowledge whether he had signed an affidavit under the Taft-Hartley Act saying he was not a Communist, although the affidavit (or a photostat of it) was placed in front of him. He also declined to say whether he had made any effort to have Godfrey P. Schmidt removed as a monitor watching over the affairs of the Teamsters Union.

At one point, when Goldblatt was crying out against "harassment," Sen. McClellan told him that the committee didn't propose "to be insulted by a witness."

Discrimination Is Charged

At the outset of yesterday's hearing, Ross Hill, a former truck driver, told how he was barred from Hoffa's Local 299 in Detroit because he was a Negro. He said the discrimination forced him to sell his truck and move to California, where he is now working as an operating engineer.

Hill said that truck companies in Detroit wouldn't hire Negroes because "they didn't want trouble with the union."

He said he is getting along well in California and that he thinks conditions for the Negro worker are improving because people are getting "more civilized . . . more understanding."

The committee next swung back to a line of investigation it began several days ago, designed to show that Hoffa has negotiated or favored contracts unfavorable to the rank-and-file of Teamsters.

Chief Counsel Kennedy said that a witness, Richard R. Riss sr., owner of a Kansas City, Mo., trucking company, had entertained Hoffa at his fishing lodge in Canada, and had then got a "modification" of his contract with the Teamsters.

Riss insisted that the truck drivers prospered under the modification.

Union Aide Dodges Quiz

Thomas Keegan, business agent for a Chicago local of the Teamsters Union, wearing a diamond ring shaped like a horseshoe, was called for questioning about testimony of truck drivers that he refused to help them collect money owed them by truck owners.

Keegan, who gets $12,000 a year as salary and $5500 for expenses, took the Fifth Amendment.

Sen. McClellan, who has seen an army of Teamster officials do the same thing in the last two years, became furious. He said that Keegan and others like him were the real "union busters."

"We hear a lot about labor-baiting and union-busting when we are trying to get legislation," he said. "The real union busters are the cheats and the frauds who are imposing themselves on unions today."

Negro charges Hoffa set up bar on Negroes

WASHINGTON, July 10 (AP)—A Negro truck driver testified today he has been subjected to costly racial discrimination by Teamster President James R. Hoffa's home Local 299 in Detroit.

An immediate investigation was ordered by the Senate rackets committee.

THE DRIVER, Ross Hill, Compton, Calif., told the committee that in the earlier 1950s the local barred all but about six Negroes from its 12,000 membership. The ban, Hill said, cost him severe financial losses.

He said the six Negroes got in only because they were on payrolls of big trucking firms the local had organized and it had to take them.

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R., Ariz.), presiding in the absence of Chairman John L. McClellan (D., Ark.), ordered the committee staff to send investigators to Detroit to look into the alleged discrimination.

Anti-Negro Bias In Union Is Cited

Senators Told Hoffa's Home Local In Detroit Drew Color Line

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Senate investigators heard charges Friday that Teamster President James Hoffa's home local in Detroit followed a pattern of racial bias in refusing to admit Negroes as members.

One Negro truck driver told the Senate Rackets Committee the local's denial of his membership application in 1953 eventually cost him his job, his automobile and his home.

Union Contract 'Undercut'

Committee counsel Robert Kennedy also charged that Hoffa personally allowed an employer-friend, trucker Richard R. Riss of Kansas City, Mo., to undercut the union contract by changing pay rates and selling trucks to his drivers at above-cost prices.

Riss, a frequent host to Hoffa at his Canadian lodge, promptly denied any impropriety in his deals with the union leader.

The charge of racial discrimination in Hoffa's Detroit Local 299 was leveled by Negro Ross Hill, who is now an operating engineer in Compton, Calif.

He said the "situation may have improved, but that in 1953 there were only five or six Negroes out of Local 299's total membership of between 12,000 and 13,000.

Affidavits Produced

After Hill's testimony, Kennedy produced two affidavits in support of his charge of racial bias. One, by Victor Sharpe of Berkeley, Mich., said that while serving as an operations man for Fleet Carriers, Inc., he sent a Negro job applicant over to Local 299 to obtain membership.

Sharpe said "a couple of fellows came over" from the local and "told me in no uncertain terms not to send any Negro applicants as they wanted no part of them."

Was Concerned Over Drivers' 'Health'

Claim Hoffa Put Nix Upon Negro Truckers

WASHINGTON — Teamster boss James Hoffa, the man who "befriended" former heavyweight champion Joe Louis, has been accused by a former Ohio truck driver of not allowing "colored" drivers in his Detroit local union area.

• Making the accusation was Ross Hill, now living in California. Mr. Hill was a driver for Ohio Northern Truck Lines of Youngstown when the incident banning him and other Negro drivers occurred in Detroit.

Also testifying before the Senate Rackets Committee was George S. Maxwell, a labor consultant from Cleveland.

MAXWELL TESTIFIED that in 1954 or 1955 Hoffa called him and advised him to warn a client not to use Negro drivers in territory controlled by the Teamster boss' home local, No. 299.

• According to Maxwell, Hoffa said, "If over-the-road colored drivers come into Detroit, it might not be healthy for them."

Maxwell said he understood that there were two such incidents involving Ohio drivers. After that, no more Negro drivers were sent into Detroit.

DURING MR. MAXWELL'S testimony, Committee Chairman John L. McClellan, Arkansas Democrat, interrupted to say: "You mean the Mr. Hoffa—the great friend of Joe Louis?"

• When Maxwell replied in the affirmative, McClellan said mockingly, "Well, this is a revelation."

Senator McClellan was referring to an incident that took place during Hoffa's trial when he was charged with bribery of a rackets committee staff member.

At the time, Louis stepped into the courtroom and greeted Hoffa like a long-time friend. The jury, which was predominantly Negro, freed Hoffa.

Hoffa's Home Local Is Accused Of Denying Negroes Union Cards

Trucker Deal Also Claimed

Washington, July 10 (AP)—Senate investigators heard charges Friday that Teamster President James R. Hoffa's home local in Detroit followed a pattern of racial bias in refusing to admit Negroes as members.

One Negro truck driver told the Senate Rackets Committee that the local's denial of his membership application in 1953 eventually cost him his job, his automobile, and his home.

Senator Barry Goldwater (R., Ariz.), who was presiding, called the situation "a very black mark" against the local and "one of the most atrocious things" the committee has heard. He ordered the committee staff to find out immediately if the local still was following an anti-Negro policy.

Committee Counsel Robert F. Kennedy also charged that Hoffa personally allowed an employer friend, trucker Richard R. Riss, Kansas City, to undercut the union contract by changing pay rates and selling trucks to his drivers at above-cost prices.

Riss, a frequent host to Hoffa at his Canadian lodge, promptly denied any impropriety in his deals with the union leader. He said his employees asked for the truck-sale arrangement and stood to gain more than they lost in the revision of the wage scales.

Claims Card Refused

His testimony on the attitude of his employees was subsequently challenged by a former official of his trucking firm and two truck drivers. They said the drivers did not like the deal.

The charge of racial discrimination in Hoffa's Detroit Local 299 was leveled by Negro Ross Hill, now an operating engineer in Compton, Cal.

After Local 299 refused him membership, he said, he joined a teamster local in Youngstown, Ohio, and managed to keep his job for a time as a steel hauler for the Ohio Northern Truck Lines, Youngstown.

But he said the ban on his use of the company's Detroit terminal because he was not a member of Local 299 and other hardships eventually proved too much for him. He said he was forced to sell his property and move to another area of the country.

He said the "situation may have improved," but that in 1953 there were only five or six Negroes out of Local 299's total membership of between 12,000 and 13,000.

After Hill's testimony, Kennedy produced two affidavits in support of his charge of racial bias. One, by Victor Sharpe, Berkeley, Mich., said that while serving as an operations man for Fleet Carriers, Inc., he sent a Negro job applicant over to Local 299 to obtain membership.

Sharpe said "a couple of fellows came over" from the local and "told me in no uncertain terms not to send any Negro applicants as they wanted no part of them."

Said 'Membership Filled'

Mrs. Charles Stovall, Inkster, Mich., said in the other affidavit that she and her husband, who hauled freight for Ohio Northern, were told by several of their Negro drivers that they were turned down by Local 299 on the ground "the membership was filled."

Hoffa, once hailed as a good friend by Negro ex-heavyweight champion Joe Louis, was certain to be questioned about his local's racial practices and his personal interference in local teamsters contracts when he reappears before the committee Monday.

Teamsters' Racial Ban Unveiled

WASHINGTON (AP)—A Negro truck driver testified today he has been subjected to costly racial discrimination by Teamsters Union President James R. Hoffa's home Local 299 in Detroit.

An immediate investigation was ordered by the Senate committee investigating rackets.

The driver, Ross Hill, Compton, Calif., told the committee he believes the situation has improved a bit in the last couple of years.

Hill said that in the earlier 1950s the local barred all but about six Negroes from its membership. The ban, Hill said, cost him severe financial losses.

He said the six Negroes got in only because they were on payrolls of big trucking firms the local had organized and it had to take them.

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz), presiding in the absence of Chairman John L. McClellan (D-Ark), called racial discrimination in a union "one of the most atrocious things."

This Man, O. Z. Evers, Has Memphis Worried!

By TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON

(Story in Two Installments)

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—White folks here in the Bluff City have a terrific problem on their hands. It's a two-legged problem, a 5-foot, 9-inch, 205-pound Negro railway mail clerk, born in Holly Grove, Ark., 34 years ago, and answering to the name of O. Z. Evers. Mr. Evers is a "pain in the neck" to white folks, collectively and in spots, and they don't know exactly what to do about him.

Right now they're trying to fire him from his job with the Post Office Department but Evers is fighting back with the tenacity of a bull; even though the pressure on him is coming from some top brass in the P. O. Department, specifically Assistant PMG Eugene Lyons.

EVERS HAS been given 30 days to show cause why he shouldn't be fired, the charge being that he violated a direct order of Mr. Lyons' in connection with his recent move last summer to file as a candidate for a city office.

He didn't actually file; a combination of circumstances halted the move even though he had made out his resignation from his postal job, dating it to be effective the day after qualifying for the election race.

This was the climax of a series of incidents dating back to 1956, when Mr. Evers began his attacks on racial inequality in Memphis. These incidents projected him into the spotlight as a sort of "one-man crusader" for benefits for Negroes.

He was involved in the bus segregation fight here in 1956. In June, 1958, he orgainized Binghampton Civic League with six members. Now he has 781 members in the league, coming from all parts of the city and Shelby County. He is its president.

In January 1959, his league financed a suit against segregation at the fairgrounds, the zoo, parks and all city-owned recreational facilities. Just a few weeks ago the league wrote the Greyhound Bus Company about the jim crow waiting rooms at the local bus station. About three weeks ago the signs came down. There are no more race lines there.

For sometime now he has been engaged in a running battle with the Spic and Span Cleaners, operators of cleaning establishments in Negro areas, but staffed with white women clerks.

Mr. Evers wants Spic and Span to put Negro women on these jobs. Spic and Span refused. They employ Negro cleaners at their main plant.

MR. EVERS went to Spic and Span with a committee which included some ladies. He says the ladies were insulted. A boycott was started and some 5,000 circulars were put out; seven churches told of the move from their pulpits on Sunday and by Monday the boycott was 99 per cent effective, Mr. Evers says. The owner now wants to sell the establishments under fire.

If Evers is an enigma to the whites, he constitutes something of a problem to Negroes also—in a sense.

When Memphis State University integrated this year and Negro students were asked to make certain concessions to avoid precipitating trouble—such as not going to the cafeteria at certain times, or entering classes at a separate time, most conservative Negroes went along with the idea, in the interest of harmony. But not Mr. Evers. He unleashed a bitter blast condemning the move unequivocally.

That was in keeping with his philosophy which is at odds with moderation and gradualism. Says Mr. Evers in a ringing voice, filled with sincerity.

"You take your foot off my head now, not tomorrow!" He rips gradualism with the sarcasm, "kick me nine times today, eight times tomorrow, seven times the next day."

Job Bias To Be Discussed At Ellington AFB

Houston Informer Dat 10-17-59

HOUSTON — According to usually reliable sources, the President's Committee on Gov-ernmnt Contracts, headed by Archibald Carey, will hold a hearing on job discrimination in this area at the Ellington Airfield Base Wednesday Oct 21.

Mr Carey is an Attorney, prominent layman - minister of the AME Church.

RICKEY MEMBER

It was not known whether Branch Rickey, also a member of the committee, would be present.

Mr Rickey, the man who the color-line in organized baseball was recently elected president of the new Continental League, and has his hands full with this task.

It was Mr Rickey who signed Jackie Robinson, who starred for the old Brooklyn Dodgers.

Time set for the hearings and those involved were not available at press time.

Refused Job Because of Race

FALLS CHURCH, Va.—A third generation Japanese-American school teacher described by a school board member as "perhaps even a little better qualified than the others," was refused a teaching position because of her race.

Mrs. Yukiko Tamashiro, 35, said she did not plan to take any action over her rejection.

William R. Pierce, a member of the board until last month, said "The lady's mixture of race and all that was discussed and it was the consensus of the board that nothing further should be done about her application."

Postmaster Denies Any Racial Bias

President's Fair Job Policy Unit Receives Data On Promotion

RICHMOND — The President's Committee on Employment Policy has been sent a complaint by the Richmond branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees charging that Postmaster Fergus McRee discriminates against colored postal workers in selecting supervisory personnel in the mail division.

Last week alliance members attended a hearing conducted by C. E. Murchie, regional postal personnel director, after an earlier complaint to the post office department had been rejected. Mr. McRee has denied any discrimination on his part in selecting workers for promotion to supervisory jobs.

RECENTLY ONE colored postman was elevated to a supervisory level as route examiner in the mail division after 25 years of service. During the past 20 years, only one other colored postal worker has received a supervisory job in the mail division, although the Richmond post office has 55 per cent colored workers. There are 80 white supervisors.

The alliance chapter informed the President's committee that colored workers have qualified for the mail division's supervisory assignments durthe past six years, but only two of 11 have been promoted.

THE CUSTODIAL force has one colored supervisor, and there are three in the motor vehicle service, but the alliance insists that Mr. McRee employs a double standard in handling the eligible list.

The alliance maintains that it has no interest in dictating policies for administration of the post office, but holds that equal rights and job opportunities should be in conformity with the executive order establishing the President's committee.

MR. McREE notes the fact that colored residents of Richmond make up only a quarter of the population, while forming more than half of the post office personnel. He contends that these figures show that colored workers have not been discriminated against in appointments. He also asserts that in addition to seniority, the post offices procedures require consideration of race in making promotions.

He disclaimed any responsibility for the racial angle.

Allege Bias In Richmond Post Office

Here are members of a committee of the Richmond branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees, which has filed charges with the President's Committee on Employment Policy alleging that Postmaster Fergus McRee of Richmond discriminates against colored eligibles in promotions as supervisors in the mail division. From left to right are Bob White, district welfare chairman; F. Joseph Taylor, Thomas N. Payne, Richmond branch welfare chairman; H. Worthington Harris, C. J. Taylor, president of the Richmond branch; Samuel Coward, district president, and Mr. Hobbs.

Victim Of Job Bias Raps Foe Of California FEPC

Defender Chicago Ill. 1-21
Sat. 5-30-59

By LAWRENCE F. LAMAR

LOS ANGELES—(NPB) — In a sizzling reply to an article published in a San Francisco newspaper on May 6, attributed to a Rupert J. Mason, as an avowed repealist of the recently enacted California Employment Commission, Hildergarde Crozier Lenoir, young San Francisco matron, stridently took up the gauntlet to meet the challenge of the forces marshalling to have the legislators action set aside and place the matter on the ballot in a referendum move.

A copy of the letter addressed here to Helen Crozier Greenwood, executive secretary of the Negro Press Bureau and the militant writer's twin sister, was entitled "What Price Prejudice, Mr. Royal J. Mason and Followers" Mrs. Lenoir wrote:

"This letter is directed to Rupert J. Mason who in an editorial in the San Francisco Examiner of May 6, 1959 termed himself, "A San Franciscan Who Acts."

"Mr. Mason, you will never succeed in your attempt to obtain sufficient signatures on a petition for a referendum to destroy the 'Fair Employment Practice Commission bill.' Although God, has given you life abundantly, you are possessed with the most deadly disease known to man..prejudice."

Mrs. Lenoir, who is a candidate for a Ph.D. degree in English and Phonetics, after having earned her masters degree from a university of repute at the age of 18, asserted she had been denied the "right to work" as an English teacher in the public and private institutions of the state purely because of race.

The letter continued to castigate the FEPC foe and predicted that few if any real men, few if any real citizens of our state, would go along with the proposition.

Mrs. Lenoir also disclosed the many futile efforts she had made to find teaching employment. She explained her applications were returned a "no vacancy" answer. She explained that she had made applications at Long Beach State college, Compton Junior college, Fresno State college, Sacramento State college and San Francisco State college, all with negative results.

Determined to stay in the fight for the recently enacted FEPC signed into law by Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Mrs. Lenoir of 1444 Baker St., Apt. 214, San Francisco 15, Calif., in sending out her letter to the press, made it clear that only racial bigots oppose FEPC. She pointed out the inconsistent nature of prejudice with the moral law and urged the peoples of California to resist the efforts of a referendum to the bitter end.

5-member commission is created

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 4-25-59

SACRAMENTO — Gov. Edmund G. Brown, "with a deep realization of this historic moment," Thursday signed into law California's first fair employment practices legislation.

The bill, authored by Assemblyman William B. Rumford (Dem., Berkeley), at the request of the Governor, and the NAACP, "will become effective in mid - September, 90 days after the legislature adjourns.

Working with Assemblyman Rumford in carrying the bill through the Assembly and Senate were Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins of Los Angeles, Sens. Richard Richards of Los Angeles and George Miller of Martinez, all Democrats.

The bill passed the Assembly 65-14 and the Senate 30-5.

GOVERNOR BROWN issued the following statement on the historic action:

"I am deeply gratified by the action of the State Legislature in giving such overwhelming approval to the Fair Employment Practices bill.

"In guaranteeing equal job opportunities for all our citizens, regardless of race, creed or color, the State Legislature has taken a historic step forward in the ages long battle against prejudice and discrimination.

"I want to thank Assemblymen Byron Rumford and Gus Hawkins and Sens. Richard Richards and George Miller for their efforts in carrying the bill through the Legislature.

"I MADE fair employment practices legislation the first order of business when I was inaugurated on Jan. 5. It is a source of great satisfaction that the bill is among the first items in my program to win approval by the Legislature.

"I assure you, too, that the law will be administered fairly and equitably. There will be no witch - hunts and every effort will be made to resolve complaints quietly and without fanfare.

"I congratulate the members of the Senate and the Assembly who voted for this bill for the manner in which they demonstrated their faith in the principles on which this country was founded."

GOVERNOR BROWN'S signing of the bill culminated long years of effort by liberal groups in California to assure equal job opportunities for all, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

Passage of the legislation was a prime plank in Governor Brown's platform during last year's election campaign, and it was the first piece of legislation introduced at his request when the Legislature convened in January.

In previous years, the Assembly has approved fair employment practices legislation, but it always became bogged down in committee in the Senate.

* * *

GOVERNOR BROWN, with the assistance of Miller and Richards, won a resounding victory in the Senate during a fight over attempts to insert crippling amendments into the act.

The amendments were killed when he pledged to oppose them "with all the power I have as Governor."

As finally passed, the bill provides for a five - member Fair Employment Practices Commission appointed by the Governor. They will receive $50 a day while on duty.

The commission would be a division of the State Department of Industrial Relations and would use conciliation, education and persuasion to settle discrimination cases without publicity.

OAKLAND, Calif. — "In a sense, we are just beginning a new phase of the long struggle for equal rights, for equal opportunity.

"We must use this direct and honest fair employment practices law to perform a vitally necessary task. But we must bring to this test an even-handed and temperate approach."

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown's remarks were in priase of the recent passage in his state of Fair Employment Practices legislation. He spoke at a testimonial dinner honoring Assemblyman William Byron Rumford.

GOVERNOR BROWN paid tribute to Mr. Rumford in his address, hailing him as "the quarterback" behind the newly - passed FEP bill. He added:

"When I signed that historic piece of legislation into law, it was a statute of which everybody could be proud—Byron, his fellow legislators, and, for that matter, every citizen of the State of California."

Speaking of enforcement of the new legislation, Governor Brown stated:

"We must put education and conciliation before enforcement. If enforcement is required it will be used without hesitation.

"BUT IF FEPC is to be the success we all know it will be, the ultimate enforcement will eventually come not from the temporary machinery of State Government, but directly from the people of the State of California.

"And if there is a campaign, if some person or group chooses to start a devisive and destructive battle, I assure you I will stump this state from border to border defending the law that Byron Rumford and his colleagues wrote for California last month."

In honoring Assemblyman Rumford and his colleagues in the Senate and Assembly, Governor Brown declared:

"It may surprise a lot of you to know that in addition to all of Byron's other activities, he is now writing a master's thesis on smog abatement.

* * *

"BUT, WITH respect to civil rights, you can hardly name a law or bill that Byron hasn't worked for.

"FEP is, of course, the most important, but he has worked ceaselessly to prevent discrimination in housing, in the hiring of teachers and in the National Guard."

Calif. FEPC Law Is Now In Practice

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Key parts of Gov. Edmund G. Brown's program, including the historic Fair Employment Practices law and increases in social insurance and social welfare, went into effect.

Besides FEPC, the new laws increased unemployment insurance to a maximum of $55 a week, disabilty insurance and workmen's compensation to $65. Duration of unemployment insurance benefits was increased from 26 to 39 weeks when unployment reaches six per cent of the labor force.

They also increased aid to the aged and blind to $100 a month and $115 for special need cases and provided medical care for the needy disabled.

"It is most gratifying that all these measures are now law," Gov. Brown said. "They represent the greatest advances in social legislation made in California in many decades."

The FEP law prohibits job discrimination based on race, creed or color.

ALL THE measures were part of Gov. Brown's platform during last year's election.

The State Legistlaure approved 35 of his 40 major proposals, for an unprecedented batting average of more than 87 per cent.

Davis, Smith Eye Stratton, Start Fight On Job Bills

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. —

The showdown on FEPC legislation moved closer to a climax this week as Rep. Corneal A. Davis and Sen. Fred J. Smith introduced identical bills and called on Governor Stratton to show how sincerely he wants to provide "equal opportunity for all the people".

Both bills were sent to committees in the House and the Senate. An effort to by-pass the committee and bring speeding action on the bill in the House got 86 votes, three short of the number required.

Senator Smith declared, in introducing his bill, "This will make the fourth time this bill — one the governor himself helped draft — has been before this body, only to be defeated because of a lack of Republican votes. Now that he has spoken publicly asking for s u c h legislation we hope his influence will be more apparent in this body when the votes are counted."

Rep. Davis pleaded in the House that "this simple measure to implement democracy be enacted as quickly as possible to demonstrate to the people of the nation and the world that we members of the House of Representatives of the great state of Illinois believe in practicing the type of democracy we preach."

The measure introduced by Davis and Smith calls for the creation of a five-man commission to be appointed by the governor and approved by the Senate to hear and act on complaints of discrimination in employment because of race or creed. It also calls for an appropriation of $50,000 for operational activities.

The bills received heavy democratic support, especially from Cook County, and it is believed that if the governor will press his GOP colleagues to push for enactment, they will be voted out of committee soon and passed.

Mrs. Hurley Predicts Long Struggle

Exec Sees Conspiracy Against NAACP in Ala.

By TREZZVANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)

ATLANTA, Ga.—It may be a long, long time before the NAACP gets back into business in Alabama, according to Mrs. Ruby Hurley, Southeastern Regional secretary of the organization, whose area comprises the states of Florida, Mississippi, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and at one time, Alabama.

It was on June 1, 1956, that injunction papers were served on Mrs. Hurley in her office in Birmingham, an injunction which forbade the NAACP from operating in any fashion in the state of Alabama.

The organization immediately closed shop, but defied injunction orders to turn over its records and membership lists.

THAT DEFIANCE brought a $100,000 fine from the state of Alabama. The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that the fine is not legal and that the records do not have to be given to the state. But, Alabama's State Supreme Court has refused to accept the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court and a new legal battle is being waged.

But herein lies the crux of the situation, hitherto unrealized by this reporter and many other laymen: the fight is on the fine and membership lists, and not the injunction order forbidding the NAACP to operate.

Before that halt-operations order can be attacked, the periphery angles—fine and membership lists—must be disposed of in court, Mrs. Hurley explains.

And, the alert NAACP executive doesn't hesitate to say that she feels that as long as the chief foes of the NAACP maintain their political dominance in Alabama those two issues will be the targets of numerous delaying actions, in order that the injunction may not be gotten at.

Negro Migration Transplants U.S. Racial Dilemma

(This is the first of two dispatches dealing with the vast migration of Negroes from the South to the cities of the North and West in recent years and the equally vast changes and problems it has created.)

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A mass migration of Negroes, from the rural areas of the South to the big cities of the North and West, is radically changing the sectional aspect of America's racial dilemma.

Census figures show that the migration has been under way on a large scale since 1940. But its far-reaching effects have only recently begun to attract national attention.

The population shift has by no means reached the point where it may be regarded as a potential solution of the South's desegregation crisis. More than 60 per cent of the nation's 19 million Negroes still live in nine Southern states.

What the great hegira has done is to transplant the race relations problem, once distinctive to the South, into every region of the country.

Here are a few illustrations of this profoundly significant fact:

—New York City now has more than 1,000,000 Negro residents. That exceeds the combined Negro populations of Atlanta, Ga., Richmond, Va., Memphis, Tenn., Birmingham, Ala., Charlotte, N. C., Columbia, S. C., and New Orleans, La.

—The proportion of Negroes in Philadelphia's population—about one-fourth—is the same as in Little Rock, Ark.

—Chicago's Negro population has tripled since 1940, and now stands at about 750,000.

—San Francisco's Negro population, less than 5,000 in 1940, has increased by more than 1,000 per cent.

—Negroes constitute 24 per cent of the total population of the Washington metropolitan area. Within the "inner city" boundaries of the District of Columbia, they outnumber whites, constituting 53 per cent of the population. In the District's public schools, Negro children outnumber white children by a ratio of 3 to 1.

—San Diego, Calif., now has a larger Negro population than Greensboro, N. C.

These examples could be multiplied endlessly. Every metropolitan center outside the South has experienced a sharp rise in Negro population since World War II.

This increase in non-white population has coincided with a general exodus of white residents to the suburbs. The result is a fast-climbing ratio of colored to white residents in most northern and western cities.

In Los Angeles, for example, the proportion of Negro residents in 1940 was 4 per cent. Today it is 12 per cent. In Cleveland, the percentage of Negro residents has climbed from 10 to 22 per cent in the same period, in St. Louis from 13 to 26 per cent.

How long this trend will continue is difficult to predict. A leading authority on population movements, Dr. Irene Taeuber of Princeton University, believes that at least one phase of the Negro migration is nearing an end.

Up till now, most of the immigrants have come from the farming areas of the South. They were, predominantly, sharecroppers who had been "tractored off" the land. Some of them moved to southern cities (whose Negro populations also have grown moderately since 1940) but the vast majority, once they were uprooted, kept going until they were out of the South.

Dr. Taeuber points out that the main source of immigrant supply is now fast drying up. There are not many Negro sharecroppers left in the South—no more than 150,000 families, according to the latest Agriculture Department estimate.

In the future, it appears, there either will be less Negro migration to the North and West, or the immigrants will be of a different type—people who have already been exposed to an urban environment.

This prospect has great significance. For the mass migration of the past two decades, which brought hundreds of thousands of Negroes direct from the cotton fields of the South to the crowded slums of the nation's biggest cities, has created very severe problems, both for the transplanted Negroes and for the communities to which they have moved.

Cities Have Trouble And Fear In Handling Negro Migration

(This is the second of two dispatches on the vast change and problems created by the recent migration of Negroes from the South to the cities of the North and West.)

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI)—During the 19th century, America's big cities were inundated by great waves of immigrants from Europe.

They crowded into ghetto-like districts of the inner city—New York's East Side, Chicago's South Side, Detroit's Hamtramck. Differences of language, culture and religion set them apart from the native population, and made their assimilation a slow and painful process.

For the past two decades, immigrants of another kind have been pouring into the metropolitan centers of the North and West. They are Negroes from the rural areas of the American South.

Like their European predecessors, they have settled first in the decaying areas of the inner city. They, too, are "different"—not in nationality or language, but in race, in education and income levels, in many of their cultural mores.

Their assimilation also is proving to be a painful process—both for them and for the cities.

The problem has many aspects. Here are some of the most acute:

SEGREGATION

There is no legal segregation in northern cities—that is one big reason why Negroes move there. But there is unofficial and often highly effective segregation in housing. It is enforced by restrictive covenants (which have no standing in court but are carried out as "gentlemen's agreements"); by the financial pressure of lending institutions, which approve mortgage loans for Negroes only if the home being purchased is in an already "broken" block; by the refusal of white property owners to sell or rent to Negroes.

These and other factors have served to keep the fast-growing Negro populations of most northern cities cooped up in grossly-overcrowded slums and near-slums. It is not uncommon, in New York's Harlem, for 15 people to live in a three-room, cold-water flat. In Chicago's South Side "black belt," the population density is approaching that of Calcutta, India.

JOBS

Many of the Negroes who have migrated to northern cities in the past two decades were ill-educated. Nearly all were "under-educated" with an average of four years less schooling than whites of comparable age. Most of them knew only one trade—farming.

The handicaps they brought with them have been compounded by racial discrimination in training and employment. In Washington, for example, Negroes cannot train as apprentice plumbers or electricians—the unions won't let them. Throughout the North, the barriers to Negro employment in higher-paying jobs are still very high. Census surveys show that only 12 per cent of all Negro workers have professional, managerial or other "white collar" jobs, compared to 42 per cent of the white workers.

The result is clearly apparent in Negro incomes. The latest government analysis shows that the median income of full-time Negro workers is $2,661 a year, compared to $4,375 for whites.

SOCIAL DISORGANIZATION

The mass influx of ill-prepared immigrants has created severe problems for the cities.

Item: New York City's welfare budget has shot up to $200 million a year, with non-whites accounting for 70 per cent of the load.

Item: Philadelphia's venereal disease rate has climbed to an all-time high. About 90 per cent of the patients' treated at public clinics are Negroes.

Item: Washington has what one official calls a "staggering" rate of illegitimate births to teen-age girls. Of 185 public school girls who became pregnant in the 1957-58 school year, 169 were Negroes.

The social disorganization inherent in transplanting a huge Negro population from southern farms to big city slums is also reflected in a sharply rising crime rate.

Muggings and yoke robberies have become so common in Washington that many citizens are afraid to walk the streets at night. Baltimore has equipped police patrols with German shepherd dogs to cope with increasingly bold street bandits. New York's public schools have been plagued by rapes, robberies and assaults.

It is a fact well known to police departments, including those that do not break down arrest startistics by race, that a large percentage of these violent crimes are being committed by youthful hoodlums from the Negro slums.

In Philadelphia, two thirds of those arrested for serious crimes during 1958 were Negroes.

While stern police measures may be the immediate answer to this problem, authorities agree that the ultimate solution lies in relieving the social tensions of which a high crime rate is symptomatic.

"Educational deprivation, job discrimination, low income levels, overcrowded housing, broken homes and juvenile delinquency are all mutually related parts of the same picture," says an official of the Urban League. "Each phase of the problem feeds on the other.

"It will take time and titanic efforts to work this thing out. But there are no shortcuts."

Southerners on the Move -To Other Parts of U.S.

Herald Bureau

TALLAHASSEE — Southern people were pictured as among the "movingest" in the country Wednesday night by a Florida State University socialist, who said most of the "movers" had gone to other parts of the country.

Although hard to believe in Florida, which is drawing many more people than it is losing, the South, as a whole, has been able to maintain its increase, its population through the years only by a heavy excess of births over deaths, Dr Charles M. Grigg said.

He told the American Studies Lecture series, which is devoted this spring to a study of the South and the nation 100 years after the Civil War:

"For every decade since 1860, except two, 1890-1900 and 1930-1940, the Southeast has grown at a slower rate than the nation. This has occurred in spite of the fact that the South has had a high birth rate during this 100-year period.

"The reason is obvious. The South has lost its native born population to other parts of the country."

Dr. Grigg, director of the Center for Social Research at FSU and a researcher in population problems, said, on the question of mobility, that some 25 million Americans in 1950 lived outside the state of their birth.

Great Negro Exodus To North Called Myth

BY PHIL SMITH

The great exodus of Negroes to the North is more myth than movement.

This is the indication of a study conducted for the Birmingham Metropolitan Audit.

Since 1900, when the Birmingham area's proportionate number of Negroes was 40%, little more than a 3 per cent drop has been registered.

Dr. George V. Truss, head of the Bureau of Vital Statistics who compiled the report, said that the Birmingham area's present percentage of Negroes is 37.3, only a fraction of a point below the Memphis area's percentage. The Memphis area, he said, has the highest percentage (37.4) of Negroes of any of America's large city areas.

Moreover, within its city limits, Birmingham has the highest percentage (39.9) of Negroes of any of the 57 largest cities in America.

In 1900 58,870 Negroes were counted in Birmingham's total population of 140,420. Today, in the area, of 558,928 persons, 208,459 are Negroes.

Comparatively, in proportion of Negroes, Atlanta, the capital of a state which has more Negroes than any state in the union, has a Negro percentage of only 24.7 compared to Birmingham's 39.9—or two out of every five residents.

The percentage of Negroes in New Orleans is 29.2 of the total population—or more than 10 per cent less than Birmingham's.

Dr. Truss says the bi-racial aspects of the Birmingham-Jefferson County community is one of the most significant single points for consideration of needs and resources.

Its effect on education, business, and health, are prime considerations in Birmingham's self-evaluation.

Truss found it noteworthy, too, that other than Negroes, Birmingham's other non-white groups are nominal. Only 157 persons are neither Caucasian nor Negro.

Birmingham, he shows, has one of the smallest percentages of foreign-born of any great American city. Only 5297 persons living in Birmingham were not born in the U. S.

Doubtlessly, other audit workers point out, many Negroes have left Birmingham for Chicago, Detroit, and other great Northern cities.

But even in view of a higher birth rate, a Negro population increase of 191, 489 in 50 years would scarcely indicate Negroes were leaving here at a high rate.

YOUTH CRIME TIED TO NEW MIGRATION

Philadelphia Judge Ascribes Problem to Influx From South and Puerto Rico

By WILLIAM G. WEART

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, July 17—The migration into Philadelphia of about 500,000 persons from the South and from Puerto Rico since 1930 was blamed today for the city's juvenile-delinquency problem.

Presiding Judge Adrian Bonnelly of the Municipal Court, which handles all juvenile cases, thus traced the problem in testimony before the Juvenile Delinquency subcommittee of the United States Senate Judiciary Committee.

The subcommittee, headed by Senator Thomas C. Hennings Jr., Democrat of Missouri, completed two days of public hearings in the Federal Building here. Earlier this year, the group held hearings in New York and Chicago.

Judge Bonnelly said the city was in the midst of the "crisis" he foresaw in 1924, when he told a Congressional committee that if the doors of Ellis Island were closed to European immigrants, the doors would be opened to migration from the South of "technically bonded slaves" into the industrial cities of the North.

Racial Changes Noted

Since 1930, the judge reported, the racial composition of Philadelphia has been changed by integration of new inhabitants from the South and Puerto Rico.

Between 1930 and 1953, he testified, "the number of white children 7 to 15 years residing in Philadelphia increased 2.9 per cent, while the number of non-white children increased 89 per cent."

Judge Bonnelly told the subcommittee "these so-called juvenile delinquents are the offspring of unmarried mothers, putative fathers, unsanitary homes and lack of leadership among their own people."

"The result," he said, "is debauchery."

Philadelphia has a problem of its own, he said.

"There is no equal to it and, on the basis of migration alone, it is a Federal responsibility," he declared.

Volunteer Plans Scored

Paul D'Ortona, city Councilman-at-Large, told the committee that too many volunteer groups were making prevention and control of delinquency more difficult.

"We cannot combat this disease by volunteer committee groups, programing their own methods and ideas," he said. "Until these volunteers are willing to carry out a uniform program their efforts will be in vain."

Victor H. Blanc, District Attorney of Philadelphia, reported an increase in juvenile crime here in the first four months of this year. He said a total of 2,303 boys and girls under 18 were arrested in the first four months of 1959, compared with 2,179 in the corresponding period of last year.

These figures, he added, do not include the number of juveniles whose cases were disposed of by some process other than court hearings.

Stassen Urges Halt To Negro Migration

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Harold E. Stassen says that if he is elected mayor of Philadelphia, he will stop an alleged heavy migratory flow of Negroes from the South to this city.

The Republican candidate said Wednesday night Democratic Mayor Richardson Dilworth had declared "the only relief for Southern poverty is Northern migration."

Stassen, in a debate with Dilworth who is seeking reelection, said:

"The policies springing from this concept during the past years have already caused serious damage to all the people of our great city and if continued for the next four years will lead to tragic results for all the people of both races in Philadelphia and adjacent counties."

Stassen said he would end the migration into Philadelphia and then lift the living standards.

Dilworth replied briefly on this subject that Stassen was planning "to make political gains among both whites and Negroes by setting one against the other."

Stassen, former governor of Minnesota and aide to President Eisenhower, said the migration comes from four sources.

Labor contractors, he said, bring in men and women to work on farms in suburban areas of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Second, relatives and friends bring in others.

Third, men and women are attracted by "reports of soft relief policies and overgenerous welfare programs" and fourth, "by families sent to Philadelphia with one-way tickets by authorities in other communities who wish to send the particular families away from their previous homes."

Stassen said he would stop labor exploiters and prosecute them and would get the help of federal and state governments "to stop this migratory flow."

Then, said Stassen, he would establish a committee of clergymen of both races who would convince the residents of Philadelphia of the unsoundness of bringing more migrants in.

Stassen said there had been developed under Dilworth and former Democratic Gov. George M. Leader a policy of reciprocity in relief and welfare with other states. This, said Stassen, he would end.

Finally, Stassen asserted, he would stop the one-way migratory flow through cooperation with the federal government.

It was the most detailed explanation by Stassen of his plans on migration, a theme he has been stressing in his campaign.

Dilworth, as he has throughout the campaign, stood on his record of the past four years and outlined his plans for further city development.

Expects Small Use of Main Branch By Negroes; Cites Reading Records

By JOHN PENNINGTON

Atlanta Library Director John C. Settlemayer said Saturday he does not expect any large scale usage by Negroes of the main downtown library, which was quietly integrated last week.

He based this belief, he said, on past records showing that Negroes are not as interested in reading as are white library patrons.

16h

The library board reported in July, 1955, that the use of Negro library facilities was so low "that if they served white instead of Negro patrons the board would seriously consider closing them."

Mr. Settelmayer said book checkouts by Negroes since then have not increased — except in the use of a bookmobile sent out to serve Negroes in 1957.

* * *

THE LIBRARY director said checkout records show white library patrons of Atlanta reading books at a rate of five or six per capita per year. The rate for Negroes is less than one book per person, he said.

The Atlanta Library Board ordered the main downtown library integrated last Tuesday, without making any public announcement that it was being done.

Chairman Hix Green said the board hoped the new policy, of serving Negroes at the library, could be put into effect "with as little fanfare as possible."

THE DECISION to allow Negroes to use the library was made at a meeting attended by board members, Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Police Chief Herbert Jenknis and City Atty. Jack Savage.

Following the meetnig, Chairman Green told reporters that there had been no change in the library's policy on segregation. The library previously had denied Negro requests to use the facility.

But on Wednesday morning, it was learned, Director Settelmayer instructed library personnel to serve white and Negro patrons alike.

A FEW NEGROES have used the library since then, although there was no public announcement of the board decision.

Mr. Settelmayer said Atlanta was—before last week—one of the last large cities of the South enforcing a policy of segregation in public libraries.

Other cities which permit Negroes to use public library facilities, he said, are Miami, Charlotte, N.C.; Louisville, Ky.; Chattanooga and Knoxville, Tenn.; New Orleans, and a number of Texas cities.

Some of these opened their doors to Negroes prior to the 1954 Supreme Court decision on segregation in schools.

SEVERAL EFFORTS have been made by Negroes since the 1954 desegregation decision to gain entrance to the main library. Several were made recently, just prior to the board's decision.

Petitions on behalf of Negro citizens were offered in June, 1955, and in October, 1957. Both were denied.

The library board's segregation policy was put into writing following the 1955 petition. The board wrote John Glustrom of 860 Wellbourne Ave., NE, one of the petitioners, that it had long been interested in providing public library service for Negroes.

* * *

THE LETTER pointed up facilities provided, and added that "the complete resources of the Atlanta Public Library are available to the Negroes through their main library and their branches."

"The response of the Negroes has been discouraging," the board letter said.

"In 1954 only 71,674 volumes were borrowed for home use from the three agencies (Negro branches). The use of these facilities is so low that if they served white instead of Negro patrons the board would seriously consider closing them.

* * *

"IN VIEW OF these facts," the board decided, " . . . before the the board can consider making additional facilities available at the main library the Negroes must first demonstrate their need by using the facilities provided for them."

Though county laws struck down—

Right-to-work advocates hail California decisions

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20—(AP)—The State Supreme Court in two decisions Tuesday held county right-to-work ordinances were an invalid invasion of state jurisdiction.

But the 4-2 decision in a Trinity County appeal "in effect gives us a state right-to-work law," declared an employer attorney.

So-called right-to-work laws ban labor contracts requiring workers to belong to a union as a condition of holding their jobs. They also prohibit employers from refusing to hire persons because of non-membership in unions.

The Trinity County decision established a new ruling case on organizational picketing in California.

THE SUPREME COURT, in a reversal of former decisions, declared the state labor code makes illegal union picketing of any firm where a majority of employes do not want to become union members.

"In effect, this gives us a state right-to-work law," said Nathan Berke, California Assn. of Employers attorney.

"It's not quite as broad as the proposition voted down in November, but it's mighty close."

Justice Roger J. Traynor, dissenting strongly from the majority, said the four justices had "usurped legislative power" in "striking a new balance between organized and unorganized labor and employers."

BERKE DRAFTED the right-to-work ordinances in Trinity and San Benito Counties which the Supreme Court held were unconstitutional.

The court testing of the county measures started before the 1958 election campaign in which a state right-to-work proposition was a top issue.

Democrat Edmund G. Brown opposed it and won the governorship. William F. Knowland, former U. S. senator running against Brown, backed the right-to-work proposition. Knowland and the proposition were defeated by wide margins.

The court's six justices unanimously held that local right-to-work ordinances were invalid under the state labor code, "in substance a bill of rights for workmen in California."

BUT ON THE question of organizational picketing, Justice B. Rey Schauer's majority opinion said:

"Neither an unauthorized union or pretending employe's agent nor an employer acting alone or in concert with any unauthorized employe representative may lawfully attack an established employer-employe relationship."

Schauer's opinion also declared the same parties cannot "compel the unwilling employes to join the particular unchosen union as a condition of retaining or obtaining employment."

In his dissent Justice Traynor said: "I am convinced that union or closed shop agreements are lawful whether or not a majority of the employes wish them. The majority decisions do not state that any of the cases so holding were wrongly decided.

"But, apparently convinced that the time is now ripe for striking a new balance between the rights of organized and unorganized labor and employers, they seize upon the jurisdictional strike act to achieve an objective foreign to its purpose."

Mrs. Fannye Luckett Bracey, of Jackson, who has been employed as a Consumer Consultant for the Carnation Company, makers of the famous Carnation Milk Products, for the past several months recently received her first promotion.

Mrs. Bracey who in the past has been working mainly with housewives will now be working with clinics, PTA groups, and Parent Study Groups.

Mrs. Bracey who was already widely known in Jackson and the state before being connected with the Carnation Company is a member of Christ Temple Church, president of the Senior Choir, Captain of Group One of the Church Building Fund Drive, and a member of the Women's Auxiliary.

She is a member of the Just Twelve Art Club, The Mississippi Teachers Association, The American Home Economics Association, and the Alpha Phi Beta Sorority, and the Y. W. C. A.

She is a former Home-making teacher at Lanier High School here, and Bruce High School, Bruce, Miss.

Mrs. Bracey is heard every Tuesday Morning in "Bill's Kitchen over radio station W. C. K. J. here.

Gas Range To Be Given Away During 3-Night Demonstration

Gifts Galore Have Been Donated By City Merchants For the Benefit of All

Marie Connley, Carnation Demonstrator, Arrives

Mrs. Marie Connley, demonstrator for Carnation Milk Company, arrived by plane from Dallas, Wednesday evening to close out plans for the Annual Black Dispatch Cooking and Home Demonstration School t be held at the Douglass Center this week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Doors will open at 6:00 p.m. each day. There will be entertainment, refreshments and gifts for everyone. Exhibitors will display the latest in kitchen equipment, televisions, ranges, refrigerators, sewing machines, and many other household appliances.

A brand new Tappan Gas Range will be given away free to the lucky person whose name will be drawn from the registration cards. A brand new Atlas sewing machine will also be given away free, along with many other valuable gifts too numerous to mention. Abram Ross will be on hand each night when he will make his regular broadcast. He will remain throughout the demonstration to help lend life and interest to the affair. Bill Parker and his band will furnish entertainment.

Among the many merchants who have donated prizes to be given away this year are:

The TG&Y Stores, Sneed's Furniture Co., Walker's Furniture Co., Candy Man, Carter's Shopping Center, Shawnee's Best Flour, LeOra's Beauty College, Continental Bread Co., National Self Service Shoe Store, Donna's Beauty Salon, Clover Leaf Barber Shop, Triangle Beauty Salon, Mathues Service Station, OK Food Market, Kennard's Redbud Super Market, Kimmel's TV and Radio Service, Allred's Laundry, Maurine and Madelyn's School of Beauty, Everett's Skelly Service Station, Clover Leaf Barber Shop, Roxie and Georgia's Beauty Shop, James Gordon Snack Bar, Irene Hembre Beauty Parlor, White House Cafe, Best Bet Bar, Lovi Gibson Hair Stylist, Dorothy Harrington Cleaners, Luella Dot Hair Stylist, Luster's Motel, Carr Barber Shop, Cecil Amusement Co., Fleta Mae Beauty Shop, Bill Kelly Dye Shop, Carr Beauty Shop, Effie's Grill, Golden Oak Barber Shop, Butler's Service Station, Tennyson Cleaners, Club Avonne, Capri Club, Caesar's Flowers, East 4th Street Cleaners, Charmette Beauty Shop, Wilson & Co., Dennis Donuts, Mason's Furniture Co., Pittsburgh Paint & Glass Co., M. A. Walker Electric, N. R. Feed and Hardware, Jenkins Music Store, and Beam's Seatcover Center.

CONSULTANT ARRIVES—Greeting Mrs. Marie Connally of Dallas, Texas, home consultant for the Carnation Milk Co., upon her arrival in Oklahoma City Wednesday were Jack Hall, editor of the Black Dispatch, and Clark Case, representative of Carnation Milk Co. Mrs. Connally, who will conduct cooking demonstrations at the annual Black Dispatch Cooking School, is being presented a dozen American Beauty roses from the local publishing company. The school is being held three nights: Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Dixie RR Hires 27 Firemen

Defender
Chicago, Ill.
Oct 1-26-59

ATLANTA, Ga. — The Central of Georgia Railroad has employed 27 young Negro men as firemen in recent months, it was disclosed by the International Association of Railway Employees this week.

This was hailed as one of the largest employment gains by Negroes in the operating department of American railroads during the past 20 years by J. W. Whittaker, president, and Cyrille Salvant, secretary, of the IARE.

Practically all of the newly hired Negro firemen on the Central of Georgia are high school graduates or men of college background.

The International Association of Railway Employees challenged in the courts the well organized and infamous fight of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen's union to drive Negro firemen from the railroads. Whittaker of Albany, Ga., and Salvant of Mobile, Ala., as officers of the IARE, were in the vanguard of the struggle to save the Negro fireman's job.

SEVERAL MURDERED

The BLF&E's campaign to make the engine cabs of southern railroads lilywhite followed a wave of terrorism which led to the murder of several Negro firemen. These men were shot from the coal tender of steam locomotives when their trains stopped at isolated points to take water or were fired upon as they sat in the cabs of their engines. Most of the incidents occurred on the Illinois Central Railroad in Mississippi.

This organization, which bars Negroes from membership, in suspected conspiracy with a vast majority of railroads in the south, used the Southeastern Carriers Agreement in its designs to oust Negro firemen from their employment.

The scheme met its first challenge in the Ed Teague case on the Gulf, Mobile & Ohio Railroad in 1940, which was set up through efforts of the NAACP's J. L. Le Flore of Mobile.

In subsequent court cases, which included the Tunstall v. Norfolk & Western, Steele v L&N, Salvant v. LN, Wright v. Seaboard and Palmer v. Southern, the Negro fireman was successful in not only maintaining his seniority and full job rights but also won the privilege to be promoted to engineer.

The Southeastern Carriers Agreement, which the railroads signed with the BLFE, provides that 51 percent, or a majority, of the firemen on any division of a railroad must be of the white race.

In addition to Whittaker and Salvant, other officers of the IARE are William Henderson, Waycross, Ga., vice president, and H. W. Simpson, Houston, Texas chairman of the board

One of the founders of the organization was L. R. Moloy of Jackson, Tenn., who died several years ago.

Negro Pilot Plans Bid for Airline Job

DENVER, Jan. 11 (AP)—The Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission says a Negro aviator has advised the commission he intends to enter Continental Airlines' next pilot training class.

If successful, he would become the airline's first Negro pilot and presumably the first to be employed by a major U.S. airline.

The word came last night from Marlon D. Green, 29, of Lansing, Mich., a former Air Force captain and now a pilot for the Michigan Highway Dept.

The commission ruled last month that the Denver-based airline was "guilty of a discriminatory and unfair employment practice" in its earlier refusal to hire the Negro. It ordered Continental to process Green's application for acceptance as a co-pilot trainee.

Cite Gains Made In Civil Rights, Job Opportunities In Dee Cee

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — One of the most progressive steps made toward civil and human rights in the District of Columbia during 1958 was the creation of a Human Relations council, declared Eugene Davidson, president of the local NAACP branch.

In his annual report, presented to a membership meeting last week, Davidson referred to this council as "the greatest hope and greatest threat to democratic progress."

It is a hope, he said, "if properly administered and if it chooses to tackle and solve, with deliberate speed, the difficult problems existing in the field of human relations. And it will be a threat to democratic advancement if it becomes a study group or a buffer to protect the commissioners or an agency of delay."

Davidson recalled that five years ago the District Commissioners issued an order declaring that the policy of the district government was against discrimination in employment.

Human Relation Council

But it was not until this year that the commissioners, upon recommendation of several organizations, including the Urban League and NAACP, created a human relations council to implement this policy.

Another progressive step in Washington was the decision made by the American Bar association to change its constitution to permit Negro membership.

The police department, since the dramatic expose staged in 1957 by the D. C. NAACP branch, has made long strides in its attitude toward Negro personnel. In spite of the still-existing unfair system of rating for promotion, the department has for the first time in history promoted a Negro to sergeant. The department today has the largest percentage of Negro corporals in history.

Since the NAACP hearings, the department has promoted its largest percentage of Negro plain clothes detectives. Six out of 20 have been promoted to detective sergeants, precinct detectives and probationary detectives.

First Detective Sergeant

The department has a Negro corporal, two Negro detectives assigned to the homicide squad, two detectives assigned to the fifth precinct, two Negro officers assigned to the health inspectors, and for the first time a Negro detective sergeant was assigned for a short period as acting head of the detective bureau.

Integrated squad cars are now seen on the streets of the city and for the first time Negroes are assigned to squad cars in Precincts 14, 19 and 9.

The commissioners this year prohibited the use of uniformed police to collect funds for the maintenance of segregated Boys clubs. While this procedure decreased public funds to the extent that all but two of the clubs closed, it proved a great advance toward democracy.

Due to the work of the NAACP health committee, in cooperation with the Medico-Chirugical society, Negro physicians are now on the staffs of all hospitals in the District of Columbia, except Casualty and Columbia. Negro patients are accepted and given medical care in all hospital, although in some, the facilities are separate, but equal. This problem is still being explored by the NAACP. In some institutions, however, there is complete integration, while in others, there is only partial integration of patients.

There are Negro representatives on the Health and Welfare council of the National Capital area, the President's Committee on Youth Fitness and the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

The NAACP health committee hopes to accomplish in 1959 the appointment of Negro physicians to the examining board for policemen and firemen, and as assistant director of public health, and a deputy coroner.

Negro Salesgirls Employed

During 1958, three large department stores changed their employment policies and began employing Negro salesgirls.

The telephone company has employed four additional Negro operators in the past few months, and the Negro office in uptown Washington has been closed and the personnel integrated into the main office downtown.

No significant gains were made in the employment of Negroes in public utilities, banks, building associations and title companies.

The major crafts unions of the building trades hold fast to their policy of discrimination in apprenticeship and journeymanship programs. The chief offenders are the electricians and plumbers unions.

Fire Department Holds Out

The District Fire department continues to be a big blot on Washington's progressive picture. Although integration of government operations were ordered about four years ago, nothing but token integration exists. One Negro fireman on duty at the time in an otherwise all-white company. No white firemen have been assigned to all-Negro companies.

Davidson pointed out that "if America is symbolic of world salvation, the nation's capital must be symbolic of America and the model city of the world, particularly the darker nations. Washington must, therefore, be the shining example of our firm dedication to democracy."

Use of Negro Clerks By 3 Stores Here Told

Victor R. Daly of the United States Employment Service said last night that three department stores have broken the color barrier in hiring sales staffs and now employ 33 Negroes.

The three are Kann's, Hecht's and Lansburgh's, Daly said. During the Christmas holidays, 85 Negro sales persons were employed, Daly said. He added that solution of this problem in the past year is significant for local Negro employment.

Daly, who is assistant to the director of the local office, spoke before the Community Council for Social Progress at the Arlington Unitarian Church. He also has served as a consultant on minority problems in employment.

The building trades continue to be the most outstanding example of discrimination in employment, Daly said. For the most part, they have withstood pressure from the Commissioner's Council on Human Relations and have managed to avoid complying with the policy of non-discriminatory hiring policies for Federal projects.

3000 Face Layoff in Health Unit

Budget Cuts May Affect 3 Other City Departments

By Connie Feeley
Staff Reporter

Three thousand city employes in the Health Department will be furloughed for three days unless Congress restores cuts in the District budget.

The furlough plans were announced yesterday by the District Commissioners, along with proposed furloughs in three other departments—Highway, Library and Occupations.

All of the proposed layoffs result from House action last month cutting a $15.3 million supplemental money request to about $14 million to cover pay raises to District employes for the remainder of the present fiscal year.

In a quick survey following the House action the Commissioners estimated that 8,000 employes — not including St. Elizabeths workers — would have to be furloughed from April 1 to July 1.

Yesterday the Commissioners, in effect, admitted their estimate was hasty and, in some cases, in error. They said they have subsequently huddled with department heads and worked out ways of curtailing services an spreading wage cuts among larger numbers of employes.

Furloughs now planned—unless the Senate restores the House reductions—are as follows:

- Health Department—3000 employes would be laid off without pay for three days each during the payroll periods beginning May 17 and ending June 27.
- Public Libraries—12 staff members would be furloughed during all of June.
- Corrections — No furloughs necessaryr despite an earlier estimate that 25 workers would be laid off.
- Occupations and Professions—Three employes would be furloughed during May or June. Allowances and travel pay for members of the 20 boards, commissions and committees under the department's control would be reduced.
- Highways and Traffic—26 employes would be laid off during May and June.
- St. Elizabeth's—about 150 employes would be furloughed during May and June. Equipment purchases and issuance of drugs would be curtailed except for absolutely necessary needs. Dietary standard would be lowered.
- Park Maintenance — 30 temporary maintenance workers would be laid off April 10 to July 1.
- Welfare—At least 30 employes would be furloughed in May and June. Relief payments to all welfare recipients have already been cut 15 per cent.

Once Lily-White Plant Hires Negroes; All Well

WASHINGTON (SPECIAL)—What happens in a community and an industrial plant where a major employer, for the first time, hires Negroes?

A graphic and satisfying answer to this question was given to the President's committee on Government Contracts at its September meeting here by D. Jerome H. Holland, president of Delaware State College. The ex-Cornell All - American football player had been invited by the Committee to describe plant and community impact of initial Negro hiring by the Dover, Delaware, plant of the International Latex Corporation.

"From my observations and reports," Dr Holland told the Committee "community reaction to the new policy seems to be good. Teachers at the college have told me that while they were shopping in the town, white citizens have remarked to them about the change at Latex and what a worthwhile move it was.

NOTHING DEROGATORY

"I have made a number of telephone calls to key persons in the community who have stated that they have heard nothing derogatory of the charge and, in the main, have found most people expressing a sense of pride and satisfaction. They have praised management for the positive way in which it has handled and willingly supported the program."

Dr Holland went on to relate to the Committee members several instances of warm receptions accorded the newly- hired Negroes by plant employees.

"One of the first human incidents that happened within the plant concerned the first Negro woman who was employed as a secretary. Soon after her arrival she received a fine letter from another secretary welcoming her to Latex and stating how pleased she was to see the company hiring all qualified citizens. To me, this type of friendliness appearing in a newly integrated situation in southern Delaware was worthy of note."

DOVER SITUATION

Less than a month before Dr Holland gave the President's Committee the benefit of his observations on the Dover situation, the Latex corporation had never employed a single Negro, in any capacity. During that month, however, under the persuasive influence of the Committee, which is charged by an Executive Order of President Eisenhower with monitoring the government contracts clause requiring non - discrimination in employment, the company had completely reversed its policy, and employed Negroes as secretaries, laboratory helpers and technicians cafeteria workers, machine operators and general factory workers.

"BREAKTHROUGH" COMMENTED

At the conclusion of Dr Holland's report, Vice President Richard Nixon, who is chairman of the Government Contracts Committee, commented warmly on the local reaction to the "Dover breakthrough." He made special note of the fact that it had been accomplished, without incident, in an area where there had been widespread apprehension that "it won't work here."

Mr Nixon said that he and the other members of the President's Committee should be greatly encouraged in their promotion elsewhere of the Equal Job Opportunity program by the success of the Committee's Delaware project.

Dr Holland, who is known affectionately to a host of friends in educational, government and sports circles as "Brud," summarized his comments on the Delaware accomplishments as follows:

CLOSE TOGETHER

"There is reason to believe that the success of this program may eventually bring forth a breakthrough in other industries in Delaware that have not upgraded Negroes or offered them white collar jobs because they believe the local social climate is not ready to accept such a program. In a small state such as Delaware in spite of strong geographical differences, the people live fairly close together and may be influenced by what is happening in a nearby locale.

"If demagogues can spread their spirit of hate and prejudice, something positive can also spread to other areas from a local progressive program. This is a task for the enlightened leadership of the community."

In concluding, Dr Holland commended the President's Committee for its role in the accomplishment of the "Dover breakthrough."

Working as Coding Clerk in Pentagon

Frank W. Hogan, jr., was recently named to the position of cryptographic coding clerk with the U.S Army Communications agency in the Pentagon building in Washington, D.C. His duties are enciphering and deciphering coded radio and wire communications. He was sent to three communications schools in preparation for his position.

Hogan has five years of experience in the field, previously with the U. S. Air Force after his enlistment in 1954. While in the air force he worked out of the Pentagon for a year before being transferred to Japan where he served with the air reserves. After four years he was discharged with the rank of airman first class.

After spending several months at his home in Des Moines he again went to Washington where he worked with the police department for about a year before being named to his present position.

A graduate of Des Moines Tech, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hogan, sr., of 1146 2nd place and the brother of Mrs. George Spencer. During his high school days he won three key awards for his art displays. He also participated on sport teams with the air force while serving in Japan.

Salary-Setting by Agency Heads To Be Asked in White-Collar Jobs

By Jerry Kluttz
Staff Reporter

A plan to give the President and Federal agency heads greater authority to fix the salaries of their million classified employes, including 200,000 in the Washington area, is being drafted by the staff of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The Committee staff has been encouraged in its work by top officials who feel the Classification Act is too restrictive to meet needs of today's Government. A dozen agency experts on pay are working with the Committee staff on its proposal.

Chairman Tom Murray (D-Tenn.) ordered the study seeking to isolate and remove inequities in the Classification Act and suggest changes to reward employes for superior work. As being drafted, the Classification Act would be given a major overhauling to provide:

• That the Classification Act's 18 grades be compressed and streamlined into 10 grades with wider salary ranges between minimums and maximums and larger in-grade steps. Congress would retain the power to set minimum and maximum rates of each grade.

• That the President could make general revisions of salaries within those limits whenever changing economic conditions justify them. This could lead to an annual review and adjustment of white-collar salaries similar to the system used for Uncle Sam's 750,000 blue-collar workers. Pay raises given white-collar people in recent years have lagged far behind those of the latter employes.

• That the head of each agency would have authority to slot his employes in the new grade structure, but that no one could be given a pay cut as a result. The agency head would have ample power to reward employes for superior work. He could also hire promising new employes above the grade minimums.

• "Police" power for the Civil Service Commission over grades and salaries of classified employes. CSC would see to it that policies and restrictions laid down by Congress are carried out by the agencies.

RAC Engineers Fill Role Of Pioneers In "Missile" Work

The electronics engineer, whose job it is to put the exploring vehicle into outer space and to guide and control it in its flight, is fulfilling the role of the pioneer throughout history . . . the discoverer of new ways, new worlds, new knowledge for the lasting benefit of mankind.

He can be found in the industry's vast research labs, in the bright and busy factories, along the great expanses of the proving grounds, working toward an achievement that is vital to our national defense and to all future generations.

Many of the Radio Corporation of America's "missile pioneers" are united in the common objective of national defense within five departments of the Defense Electronic Products Division. It is an organization already famed for many notable technological accomplishments.

The Missile and Surface Radar Department at Moorestown, New Jersey, for example, has designed and developed complete defensive and offensive weapons systems which automatically single out the enemy and destroy him without human intervention. Its "Insrtumentation Radar" unit is so accurate that it could be used to call a six-inch metal baseball fair or foul at a distance of 90 miles.

RCA's Airborne System Department in Camden, New Jersey, is assisting, among other projects, in the design of an automatic aircraft identification and landing instructions system, using computer techniques, which is expected to lead to greater air safety.

The Surface Communications Department of RCA also in Camden, is a major source of advanced tactical communication systems, ranging in size from its working model of a micro-medular personal radio built inside of a fountain pen casing, to its North Atlantic Tropospheric Scatter Communications System of 20 stations.

The "brain" that will guide a Thor missile to a target up to 1500 and more miles away is one of the many important projects of RCA's West Coast Electronic Products Department in Los Angeles.

The new Missile Electronics and Controls Department, at Burlington, Mass., rounds out RCA Defense Electronic Products organization. Working closely with its "sister" departments the new installation will provide the missilonic specialization demanded in an expanding system age.

Architect gets license to work in every state

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — L. Quincy Jackson, architectural engineering professor at Tennessee State University was recently extended the privilege of practicing his profession in any state in the nation.

L. QUINCY JACKSON

"You should be justifiably proud of your record which has allowed you to attain the National Council of Architectural Registration Boards Certificate," NCARB executive director James H. Sadler told Jackson.

SPECIALIZING IN organic architecture, L. Quincy Jackson is a graduate of Kansas State College School of Engineering and received the master of science degree in architecture from the University of Oklahoma in Norman.

A native of Wewoka, Okla., Mr. Jackson came to Tennessee State in 1954. He had a private practice in architecture for four years in Oklahoma City and is a member of the American Institute of Architects.

Farm Workers Leave Delta For Florida

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 13. — (UPI) — Several hundred farm laborers said tearful goodbys in the Mississippi Delta during the week end, threw assorted baggage aboard school-type buses and were transported from their homes to the Florida citrus groves.

They'll stay in Florida until the oranges and grapefruit are harvested. Then the buses will rumble back to Mississippi in time for spring planting.

The movement of these few hundred laborers, mostly men and mostly Negroes, came midway in what is one of the largest interstate seasonal labor movements in the nation.

About 8,500 Mississippi laborers, most of whom participated in the cotton harvest last fall, had already been taken to Florida before the week end. An estimated 6,000 Mississippi workers will be in Florida by the end of the month.

The "temporary migration" is vitally important to Mississippi in two ways according to L. Lane Hart of the state Employment Security Commission.

Mr. Hart said the Mississippi lines of applicants for foodstuffs distributed under the Federal Government's Surplus Commodities Relief Program will be shorter because of it.

He said the day laborers are expected to send their families in this state an estimated two million dollars from their pay roll. The circulation of this money is certain to benefit Mississippi business activity.

Race Issue Used In Labor Dispute

Teamsters Accused Of Plan To Stir Up Feelings

MIAMIAN'S LETTER CITED

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 25. — Senate rackets probers said Wednesday the racial integration issue in the South was made a factor in a labor dispute in Miami.

They confronted Dave Frechett, Miami Teamster Union official, with a letter over his signature proposing the use of "the segregationist feeling here concerning Negroes" in a dispute with Acme Concrete, a Miami concern.

Frechett, secretary and business representative of Miami Teamsters Local 390, invoked the Fifth Amendment on all questions about the letter. It was addressed to James Hoffa and dated March 18, 1958.

The letter proposed that Hoffa put up Teamster money to finance the purchase of a home in the name of a Negro, who never would get title to it.

Slow Up Financing

It said that refusal to sell to a Negro would slow up mortgage financing backed by Federal agencies, thus forcing a contractor to end the labor dispute.

The letter suggested that "in light of this segregation thing here, this (the presence of the families of Negro laborers) ruins the sales for the day."

It continued that the "crowning blow" of a phony purchase would be:

"If the sales agent refuses to sell him (a Negro) a house or hedges around about it, a formal complaint is immediately registered with the FHA and VA, who as you know, whenever any Federal money or guarantees are involved, can brook no discrimination.

'Gimmick' Used

"This usually ends it (the dispute), as the builder gets shook up about having his mortgage financing fouled up."

The letter said a similar "gimmick" has been used by Bernie Rubin, head of a laborer's union, in sending squads of Negro laborers and their families to new housing developments to make it appear they were possible purchasers of homes.

The Frechett letter was put into evidence as a sidelight issue in a hearing devoted mainly to exploring alleged mobster efforts to infiltrate and dominate the juke box and some other coin operated machine enterprises in the Miami area.

Senator Frank Church (D., Idaho) declared, "This is as outrageous an abuse as any that has come to the committee's attention. Here is a conspiracy to capitalize on deep-seated public feeling . . . It is a flagrant instance of intentional exploitation of the colored people."

Migratory Workers End Crop Jobs in Florida

TALLAHASSEE, May 22 (UPI) Migratory workers by the thousands are moving out of Florida, the Industrial Commission said today.

Chairman James T. Vocelle said 33,908 workers had completed Florida's winter harvest season and were working their way north following the crops. Vocelle said the number was 2,004 less this year than in 1958 when 25,927 workers moved north.

Collins Will Seek Increase In State's Jobless Benefits

TALLAHASSEE — (AP) — Liberalization of Florida's jobless pay program will be asked of the 1959 Legislature by Gov. LeRoy Collins.

COLLINS

The governor told the Cabinet Tuesday he will seek to expand unemployment compensation benefits, now pegged by state law at a maximum weekly payment of $30 for a period of 16 weeks.

Collins didn't specify what he will recommend. However, two years ago he endorsed the recommendation of the advisory council of the Industrial Commission which sought $30 a week for 20 weeks.

Collins made the announcement after reviewing for the Cabinet his meeting Monday with President Eisenhower. Collins went to Washington in his role as chairman of the National Governors' Conference.

The President invited Collins and the other eight governors who make up the executive committee of the Conference to the White House to urge them to use their influence to improve state unemployment compensation standards.

Collins said the President wants the jobless plan improved, but agreed with the governors that the states should retain control of amounts to be paid, duration of benefits and eligibility of workers.

A bill by Sen. John Kennedy (D., Mass.), is pending in Congress which would fix by federal law minimum benefits to which the states would be required to adhere. Collins said the governors are firm in their opposition to this measure.

The governor said Florida is at the bottom of the states in benefits and the lowest in duration of benefits.

The Industrial Commission advisory council is recommending the program favored by the Eisenhower administration — 50 per cent of the average weekly earnings of qualified workers for a maximum period of 26 weeks.

Charles Mann, director of the Florida Unemployment Compensation program, said average pay of covered workers is $72 a week.

This would mean that the maximum weekly benefit under the recommendation would be $36.

Collins also indicated he would ask the Legislature to strengthen controls on state surplus property.

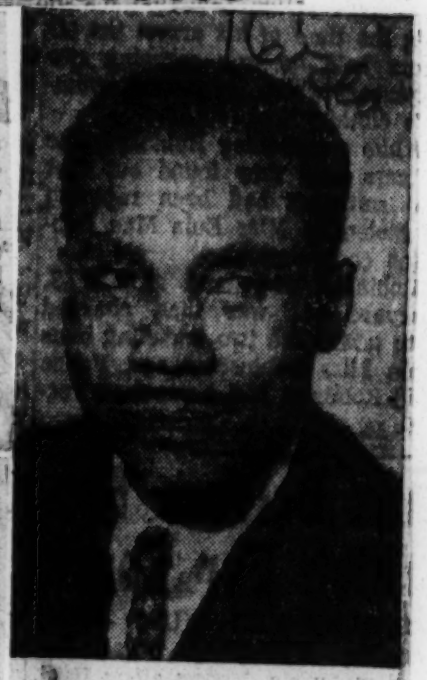
He said his study of central purchasing systems in other states showed substantial savings could be achieved by transferring surplus equipment of one agency to another.

In other actions the cabinet:

APPROVED retirement of $37,333 worth of Buccaneer Trail refunding bonds for the toll road from Fernandina Beach to Jacksonville.

DEFERRED action on approving a pay raise of $1,040 a year for Executive Director A. C. Stubbs of the Industrial Commission.

AGREED to turn over to Jackson County about 7½ acres of land owned by the state hospital at Chattahoochee to permit construction of a road from Sneads to Lake Seminole.



CLINTON MOON has been appointed public relations director of the Sir John, Miami's luxurious resort hotel. Moon, a native of Birmingham, Ala., has previously worked as field representative for the National Opinion Research Center of the University of Chicago and most recently as an account executive of Jesse J. Lewis and Associates, Inc., Birmingham Public Relations and Marketing Consultant firm.

South Dade's Migrants Heading North

See Story on Page 1B

South Dade's migrant laborers are beginning to trek north in search of new fields to pick.

But growers believe there will still be enough hands in the labor camps to finish harvesting the last of the crops this month.

Relief agencies say there may be more than enough — that unemployment is on the upswing as fields become barren and more and more persons are seeking help.

There's no dispute over one fact. This season's situation is a far cry from the disastrous, panicky days of 1957-58 when thousands of the roaming workers went hungry as weather killed the crops and their job chances.

At the Farsouth Emergency Aid station in Homestead, "between 15 and 20 families a day are coming in for food."

"We're giving them food," said Mrs. Ida Tibbets the director, "and a tank of gas to get them started north for new jobs."

Abney Cox, one of the more prominent growers in the area, said "the labor supply has been pretty well balanced this year with the crops."

Right now, those laid off in the tomato fields are finding work with the potato and bean harvests. "The out-migration is beginning," Cox said, "and we can only hope that enough persons will remain to help us finish out the season."

Dade County Agent John Campbell termed the labor supply "not overloaded or understaffed." Norris Clay, Florida State Employment Service manager at Princeton, is out of the city and FSES figures are not available.

There may be better days ahead for the migrant labor force facing disastrous seasons. Bills to be offered the upcoming legislative session call for a $500,000 emergency relief fund.

This "crisis kitty" would be released on orders of the governor and local committees would handle distribution of the fund, primarily for food.

Meanwhile, the Farsouth Emergency Aid organization made an appeal for canned goods and milk. "Bread is plentiful, thanks to the merchants," Mrs. Tibbets said, "but we need canned beans, tomatoes and other vegetables."

Among the migrants, she said, "a baked bean and tomato sandwich goes a long way toward filling an empty stomach."

Employment Drops Over One Million

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat 12-12-59

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The government reported Friday that the number of Americans holding jobs dropped by 1,191,000 last month, partly due to layoffs in autos and other industries hit by strike-induced steel shortages.

However, under the government's formula, the number of persons actually counted as unemployed increased by only 398,000-or 300,000 less than normal for November. Total unemployment stood at 3,670,000 and the number of employed persons at 65,640,000.

The Labor Department said official unemployment did not rise as much as expected partly because fewer women and teenagers than usual were looking for Christmas jobs. Since they did not seek employment, they were not counted on the jobless rolls.

One government economist ventured the opinion that unemployment would have risen only slightly if the steel strike had not forced layoffs in allied industries. Strikers are not counted as unemployed, but men forced out of work in other industries are.

FARM JOBS DECLINE

One of the major reasons for the 1,191,000 drop in employment was a decline of 523,000 farm jobs as the harvest season drew to a close. Total non-farm employment fell by 667,000, with "a substantial proportion" of the decline being attributed to layoffs in autos and other metal-working industries.

The Labor Department's report came just 24 hours after the government temporarily abandoned efforts to seek a settlement of the steel dispute. Federal mediators said in breaking off union-management talks Thursday that no substantial progress had been made.

One reason for the suspension was to allow Steelworkers President David J. McDonald to sit in on negotiations in Chicago with aluminum manufacturers. The steel talks may be resumed in a week or 10 days, depending on aluminum developments.

ECONOMY REMAINS STATIONARY

Several government economists said the November job report was affected by a variety of cross currents. But generally, they said, it showed the economy on dead center, neither rising nor falling.

The government's estimates were compiled a few days after the steelworkers returned to their jobs under an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction issued Nov. 7. Some 375,000 had returned to the mills at the time. But they had been counted as employed all along.

Despite the strike, the total employment figure of 65,640,000 was a record high for November, seven thousand from October. On the other hand, the number of jobless was the second highest total for any November since World War II.

The work week of factory production employes declined by 24 minutes to 39.9 hours, chiefly because of a cut of four hours in auto plants. Hourly earnings increased by two cents to $2.23, reflecting the return of steelworkers to their relatively high paid jobs.

Sees Hope For Migrant Worker

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.
Sat 12-5-59
P. 2

The migrant worker is "the excluded American," Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell said in a speech in Chicago. But it is a situation that will be resolved, he added.

"I feel that the long history of frustration in regard to agricultural employment is coming to an end," Mitchell said.

However, he explained that any solution to the problems connected with the traveling segment of labor must be made amid many conflicting interests.

The desires of private organizations, farm employers, family farmers who do not hire and the wage earner, himself, must be considered, the Secretary pointed out.

16i

"In the advancement of which of these interests does the true national interest lie?" he added.

Mitchell said migrant workers are outside the protection of most laws that protect other American working people, including minimum wage laws, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and state and local welfare laws. "They are denied, for the most part, the use of health and educational facilities in the communities through which they pass."

"To improve these conditions would be against the national interest, organized farm employers feel. They say it would mean extending the Federal minimum wage to agriculture, to Federal standards in housing of the labor force, and to a tide of intervention that will grind the farm employer between the costs he pays and the price he gets."

Another charge is that the small farmer will be harmed, but Mitchell explained cheap wages on big farms cheapen the labor of the small farmer and worsen his competitive position.

"Finally, there is the interest of the people themselves," Mitchell said, "the migrant worker can never take his place as a partner in American life unless he enjoys the protection of a minimum wage of some kind."

The Department of Labor is presently studying the matter, he said, adding, "I do not think the American people are going to permit the conditions of the migrant farm worker to be prolonged because of a resistance to change on the part of some associations."

U.S. Jobless Pushing to 4,000,000

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat 12-12-59

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment started a winter season climb in November that is expected to push the total well over four million early next year.

The Labor department reported Friday that employment declined from 66,831,000 in mid-October to 65,640,000 in mid-November, a drop of 1,191,000.

A decline of about one million had been expected.

16i

Unemployment rose from 3,272,000 to 3,670,000, an increase of 398,000. The Labor department said a rise of 700,000 had been expected on a seasonal basis.

A year ago employment was 64,653,000 and unemployment 3,833,000.

Despite the employment decline, the November figure represented the highest total of Americans ever employed in that month. The new unemployed total is the highest November idle figure since World War II, except for November last year.

Although the government's November job count was taken a few days after steelworkers returned to their jobs under a strike halting injunction, steel shortages continue to cause widespread unemployment, particularly in the auto industry.

Survey shows—

Jobless situation varies by states

By The Associated Press

HERE IS A rundown on some of the nation's worst-hit jobless areas:

MICHIGAN

Statewide unemployment averaged 405,000 or 13.8 per cent in 1958, compared to 199,000 or 6.8 per cent in 1957; Detroit jobless hit 217,000 or 14.6 per cent in January, 1959. Michigan's state labor force lost 53,500 in last year, chiefly workers who migrated to Michigan in flush times and have now returned to former homes.

Michigan has lost several plants which moved to other states with much debate on whether Michigan's "business climate" and taxes caused the shutdowns. Some jobless workers blame their plight on auto industry's price tags: "They've priced themselves out of the market."

PENNSYLVANIA

PENNSYLVANIA jobless totaled 508,000 or 11 per cent in January—close to highest in the country—compared with 435,000 a year earlier.

Heaviest unemployment is in the Uniontown-Connellsville soft coal area, where 24 per cent of the work force is idle.

William L. Batt Jr., state secretary of labor, says: "The outlook is brighter for the Spring, but we are recovering at a snail's pace. The only major industry in the state working double shift is the Bureau of Employment Security, where more than 4000 employes process the hundreds of thousands of claims for jobless compensation."

NEW YORK

STATEWIDE payment of jobless benefits in 1958 exceeded half a billion dollars, more than double those of 1957. New York City jobless hit 375,000 or 8 per cent in January, up 34,000 from figures of a year ago.

Economists report a slight improvement in most areas compared to last year; apparel industry hard hit. No major shutdowns and no large-scale layoffs.

In upstate New York, officials predict pickup in June in Albany, Troy-Schenectady industrial area, now suffering from sharp cuts in employment in electrical and other machinery factories.

CONNECTICUT

UNEMPLOYMENT is still severe, but less than a year ago.

Claims for unemployment compensation dropped from 68,678 in late February, 1958, to 53,996 in same period of 1959, but officials reported a high rate of exhaustions of jobless benefits.

Industry spokesmen cited heavy tax burdens, labor demands for higher wages, stiff profit-cutting competition and other adverse factors as impeding recovery—plus a lack of demand for goods.

INDIANA

"HIRING ACTIVITY appears to be heading upward," says William C. Stalnaker, director, Indiana employment security division.

Claims for jobless benefits dropped from 108,000 a year ago to 64,042 in late February.

Indiana steel mills provide bright spot with output up 65 per cent since April 1958.

NEW ENGLAND

CLAIMS FOR unemployment compensation have shown downward trend in all New England states since peak in mid-April, 1958, but total still tops pre-recession years of 1956-57.

Withdrawals of major industry have tapered off in last few months, but employment still lagging behind increased production.

WEST VIRGINIA

JOBLESS TOTAL remains 70,000, about the same as a year ago, but state officials say employment is picking up steadily. Expected upturns in coal consumption by public utilities, steel mills, etc., give rise to cautious optimism.

But Miles C. Stanley, president, AFL-CIO West Virginia Labor Federation, says: "I foresee very little permanent improvement."

As recently as 1952, the state had 100,000 miners, now down to 50,000. Coal production dropped 35 million tons between 1957 and 1958.

OHIO

WITH ADVENT of Spring, officials expect Ohio's sluggish Job situation to thaw somewhat.

At end of January, 186,000 Ohioans were seeking jobs through the state's public employment offices. Non-farm jobs totaled 2,958,000 in January, down 2.2 per cent from December.

Steel output has risen sharply in last few months to 90 per cent of rated capacity.

However, many recession-idled workers have used up their jobless pay benefits and are no longer counted as unemployed.

NEW JERSEY

STATEWIDE, jobless total in mid-February was estimated at 208,000, down 3000 from year-ago figures. Recession high was 22,000 in March-June, 1958.

Rise in employment is expected to start in April and continue through the year.

VIRGINIA

JOBLESS total dropped to 79,000 or 5.8 per cent in February, compared with 82,000 or 6.1 per cent in February, 1958. Employment rose slightly over figures of a year ago.

State officials say unemployment is beginning to show signs of easing, with expected pickup in construction, textiles, trades, Summer resort business.

MINNESOTA

UNEMPLOYMENT dropped less than 5000—from 121,600 to 116,000—between January, 1958, and January, 1959.

Minnesota's iron range production slumped to a 20-year low in 1958, largely due to meager demand for steel and competition from foreign ores.

Officials predict Spring upturn with greater demand for steel.

The Negro And Automation

By DR. A. L. DOWELL

Automation, as we know it today, represents a completely new theory of production. By use of automation greater productive returns are realized. Therefore, a greatly reduced labor force is needed. Automation is mechanism plus self control. It is not a push-button system completely; automatically it corrects itself. This is also called feedback. Feedback, therefore, eliminates push buttons. Automation as relates to industry and our national economy certainly is revolutionizing them and is having a profound structural effect upon American labor. Two basic aspects should be faced squarely. First, it is evident that technological advancement has been most rapid and successful. In many areas of production the blue-collar worker, the common laborer and the unskilled laborer have become and are becoming increasingly smaller in number. The white collar worker has grown and is presently growing.

Secondly, all workers, whether in office, on the assembly line or general laborer, feel the need for safeguarding their future against the growing competition of the automatic machine.

Labor Structure Changed

The basic structure of the American labor force has changed. During the past decade the United States became the first industrial county in which the traditional working class is no longer the major element in the total labor force.

All of this has crucial import for the Negro, who is the last to be hired and the first to be fired. It is always difficult for Negroes to receive promotions even though they may qualify for such.

While on the other hand, a different version of this subject faces the airline employees. Crew members of airlines are subject to being reduced and may lose their jobs in view of the increased performance of the jet planes now going into use. The new jets can carry more passengers and more freight at almost double the speed of the conventional propeller driven planes. The operation of these planes reveals an increase in their performance and productivity, and yet they require smaller airplane crews. Unless the volume of passengers and freight traffic increases substantially, a larger number of seasoned pilots and crew members are going to lose their jobs.

Automation and Safety

Tutomation is constantly improving the industrial safety record. Automation is not only reducing cost, but is supplying more goods and services to a greater and more varied group of customers. Rutomation will always tend to offset the scarcity of labor. This puts the Negro in a position which is even more serious economically, for the Negro knows that employment is difficult even when the labor market is at its peak of hiring.

Let us consider a hypothetical case in which automation has taken over completely. In such an instance workers who have lost their jobs would receive severance pay which cushions the shock of unemployment. Greater job evaluation and job analysis will then face the unemployed as they seek new employment. Seniority is lost. Retraining is new and more technical fields will face the unemployed. A reorganization of our entire economical structure now becomes vitally essential. The psychological aspect certainly will have its effect, such as mental anguish and mental stress. These develop as a result of economic insecurity. Greater competition faces the unemployed and definitely so the Negro.

Automation could displace a large number of our workers. The spread of automation poses for American industry and especially the Negro one of the greatest challenges the laboring class will ever face.

Wheels of Progress Must Continue

Of course progress, inventions, and scientific development must not be retarded out of fear of future unemployment. The wheels of progress must not be stopped.

The following recommendations are submitted as a means of coping with this new era of automation: shorter hour work week, increase in calaries, increase in social security benefits, earlier retirement, and longer periods given to vacation.

Now, who are they expected to be affected by automative processes? Every major occupational group except the professional, social and service types. Yet, they too will be affected.

Women employees will be greatly affected. Automation will do much of the clerical, the retail selling, and the machine operator work that women now do. With the advent of automation, the opportunity for economic independence will be lost, and women will become more dependent upon the male breadwinner. Automation will also take over many of the duties of homework.

The total U. S. unemployment figures exceed 4½ million, with more tha na million Negroes in this category, mostly in the northern industrial centers. Yet, not a Negro group has demanded action on national fair employment legislation. When the AFL-CIO brought 5,000 jobless persons to Washington, D. C., a few weeks ago, less than 100 were Negroes. The Negro must learn to care and provide for himself.

According to a very recent release by the U. S. News& World Report, a question is asked: How serious is unemployment among Negroes?

On a percentage basis, unemployme: is about twice as high for Negroes as for white workers. That is the usual situation in periods of business recessions. Also, the percentage of unskilled workers is higher among Negroes than among others, and it is usually the unskilled who are laid off in larger numbers.

The chief moral of all is that the Negro must realize the facts and act upon them. One such fact is that, whether we like it or not, an economical storm is approaching. Dark clouds are cumulating. The question is no longer one of a possibility that the storm will blow over, for this is inevietable. The question now is: What shall the Negro do when the rain begin to fall? How shall the Negro prepare now for the downpour of rain to come?

Thornton C. Fry of the Bell Telephone Laboratories speaks of an automative machine as follows:

"We will find the machine a willing slave capable of Herculean labor. But for all its prodigious powers, the slave requires an intelligent master."

Abolition Of Job Bias In Industry Prompts Confab

WASHINGTON. — A conference of hundreds of religious leaders to give counsel and advice on the abolition of job discrimination in American industry has been called by the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

This is the first time that the Federal government has called a gathering of churchmen to discuss this aspect of national policy.

Vice President Nixon, chairman of the President's Committee, has invited clerical and lay leaders of Protestant, Catholic, Jewish and Eastern Oxthodox communities throughout the United States to meet with him Monday, May 11, at the Sheraton Park Hotel for an all-day session.

Approximately 500 religious leaders from the nation's major churches have already accepted Mr. Nixon's invitation.

OUTSTANDING SPEAKERS

Speakers will be outstanding representatives from industry, labor, religion and the government. At the morning session will be:

Representing industry, The Honorable Alfred E. Driscoll, president of Warner-Lambert Pharmaceutical Company and former governor of New Jersey;

Representing labor, Mr. A. Philip Randolph, president of the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and Vice President of the AFL-CIO; Representing the clergy, the Rev. Martin Luther King, pastor of Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, Montgomery, Ala.

Representing government, Mr. John A. Roosevelt, Bache and Company, New York, and member of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

According to Mr. Nixon, the conference will seek ways for obtaining a moral commitment to the national policy of equal opportunity.

Georgians listed to attend the conference include:

ATLANTA

The Rev. William Holmes Borders, Wheat Baptist Church;

The Rev. Walter Cowart, Executive Director, Georgia Council of Human Relations;

Miss Evelyn L. Green, Director, Program Department, Board of Women's Work, Presbyterian Church in the U. S.

The Rt. Rev. S. L. Greene, Senior Bishop, AME Church;

Miss Ruby Hurley, Regional Secretary, NAACP.

Dr. D. Trigg James, Executive Secretary, Southeastern Jurisdictional Council, The Methodist Church.

The Rev. Dow Kirpatrick, Pastor, St. Mark Methodist Church;

Mr. Eugene C. Patterson, Vice President and Executive Editor, The Atlanta Journal and Constitution;

Mr. Frederick B. Routh, Assistant Director, Southern Regional Council, Inc.

The Rev. L. M. Terrill, Pastor, Zion Hill Baptist Church;

Mrs. M. E. Tilly, Director of Women's Work, Southern Regional Council, Inc.;

Miss Josephine Wilkins.

AUGUSTA

Dr. W. L. Graham, General Secretary, Board of Lay Activities, C. M. E. Church.

COLUMBUS

The Rev. Robert B. McNeill, Pastor, First Presbyterian Church.

The Rev. Charles L. McGavern, Christ Church.

Employment Rises For Negro Worker, Report Reveals

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Official figures, released Monday showed that employment of colored workers leaped by more than 244,000 to a record April high of 6,644,000 while unemployment of colored workers fell by 201,000.

Both changes in the job picture among colored workers were twice as good as expected on a seasonal basis. The number of colored unemployed — 729,000 — was the lowest since October, 1956. The unemployment drop was the biggest in one month's since before the recession.

The increase in employment was larger than the drop in unemployment because many of the persons added to the farm work force were outside the labor force the previous month.

The colored civilian labor force in April totaled 7,370,00 representing 60.9 per cent of the colored population. Of the 6,644,000 employed colored workers, 786,000 were in agriculture and 5,780,00 were in non-agricultural industries.

Unemployed colored workers totaling 729,000 represented 9.9 per cent of the civilian labor force as compared to 2,001,000 unemployed white workers, representing only 4.4 per cent of the civilian work force.

Plan Would Give Jobs To 1,835,000 Negroes

NEW YORK — The adoption of a shorter work week with no reduction in pay would mean 1,835,000 new jobs for Negro workers in America and would provide "the best tangible evidence of working brotherhood" for millions of unemployed colored workers, the 150,000 member United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (UE) said today.

At the winter meeting of the union's General Executive Board, Albert J. Fitzgerald, UE President said:

"This union prides itself on its unrelenting struggle for full equality among the working men and women in the electrical industry. Our program for the shorter work week with no reduction in pay will provide an estimated 8,300,000 new jobs in America if adopted.

"It would provide 35-hour a week jobs at 40 hours pay for the millions of fully unemployed, part-time workers and young workers entering the labor market for the first time.

"It would also mean that the Negro workers of America would be able to get their rightful share of the job market at a time of rising unemployment amid rising production and soaring corporate profits," Fitzgerald said.

"Our economists estimate that the adoption of a 35-hour week with 40-hours pay would mean approximately 1,835,000 jobs for Negro workers," he stated.

For the past year, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE), which bargains for 150,000 workers in 28 states and Canada, has been campaigning for a shorter work week to meet the crisis of unemployment.

The union recently called for Congressional action on unemployment and demanded a Congressional investigation into growing corporate profits while joblessness has spread throughout the country.

"It is no secret that Negro workers have been hit harder by this depression than any other way to relieve this unjust burden brothers and sisters."

Fewer People Over 65 Now Holding Jobs

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. April 18 (NANA).—Industrialization has proved a mixed blessing for older people throughout the world. A nation pays for increased production—the key to a higher standard of living—with banishment of its older workers to the economic sidelines.

A recent survey by the International Labor Organization found that in the last decade, as new technological developments have spread across the world, fewer and fewer men over 65 have held jobs. This trend, clearly discerned in the Western nations, is dramatically highlighted in countries now emerging from backward colonial economies.

In the Philippines, which embarked on a policy of intensified development after independence in the wake of World War II, the toll taken among aging workers by the swing from an agricultural economy to a modern industrial society was most marked. In the 10 years since 1948, the percentage of men past 65 gainfully employed dropped 16 per cent.

Rate Down In U. S.

In the United States, where employment increased for all other age groups in the population between 1950 and 1957, the percentage of men past 65 working by the end of that period was 36.6—down from 41.4 per cent. In Canada, France, Britain and West Germany the percentage of seniors in the labor force also declined.

Of all the factors responsible for the shelving of older workers, perhaps two are most significant—the growth of pension systems, public and private and the stepped-up pace of production.

In Germany, where the Social Security system was born and the retirement age of 65 was set nearly 70 years ago, the percentage of older men still on the job is 26.8—one of the lowest in the world. And this is at a time when postwar West Germany has outproduced all of Europe.

Pensions have had a similar effect in Britain. A study in that country revealed that retirement was four times more frequent in firms with pension systems than in those without private programs.

Production Is Factor

The importance of an increased rate of production as a factor in removing older men from the work force is seen most clearly in the United States. Paradoxically, during the 1957-58 recession, while employment dropped temporarily, the hiring rate for older workers held its own or rose slightly in industrial states such as New York, California, Texas, Pennsylvania and Michigan.

The explanation is that the recession started in the automobile industry and spread to steel and other basic industries, where the assembly line and automation had long since taken their toll of oldsters. There were relatively few around to be laid off.

In much of South America, typical of those areas of the world where people still make their living by working the land, the I.L.O., a specialized agency of the United Nations, found that as many as three-fourths of the men over 65 were still "economically active."

Laundry Industry Applies New Insight; Now Female

How many roles does the housewife play in the course of a day? The professional laundry proplе have a pretty good idea.

A new booklet, "Occupation: Housewife," just put out by The American Institute of Laundering, pays homage to the woman of the house in her many roles as mother, manager, citizen, individual and career girl (one out of four housewives are wage-earners).

FEMALE INDUSTRY

The laundry industry feels it can speak with authority on the subject. That's because, once male, the industry is now female by choice.

It discovered through motivation research that women resented maleness in laundries, were suspicious of entrusting their laundry to a male-imaged industry. Actually, laundry owners, point out, 90 percent of their employees ARE women.

Now in a newly invested femininity, the industry shows it can talk woman to woman, knows enough about the housewife's problems to be able to tell her revealing things about herself.

As a wife, says the booklet, she is a blend of "the vine-covered cottage and the Folies Bergere."

As a mother: "Never too busy, never too tired. . .to listen, to laugh, to comfort, to care."

In her role of manager, she "keeps chaos at bay by planning . . .a host of tasks that keep the family healthy, happy and presentable."

CAREER GIRL

As a citizen: "She knows the score, and politicians seek her favor. . . Streets are cleaner, yards are greener, poverty and pain less grim where she passes."

The career girl leads a double life: "She makes the most of her two worlds, and brightens both with her humor and grace."

But she's still the individual who keeps in some corner of the heart, the mind, the time for living, for herself. . ."

That's just a sampling. Housewife will get one of the booklets — and they should ask if they don't — soon from their own laundry routemen. It is all part of a campaign by the professional laundries to quite frankly tell their best customers, the housewives: "Look, we love you — and let us help you in the way we know best."

80,000 Crippled Adults Now Employed In Industry

With more than 80,000 crippled adults rehabilitated in government programs alone during the past year, a record number of physically handicapped men and women will be working at productive jobs in major industries throughout the nation in 1960, Dean W. Roberts, M. D., executive director of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, said here.

Additional thousands have been or are being rehabilitated in Easter Seal centers, he declared. The latter include not only therapy programs, but also prevocational evaluation, sheltered employment, job counseling and placement.

In observance of National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week, Oct. 4-10, Dr. Roberts made his prediction based on figures released by the U. S. Office of Vocational Rehabilitation estimating that persons restored to self-support will contribute about 121 million man-hours work to the nation's productive economy and will increase their annual rate of earning during their first year of employment from $25 million to about $156 million.

MANY IN PROFESSIONS

Approximately 4,000 of those rehabilitated are entering the professions, including fields that have personnel shortages such as teaching, engineering and medicine. More than 9,000 will be employed in skilled trades and 7,000 in agriculture. The others will be absorbed in clerical, sales, semi-skilled and unskilled jobs.

Authorized by Congress in 1945, the first week in October of each year has been designated as National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week and has developed into a year-round program.

The National Society for Crippled Children and Adults works with many other private organizations and public spirited Americans in cooperating with local, state and federal governmental agencies in organizing a continuous effort for the rehabilitation and ultimate employment of the physically handicapped.

Tells What Happens When Major Firm Hires Negroes

Chicago Defender
Chicago 11-11
10-24-54

WASHINGTON, (Special) — What happens in a community and an industrial plant where a major employer, for the first time, hires Negroes?

A graphic and satisfying answer to this question was given to the President's Committee on Government Contracts at its September meeting here by Dr. Jerome H. Holland, president of Delaware State College. The ex-Cornell All-American football player had been invited by the Committee to describe plant and community impact of ititial Negro hiring by the Dover, Del., plant of the International Latex corporation.

'From my observations and reports," Dr. Holland told the Committee, "community reaction to the new policy seems to be good. Teachers at the college have told me that while they were shopping in the town, white citizens have remarked to them about the change at Latex and what a worthwhile move it was.

NOTHING DEROGATORY

"I have made a number of telephone calls to key persons in the community who have stated that they have heard nothing derogatory of the change and, in the main, have found most people expressing a sense of pride and satisfaction. They have praised management for the positive way in which it has handled and willingly supported the program."

Dr. Holland went on to relate to the Committee members several instances of warm receptions accorded the newly-hired Negroes by plant employees.

"One of the first human incidents that happened within the plant concerned the first Negro woman who was employed as a secretary. Soon after her arrival she received a fine letter from another secretary welcoming her to Latex and stating how pleased she was to see the company hiring all qualified citizens. To me, this type of friendliness appearing in a newly integrated situation in southern Delaware was worthy of note."

NO NEGROES BEFORE

Less than a month before Dr. Holland gave the President's Committee the benefit of his observations on the Dover situation, the Latex corporation had never employed a single Negro, in any capacity. During that month, however, under the persuasive influence of the Committee, which is charged by an Executive Order of President Eisenhower with monitoring the government contracts clause requiring non-discrimination in employment, the company had completely reversed its policy and employed Negroes as secretaries, laboratory helpers and technicians, cafeteria workers, machine operators and general factory workers.

At the conclusion of Dr. Holland's report, Vice President Richard Nixon, who is chairman of the Government Contracts Committee, commended warmly on the local reaction to the "Dover breakthrough." He made special note of the fact that it had been accomplished, without incident, in an area where there had been widespread apprhension that "it won't work here."

Nixon said that he and the other members of the Presiden's Committee should be greataly encouraged in their promotion elsewhere of the Equal Job Opportunity program by the success of the Committee's Delaware project.

Dr. Holland, who is known affectionately to a host of friends in educational, government and sport circles as "Brud," summarized his comments on the Delaware accomplishment as follows:

"There is reason to believe that the success of this program may eventually bring forth a breakthrough in other industries in Delaware that have not upgraded Negroes or offered them white collar jobs because they believe the local social climate is not ready to accept such a program. In a small state such as Delaware, in spite of strong geographical differences, the people live fairly close together and may be influenced by what is happening in a nearby locale.

"If demagogues can spread their spirit of hate and prejudice, something positive can also spread to other's areas from a local progressive program. This is a task for the enlightened leadership of the community."

In concluding, Dr. Holland commended the President's Committee for its role in the accomplishment of the "Dover breakthrough."

NAACP Reveals:

Unemployment Pinch Being Felt by Many More Negroes

NEW YORK — Disclosures made by Herbert Hill, labor secretary of the NAACP, at the association's annual meeting showed that the Negro worker is being more and more fully "integrated" into the army of unemployed in the United States.

• During the week of March 9, 1958, 14.4% of the total non-white civilian labor force was unemployed. The comparable rate for white workers was 6.9%.

• Although only one out of every ten persons in the labor force is non-white, more than one out of every five persons unemployed during 1958 was non-white.

In 1958 and in the preceding three years, the non-white unemployment rate was almost consistently more than double the white unemployment rate. The differential has been extended in both years of prosperity and years of economic decline.

Mr. Hill placed partial responsibility on labor unions and the inability of the National AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department to induce all unions to "encourage all workers without regard to race, color, creed or national origin to share in the full benefits of union organizations."

THIS INDICTMENT was documented with a roster of unions, North and South, which discriminate against non-white workers. In many instances, the NAACP has pledged legal action.

• Also, Mr. Hill directed a sharp shaft at the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

• "More than 40 complaints, filed by the NAACP, currently, are pending with the President's Committee," Mr. Hill reported.

Mr. Hill commented that the "NAACP experience indicates that the committee has failed to enforce the anti-discrimination provision in Federal Government contracts vigorously and consistently."

ALSO, HE asserted that the NAACP had presented affidavits to the Federal Government establishing that persons investigating complaints for the President's Committee, were guilty of racial bias and intimidation of NAACP members.

Throughout the year, the association's labor department investigators tracked down abuses of migratory farm workers from Florida to New York state.

Mr. Hill reported the following items of progress:

• At the Boeing Aircraft Company plant in Wichita, Kans., Negro workers were admitted for the first time into the company's apprenticeship training program and a limited number of colored persons were employed in technical and clerical positions.

• At the Hayes Aircraft Corporation plant in Birmingham, a small number of Negro workers was moved into job classifications formerly held by white workers exclusively.

• At the National Cash Register Company in Dayton, Ohio, Negro workers were admitted into the apprenticeship training program for the first time and employed in technical and clerical positions.

Unemployed up 616,000 to 4,724,000

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—(AP)—Unemployment rose by 616,000 in January to 4,724,000. It was the highest number idle in any January since before World War II.

Government statisticians said that from a statistical standpoint, however, it was comparable to January, 1950, when the unemployment figure was 4,699,000. They say there may be an error margin of perhaps 50,000 in such estimates.

A seasonal decline in employment is usual in January.

THE NUMBER of Americans at work dropped by 1,267,000—from 63,973,000 in December to 62,706,000 in January.

The monthly joint report of the Commerce and Labor Departments attributed the job decline to seasonal factors such as release of extra Christmas season workers in stores and postoffices, and further curtailment of outdoor work.

Some of these temporary workers were not looking for further employment. Hence they were not counted as among the unemployed.

President Eisenhower jumped the gun on the official report, and told a news conference earlier that he believes there will be a pickup in employment as the year goes along.

EISENHOWER challenged a reporter's remark the idle figure had climbed back to about five mililon.

Eisenhower said it was about 300,000 less than that, or about 4,700,000. The actual figures in the government report issued later put January unemployment at 4,724,000, or 276,000 less than five million.

The president said he does not accept as satisfactory the present level of joblessness.

He went on to say it was characteristic for economic recoveries to be spotty. But he said he believes a pickup in employment is in sight.

In actual numbers, January's unemployment total was larger than in any January since 1941 when it was 7,410,000.

SELF-EMPLOYED AID PLAN VOTED

Retirement Fund Tax Deferrment Okayed

By VINCENT J. BURKE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House ways and means committee brushed aside treasury objections Monday and voted overwhelmingly to grant a special tax break to self-employed persons trying to save for their old age.

The bill would allow such persons to defer until age 70 taxes on as much as 10 per cent of their income, provided it was placed in a special retirement fund. Persons past 50 would get an even bigger break.

Treasury officials objected that the measure would upset President Eisenhower's precariously-balanced budget by trimming 365 million dollars a year from anticipated revenues.

Some lawmakers also protested that the measure was discriminatory. They argued it would not provide any tax relief for employes whose bosses do not provide them with pensions. However, lawmakers agreed the skids were greased for House passage, probably next week.

A similar measure passed the House last session but died in the Senate during the adjournment rush. This year sponsors hope they have the votes—and time—to push it to final passage.

The tax deferment, which would start with this year's income would be limited to 10 per cent of income, or $2500 a year, whichever is smaller. However, persons older than 50 would be allowed to defer taxes on amounts larger than that.

There would be a lifetime ceiling of $50,000 on the amount of income on which taxes could be deferred. Earnings from the fund would not apply against the ceiling. Withdrawal of the funds could start at age 65, and would be required by age 70.

The measure was designed to meet complaints from physicians, business proprietors, farmers and other self-employed persons that present law discriminates against them.

Non-whites get jump on whites

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11 — (AP) — The number of non-white Americans increased 50 per cent faster than the white population since 1950, the Census Bureau reported today.

The increase for non-whites totaled 22 per cent compared with about 14 per cent for whites. Non-whites numbered 19,300,000 as of last July 1—up 3½ million from 1950. The white population increased 19½ million to 154,800,000 in the same period.

WOMEN'S WORLD

Female labor force vital to welfare of the nation

By the NNPA News Service

The size and occupational composition of the female labor force indicate how essential the functions which women perform as workers outside the home are to the life of the nation.

The radical changes which have occurred in women's employment have altered the significance of women as an actual and potential manpower resource.

These changes reflect the convergence of two developments: the need of the economy for more workers and the willingness of more women to enter paid employment.

The greater the needs of the society for manpower, the more willing the country has been to abandon traditional ways of developing and utilizing its human resources.

THE MORE the country comes to understand how heavily the skills and the capacities of the people depend upon the opportunities for development available to each individual, the more willing the people should be to enrich these opportunities and to establish greater equality of access to them.

The more the people realize how vital to the development of manpower resources is each individual's freedom to choose his or her occupation and work, the more determined they should be to make that freedom effective.

These considerations apply to all people without regard to race, religion, ethnic origin, or sex; and they establish the guideposts for manpower policies in a free society.

THE NATIONAL Manpower Council, therefore, has set forth specific recommendations designed to achieve the following broad manpower objectives:

1. To provide more equal opportunities for all individuals to acquire skill.

2. To strengthen the contributions made by secondary education to the acquisition of skill.

3. To develop more effective programs for vocational guidance.

4. To improve the facilities and methods used to train skilled and technical manpower.

5. To strengthen the institutions through which scientific and professional manpower is educated and trained.

6. To expand the opportunities for capable young men and women to secure a higher education.

Unemployment Hits Negroes In The Nation

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — While there was only a slight rise in total unemployment between January and February, the number of unemployed colored persons increased by 18,000.

The combined employment and unemployment figures released jointly by Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell and Secretary of Commerce Strauss Wednesday showed 989,000 unemployed colored persons in February, as compared with 971,000 in January and 1,073,000 in February, 1958.

The total unemployment in February was 4,749,000. The seasonally adjusted rate of total unemployment, at 6.1 per cent, continued at about the same level which has prevailed since November.

The 989,000 unemployed colored workers represented 13.9 per cent of the civilian labor force.

The number of colored persons employed totaled 6,135,000 as compared with 56,586,000.

The civilian labor force totals 60,346,000, of which 7,125,000 are colored.

Inside Labor—

Dole Of Foods Is Meager Bit

Unemployed Receive Little From Immense Surplus

SOME LOSE WELFARE

By VICTOR RIESEL

Unless we're ready to plow under one out of every 10 American unemployed men and women, this country had better start feeding millions of jobless with what we plow up. Man doth not live by bread only — but that's just about what hundreds of thousands soon may find themselves doing in the now plentiful pockets of poverty—where the needy received an average of $16 worth of surplus foods in 1958.

The keeper of the almost 10 billion dollars worth of Federal surplus foods was far more mellow in 1956. Then the Government opened its heart, hands and bins for an average of $29 worth of food for a needy person — to cover the entire year, of course. Just why this munificence was cut almost in half while joblessness jumped twice what it was — no keeper of the bins will tell you.

Mr. Riesel

That 16 bucks worth of surplus foods last year gave the needy one certain surcease from what seems to trouble many of us. He just didn't have to count calories and worry about dieting. The 1,600 pennies brought the poor of our land an average of 1,011 pounds of food in 1958.

Needs 1,500 Pounds A Year

The average consumption of a man on a job is 1,500 pounds of food a year. This means that the needy had to dig up the extra money—retail prices, of course.

And there were exactly 5,230,044 needy persons reaching even for this meagerness last December. They've gotten mostly cheese, butter, non-fat dry milk, rice, flour, and cornmeal.

It takes money, certainly. But for whom would these bills total? It may come as a shock, but there were 829,550 needy folk taking surplus foods to stretch their calories in Pennsylvania last December. There were 538,385 in Michigan, more than 348,000 in New York, Kentucky had 255,000 and more than 331,000 were in Mississippi.

System Is Creaky

In many states the figures are low because authorities haven't set up distribution facilities even for what is available.

The entire distribution system creaks — which is a kindly word for it. There are, for example, many welfare offices which demean the applicants and then deduct the cost of the surplus food from the welfare relief check.

Yet I've been authoritatively informed that the surplus food program — is not a substitute for relief or other assistance, but rather is supplemental to such programs.

Stand aside, you who have not hungered. Some of us have. And remember, somehow we will be our brothers' keepers.

Decline reported in tan unemployment

WASHINGTON

Unemployment among colored workers dropped by about 54,000 as the situation improved more than seasonally, according to the announcement by Secretary of Commerce Lewis Strauss and Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell jointly Tuesday.

Employment of colored workers in February, according to Census Bureau figures, was 989,000, and the total number of colored workers employed in the civilian labor force was 6,135,000.

THE PERCENTAGE of unemployed colored workers in the civilian labor force dropped 1.2 per cent from February to March — the February percentage being 13.9 per cent and the March percentage, 12.7 per cent.

The employment picture among colored workers followed improvement in the general job situation as total unemployment fell by about 390,000 to 4,360,000, while total employment climbed by 1.1 million over the month to 63.8 million in March.

The report said the rise in employment was larger than the drop in unemployment because many of the seasonal workers added in March were housewives, students, and others who had previously been outside the labor force.

There is a total of 7,125,00 colored persons in the civilian labor force.

IKE INVITES 9 GOVERNORS TO DISCUSS IMPROVEMENTS IN SYSTEM ON JOBLESS PAY

Temporary Extension Of Funds Said Inadequate

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Eisenhower Tuesday invited nine state governors to meet with him here next Monday to discuss possible improvements in the regular federal-state unemployment compensation system.

The action was announced by the White House as 18 Democratic senators joined in urging prompt congressional action to extend emergency jobless benefits passed during last year's recession. They said a temporary three-month extension approved by the House was "almost totally inadequate."

The House-passed bill would continue benefit payments before the current April 1 deadline for some 406,000 unemployed. The Senate Finance Committee plans to open hearings Friday in hopes of pushing the measure to final passage before the start of the Easter recess March 26.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said the President would not discuss the emergency program with the state governors but would confine the discussions to the regular federal-state program.

Eisenhower is expected to approve the House-passed bill, if it reaches his desk in its present form, although he strongly opposed the original Democratic plan to extend the emergency federal program for a full year.

The President told a recent news conference that jobless benefits primarily were a responsibility of the states. Next week's meeting presumably was called to see what they can do about raising and extending jobless benefits.

The invitations to the Monday meeting were telegraphed to Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida, chairman of the conference and the executive committee, and committee members William G. Stratton of Illinois, James P. Coleman of Mississippi, Robert B. Mayner of New Jersey, William F. Quinn of Hawaii, Cecil H. Underwood of West Virginia, John E. Davis of North Dakota, George D. Clyde of Utah and Steve McNichols of Colorado.

After the Recession a Broad Wake of Vanished Jobs

The nagging fear which gripped the American industrial economy last year has passed. The market is lively again. Business is regaining its equilibrium. Factories are stepping up production. But something has happened: A lot of jobs have vanished, and nobody seems to know for sure where they have gone.

By ROGER GREENE
Associated Press Staff Writer

The business recession in the United States may be about over, but it has left a painful paradox in its wake.

Reduced to simplest terms: Unemployment hasn't melted fast enough in an economy once again moving into high gear.

Industry has been accelerating the trend to push-button factories, robot production lines and automatic offices. And in the labor market, a broad band of vanished jobs appears.

The transition is far-reaching, and not directly connected with the recession, but today's lagging re-employment serves to focus attention afresh on what labor leaders call "the silent revolution."

As yet, the full story is only beginning to emerge. Day-to-day changes in the vast U. S. industrial and business complex are far too numerous to be accurately tabulated. And automation in itself, is no longer news.

Jobs Have Vanished.

One thing, however, is clear: The lifting of the 1957-58 recession has disclosed a broad wake of vanished jobs. Some have disappeared forever.

Gross national output has risen to an all time high, but there still are 1½ million fewer non-farm jobs in the United States today than in March 1957 before the onset of the recession.

The Labor Department's March summary lists major areas of substantial labor surplus in 24 states.

Yet, economists say the slump is almost over. Production is spurting ahead. Then why all the unemployment? Why the lag in jobs catching up with revitalized production?

Part of the answer, at least, lies in automation.

Despite a steadily growing labor force—increasing at the rate of nearly a million a year—automation-equipped factories, farms, mines, railroads and business offices manage to keep the economy humming with fewer and fewer workers.

To the army of jobless, averaging $30.62 a week in unemployment compensation, the situation is fraught with tragedy.

Effie Is So Right.

Yet there is a grain of humor, as well as truth, in the tart comment by Effie Blackar, 56, wife of a jobless Roanoke, Va., textile worker:

"With automatic machines taking over so many jobs, it looks like the men have finally out-smarted themselves."

James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical Workers, puts it this way:

"The spread of automation poses for American industry one of the greatest challenges we will have to meet.

"If it is handled humanely and wisely, it can be a boon not only to industry, but to all mankind. If handled greedily, with emphasis on profits, it can be a disaster of the first magnitude.

"Automation could displace most workers."

AFL-CIO President George Meany says industry is now producing more goods with a million fewer workers than in 1942.

U. S. production, he says, has recovered about three-fourths of what it lost in the slump, but only one-fourth of the recession-idled workers have got their jobs back.

"These things really scare us," Meany says. "More jobs will have to be provided for the growing labor force or we'll have to shoot about 10 per cent of our population."

There Are Other Factors.

Automation is not the only explanation of course, for the dwindling job market.

"Industry squeezed a lot of water out of the work force during the recession," says a Boston industrialist, who asked his name be withheld.

By "water," he meant excess or inefficient workers who were dropped when the economy faltered.

Then, too, some employers are slow to rehire workers after a recession. They're not sure the slump is over. For the present, they'd rather pay overtime than take on additional help. It's cheaper to pay overtime, in many cases, because each addition to the payroll means the employer has to pay extra for Social Security, pensions, vacations and other fringe benefits.

Seymour L. Wolfbein, chief of the Labor Department's manpower division, says there are about 212,000 fewer factory production workers on the job today than a year ago. But in mid-January these fewer employes worked six million more man-hours per week than did the larger force a year ago.

Steady Trend Downward.

Wolfbein cited figures showing a steady downward employment trend in some of the nation's major industries where automation has taken root:

1. Manufacturing — 15,700,000 employes at the end of 1958 compared with 17,200,000 in 1953, down 1½ million.

2. Autos — 627,000 average in 1958 vs. 929,000 in 1953, down 302,000.

3. Railroads — Except in World War II, railroad jobs have been dwindling steadily since 1920 under the double-barreled impact of mechanization and growing competition from trucks, planes and private cars. In 1951, the railroads employed 1,400,000; 1,200,000 in 1956; 950,000 in 1958.

4. Textiles — in trouble for a long time, the industry employed 1,271,000 in 1951 vs. 969,000 late in 1958, a drop of 312,000.

Governorment economists say 3 per cent nationwide unemployment is normal—due to seasonal layoffs, temporary factory shutdowns and other factors—whereas anything over 6 per cent is classified as distressed.

Officially, then, the nation as a whole is distressed on the job front. March figures show 4,700,000 jobless — nearly 7 per cent of the total U. S. labor force of 67,400,000.

Robots Aren't Customers.

President Walter P. Reuther of the United Auto Workers says that in addition to the 4,700,000 officially listed as jobless, at least 1½ million others are too discouraged to seek work and don't show on the unemployed rolls.

About 3½ million more workers, Reuther says, are employed only part time.

Reuther's combined total of 9,700,000 jobless and part-time workers will still fall far short of the 12,800,000 jobless in 1933 at the height of the great depression when the labor force was only 52 million.

Management says that with union demands for ever higher wages, it must turn to labor-saving devices in order to survive. In other words: automate or die.

Reuther has his own answer to that. He tells of visiting a newly automated Ford plant and having an official ask him:

"How are you going to collect union dues from those robot machines?"

"And how," retorted Reuther, "are you going to get the robots to buy Fords?"

A Shorter Work Week?

The solution to the problem as advocated by most union leaders — and strongly opposed by most management officials — is a shorter work week, longer vacations and earlier retirement.

The unions argue that this would spread the work among the steadily increasing labor force, and at the same time maintain the level of consumer purchasing power needed to keep the economy rolling smoothly.

Some government economists and industry spokesmen insist the unions are overemphasizing the threat of automation.

James X. Ryan, Philadelphia, regional manager of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, declares:

"Testimony before the Senate-House Economic Committee indicates that automation is applicable in the near future to less than 8 per cent of the industries of America.

"Since these industries utilize about one-quarter of the labor force, apparently less than 25 per cent of the labor force will be affected by automation.

"Technological advances have always made more jobs."

Wolfbein predicts automation will help create 10 million new jobs and bring about a 50 per cent increase in gross national product from 450 billion to 675 billion dollars in 1959.

Proud Of Struggle For Equality

Shorter Work Week Seen Making New Jobs For At Least A Million Negroes

NEW YORK — The adoption of a shorter work week with no reduction in pay would mean 1,835,000 new jobs for Negro workers in America and would provide "the most tangible evidence of working brotherhood for millions of unemployed colored workers, the 150,000-member United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers of America (UE) said Monday.

At the winter meeting of the union's General Executive Board Albert J. Fitzgerald, UE president said: "This union prides itself on its unrelenting struggle for full equality among the working men and women in the electrical industry. Our program for shorter work week with no reduction in pay will provide an estimated 8,300,000 new jobs in America if adopted. It would provide 35-hour week jobs at 40 hours pay for the millions of fully unemployed, part-time workers and young workers entering the labor market for the first time.

RIGHTFUL SHARE

"It would also mean that the Negro workers of America would be able to get their rightful share of the job market at a time of rising unemployment and rising production and soaring corporate profits," Fitzgerald said.

"Our economists estimate that the adoption of a 35-hour week with 40-hours pay would mean approximately 1,835,000 jobs for Negro workers." he stated.

715,000 WORKERS

For the past year, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE), which bargains for 150,000 workers in 28 states and Canada, has been campaigning for a shorter work week to meet the crisis of unemployment.

The union recently called for Congressional action on unemployment and demanded a Congressional investigation into growing corporate profits while joblessness has spread throughout the country.

"It is no secret that Negro workers have been hit harder by this depression than any other workers," Fitzgerald noted. "The shorter work week would be one way to relieve this unjust burden from the backs of our colored brothers and sisters.'

Trends In Negro Employment

Fifty years ago, in 1909, almost every Negro citizen of the nation who was gainfully employed, was in farming, in some service occupation, or in common labor. There were a few artisans and skilled laborers in certain sections, a very few professional men and women, a few independent operators in various lines, but the vast majority were in the aforementioned lines.

The Negro job picture has changed materially since that time. As of now a minority are in farming occupations, the service occupations are shared with whites, and common labor is slowing shrinking. Vast numbers of Negroes now work in industries as semi-skilled and skilled workers, and larger numbers than is generally realized work in professional fields.

Projections into the future promise that this will continue to be the trend. As the Negro group becomes ever more urbanized and better trained, the future job opportunities of Negroes seem to lie in industrial work, clerical types of work, and professional work.

For those who attended college, a vast vista of opportunity lies open today. Not only the various professions, but wide research fields, also fields of electronics, missiles and all of the other new areas of endeavor and service.

One must also keep in mind that vast fields of business are opening up today to Negroes, who are willing to train themselves. Actually Negroes have already invaded the stock markets, architecture; have become high-powered developers of real estate; and entered a score of other fields that were closed to Negroes as late as five years ago.

In addition to these vast opportunities here at home, there are even greater opportunities abroad. From employment with our own government as ambassadors, the field extends to all kinds of pursuits and activities in the newly-freed countries of dark people.

89,000 jobless—same number working in Jan.

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The drop in employment of colored workers in January was equal to the rise in unemployment among them.

Total employment of colored workers fell by 89,000 and unemployment increased by a like figure. These changes in the colored civilian labor force differed from the changes in the total civilian labor force.

In the total labor force, employment fell by 1.3 million to 62.7 million with the release of Christmas workers from retail stores and postoffice jobs, and some further cutbacks in outdoor work, Secretary of Commerce Lewis Straus and Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell jointly announced Tuesday.

AT THE same time, total unemployment rose by 600,000 to 4.7 million.

The percentage of unemployed colored workers is more than twice the percentage of unemployed workers in the total civilian labor force. Colored workers employed in January totaled 6,225,000, of whom 3,798,000 were males and 2,427,000 were female.

Unemployed colored workers in January numbered 971,000 of whom 633,000 were males and 33,000 were females. Unemployed white workers totaled 3,753,000, while 56,481,000 were employed.

Unemployed colored persons represented 13.5 per cent of the civilian labor force while unemployed white workers represented only 6.2 per cent of the civilian work force.

Migratory Labor Employers Sharply Hit By Mitchell

CHICAGO — (NNPA) — Employers of migratory labor were sharply criticized here Sunday by Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell for maintaining rules while farm organizations defend the freedom to exploit such labor.

Mr. Mitchell warned that as long as the most powerful employer associations can be relied upon to oppose any proposal to improve the conditions of farm wage workers, then their contribution to the eventual solution of what is, in fact and reality, a national problem will be zero."

The Labor Secretary addressed more than 300 persons and others who attended the final two days of the meetings of the National Conference to Stabilize Migrant Labor. The conference was sponsored by the Catholic Council on Working Life.

Some 2,000 men, women and children work on the nation's farms for wages which are far less than those received by non-farm workers, he said. One-half of them are migratory workers, who are chiefly members of traditionally underprivileged minority groups, poorly housed if at all, and often lack skills which would enable them to advance occupationally.

The average earnings of migrant farm workers are less than $900, he said.

Mr. Mitchell took issue with the position of the farm employer groups that the national interest would be endangered by lifting the condition of the migrant since it would burden the agricultural economy.

FARM TO FARMER

Dividing farms in the United States into two kinds — those that hire farm labor and the traditional family farmer, Mr. Mitchell pointed out that one of the arguments against aiding the migrant is that the small family farmer will be harmed.

He declared that "the important point for the small farmer to realize is that cheap wages on big farms cheapens his own labor and lessen his own competitive position.

"If the large farm, which hires most of the labor in agriculture, gains that labor at low wages, and works it long hours, then the work performed on the small farm by the owner and his family is of really small value, as that value is determined in the market."

The American people, Mitchell warned, are not going to permit the condition of the migrant farm worker to be prolonged because of a resistance to change by some farm employer associations.

Mr. Mitchell said studies show that wage rates in crops for which Mexicans are employed do not move upward at a rate corresponding with the general trends in farm wage rates.

"This is certainly not the free play of a competitive labor market," he said, adding:

"As long as the working of supply and demand can be nullified by artificial wage rates that induce artificial labor shortages which are remedied by use of foreign workers, we can expect a continuation of low wage levels."

Mr. Mitchell predicted that the country will find ways to solve the migrant problem.

Senator Paul Douglas, Illinois Democrat, called for workmen's compensation and minimum wage laws for migrant farm workers. A frequent critic of the Eisenhower Administration, Douglass complimented Mitchell for the Labor Secretary's achievement and efforts to aid migrant workers.

Douglass said states should set sanitary and health standards for migrant camps, and the Federal Government should provide stopping off places for migrants, and summer educational classes should be arranged for migrants' children.

MIGRATORY FORCE IS PUT AT 850,000

The New York Times

Their Average Income Given at $859 a Year—Chicago Parley Set for Nov. 21-22

New York

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31 — Patrick F. Crowley, president of the Roman Catholic Council on Working Life, said yesterday that 400,000 Americans and 450,000 foreign workers, mostly made up of 60,000 workers, They stand, he said on the lowest ring of the economic ladder, averaging $859 in annual income from all sources.

Mr. Crowley said that 150,000 dependents traveled with the American migrant workers, and another 150,000 stayed at home.

Mr. Crowley announced that the National Conference to Stabilize Migrant Labor, sponsored by the Catholic group he heads, would hold its first meeting at Loyola University in Chicago Nov. 21-22. He said that previous meetings on the problem were attended either by representatives from Government agencies and farmers seeking more farm hands, or by religious and educational leaders and community officials looking for a better life for the migrants.

All Groups Invited

"The Chicago conference," Mr. Crowley observed, "is unique in that it marks the first national attempt to bring all these groups together under one roof."

Among the scheduled speakers are Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio and several farmers who use migrant labor.

"We hope," Mr. Crowley said, "to develop a national policy which will provide regular employment, steady income, stable family life and an adequate labor supply."

He said that there were six major streams of migratory workers in this country. One stream on the Atlantic Coast is made up of 60,00 workers, mostmostly Negroes but including a sprinkling of Puerto Ricans and Mexican-Americans. Another, which follows the sugar beet harvest, starts in Texas and extends up into the north central and mountain states. It, too, comprises 60,000 workers, almost all Mexican-Americans.

Wheat Workers

A third stream starts in Texas and works north toward Montana and North Dakota. These are the wheat and small-grain migrants, 30,000 persons of Mexican descent.

About 80,000 more Mexican and Negro workers harvest cotton. They start in Texas, then swing off toward the Mississippi Delta or toward New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California.

From Oklahoma, Arkansas and Western Tennessee, about 30,000 workers of early American stock move north and west during the harvest season. They pick fruit and tomatoes.

There are also about 120,000 workers of all backgrounds working in the Western states and up and down the Pacific Coast.

NEGROES GETTING NEW JOBS IN SOUTH

The New York Times

President's Committee Sees Racial 'Breakthroughs'

New York

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 — A Presidential committee has made what it considers "significant breakthroughs" in obtaining skilled jobs for Negroes in the South.

The results stem from a new and more active program by the President's committee on Government Contracts. The group, headed by Vice President Richard M. Nixon, works to end discrimination in hiring by companies with Government contracts.

Instead of asking contractors for a generalized and practically unenforceable commitment not to discriminate, the committee is now seeking a specific promise to hire Negroes for new jobs immediately.

The emphasis has been on white collar and skilled industrial positions from which Negroes have been generally excluded in the South and many other parts of the country.

Accomplishment Listed

These are some of the accomplishments in the last few months:

¶One of the largest defense contractors, a maker of aircraft among many other products, has hired for its plant in Fort Worth, Tex., the first Negro clerical workers it has ever had there.

¶A nationally known company in Greensboro, S. C., has employed Negroes for white-collar jobs in the personnel and accounting departments, and one as a junior laboratory technician. It also has announced that Negro production workers will be considered for upgrading for the first time into certain superior jobs.

New York

¶The International Latex Company in Dover, Del., a strongly Southern-oriented area, hired its first Negro employes of ay kind and arranged for the recruitment of skilled Negroes in the future.

The committee's new policy has also had reslits in Border and Northern areas where Negroes have had a hard time breaking out of menial factory work.

Committee pressure has resulted in new job openings in Southern California, Indiana, Ohio and Missouri, among other places.

No one on the committee suggests that these cases are enough to make a fundamental change in job opportunities for large numbers of negroes.

What is hoped is that a successful breakthrough at a large plant may make skilled jobs for negroes a more acceptable idea throughout a particular community, especially if the change comes smoothly at the first plant.

So far, despite some concern, the committee's pilot cases have worked smoothly. No incidents have been reported. But the companies involved are still fearful of community resentment, and most have asked to have their names withheld.

Dover Plant an Example

The developments at International Latex can, however, be described as an example.

Until last September the company had never hired a negro at its main plant in Dover. An attempt to take on some Negro employes a few years ago was abandoned because of resistance from the workers in the plant.

Last summer staff members of the President's committee met three times with an officer of International Latex. Also present were representatives of the Defense Department, with which Latex has contracts. The company agreed to make the attempt requested by the committee.

For help in finding qualified Negro employes, Latex turned to a Negro leader in Dover, Dr. Jerome Holland, president of Delaware State College, a Negro school. Some years ago he was the Cornell football star known as Brud Holland.

Seven Negroes Hired

In September Latex took on seven Negroes. One is a secretary in the personnel office—a place particularly evident to other employes. Others include cafeteria workers, production-line employes and one laboratory drug-research assistant.

Furthermore, the company has asked Dr. Holland's college to start an extension course in organic chemistry for Latex employes. The implication is that the company wants a source of trained Negroes.

At a recent meeting of the President's committee, Dr. Holland spoke about the meaning of the Latex change in policy to Negroes in a community such as Dover, with deeply Southern traditions and attitudes.

Spread of Jobs Foreseen

He said the new Negro employes had been received without any incidents except some friendly approaches by white employes. He said Negro teachers and others in Dover were eager to train young men and women for Latex, because "they recognize the importance of having good people employed at this opportune time."

"The success of this program," Dr. Holland said, "may eventually bring a breakthrough in other industries in Delaware that have not upgraded Negro employes or offered them white-collar jobs because they believe the social climate is not ready to accept such a program."

He also said:

"If demagogues can spread their spirit of hate and prejudice, something positive can also spread to other areas from a local progressive program."

The new program at the President's committee was proposed by Irving Ferman, who took over as executive vice chairman last June, and by the second-ranking full-time staff member, Dr. Jacob Seidenberg, the executive director.

Since its creation by President Eisenhower in 1953, the committee had concentrated on what it termed 'formal compliance' with the provision in all Government contracts barring discrimination in hiring.

Such formal compliance might include, for example, the company's posting signs in the plant noting the provision against discrimination, or promising to accept all applications regardless of race.

Applications a Factor

Mr. Ferman pointed out that if a large plant had never hired Negroes for anything but menial jobs, those seeking white-collar positions were unlikely to apply there. Thus many companies not hiring Negroes could honestly say they were not discriminating.

"You've got to break the ice," Mr. Ferman said. "You have to get Negroes into pilot jobs. You have to persuade the contractor that he must take action to implement the Government policy of employing Negroes."

Mr. Ferman, Dr. Seidenberg and other on the tiny staff of the President's committee have toured the country in the last few months persuading company executives to take the step. They selected contractors with no Negroes in better-grade jobs by going through surveys the committee had made.

"I have found remarkable consent among the top executives," Mr. Ferman says now. He expressed admiration for the business attitudes he had seen.

No Contracts Canceled

It is fortunate for the committee that persuasion has worked, because that and adverse publicity are about its only weapons. It can ask the contracting department of the Government to cancel a contract because of discriminatory hiring policies, and it has asked occasionally. But no department has yet broken a contract for that reason.

Social agencies have been helpful to the committee. The Urban League, for example, helped Negroes find jobs in Kansas City. The American Friends Service Committee in Greensboro, N. C., sent to the plant there its first two Negro white-collar employes—one now in the accounting and one in the personnel department.

The President's committee has endorsed the more aggressive new approach without dissent. And that is so despite the presence of some political opposites on the group.

In addition to Mr. Nixon, who has been quite active in the work, the committee includes George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations; Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, and Mrs. Helen Rogers Reid, former publisher of The New York Herald-Tribune. A number of Government departments are also represented by top officials.

Negro 'White Collar' Employment Climbs In New Orleans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Negroes employed in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in federal agencies in New Orleans has increased nearly seven times since 1951, the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy announced Wednesday.

During the same period, total federal employment in the New Orleans area has dropped nearly 2,000 employees.

The committee said there were 17 Negroes employed as clerks, stenographers or typists in 1951 and 115 as of March 1959.

"We believe there is significance in the increase," said Archibald J. Carey Jr., chairman of the committee. "The total number of Negroes now employed in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in New Orleans is not large, and it is also true that in some of the smaller agencies no Negroes at all are employed in these categories.

"Nevertheless, the survey indicates that with reference to these particular positions qualified Negro Americans are finding increased opportunities for white-collar office employment in the federal agencies in this Southern city."

The committee was created by President Eisenhower in January 1955. Its function is to assist federal agencies to carry out the administration's policy of prohibiting discrimination on a basis of race, religion or national origin in federal civilian employment.

The committee conducted the survey on the basis of information which had been gathered in 1951 by the Fair Employment Board of the Civil Service Commission, relating to the number of Negro typists, clerks, and stenographers employed by federal agencies in the city of New Orleans at that time. The total number of Negroes employed in these categories in 1951 was seventeen. The Committee's survey of the same agencies as of March, 1959, showed that 115 Negroes are now employed in these job categories.

Negro Clerical Aid Increases In New Orleans

WASHINGTON.—The number of Negroes serving in clerical, stenographic and typing position in federal agencies in the New Orleans area has increased nearly seven-fold since 1951, according to a recent survey made by the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy. During this same period, however, total federal employment in New Orleans area has decreased by nearly 2,000 employees.

Employment Rises For Negro Worker, Report Reveals

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA)—Official figures released Monday showed that employment of colored workers leaped by more than 244,000 to a record April high of 6,644,000, while unemployment of colored workers fell by 207,000.

Both changes in the job picture among colored workers were twice as good as expected on a seasonal basis. The number of colored unemployed — 726,000 — was the lowest since October 1958. The unemployment drop was the biggest in one months since before the recession.

The increase in employment was larger than the drop in unemployment because many of the persons added to the farm work force were outside the labor force the previous month.

The colored civilian labor force in April totaled 7,370,00 representing 60.9 per cent of the colored population. Of the 6,644,000 employed colored workers, 753,000 were in agriculture and 5,780,00 were in non-agricultural industries.

Unemployed colored workers totaling 726,000 represented 9.9 per cent of the civilian labor force as compared to 2,901,000 unemployed white workers, representing only 4.4 per cent of the civilian work force.

REPORT GAIN IN U. S. WHITE COLLAR JOBS

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The number of Negroes serving in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in federal agencies in the New Orleans area has increased nearly seven-fold since 1951, according to a recent survey made by the President's Committee on Government Employment policy. During this same period, however, total federal employment in New Orleans decreased by nearly 2,000.

The committee conducted the survey on the basis of information which had been gathered in 1951 by the Fair Employment board, Civil Service commission, relating to the number of Negro typists, clerks and stenographers employed by federal agencies in the city of New Orleans.

Total number of Negroes employed in these categories in 1951 was 17. The commission's survey of the same agencies as of March, 1959 showed 115 Negroes now employed in these job categories.

CAREY COMMENTS

Commenting on the results of the survey, committee Chairman Archibald J. Carey Jr., Chicago, stated:

"We believe there is significance in the increase. The total number of Negroes now employed in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in New Orleans is not large, and it is also true that in some of the smaller agencies no Negroes at all are employed in these categories.

"Nevertheless, the survey indicates that with reference to these particular positions, qualified Negro-Americans are finding increased opportunties for white-color office employment in federal agencies in this southern city."

EXECUTIVE ORDER

The President's Committee on Government Employment policy was created by an executive order of President Eisenhower in January 1955. Its function is to assist the federal agencies in implementing the administration's policy of prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, religion or national origin in civilian employment actions of the agencies.

Other committee members are Branch Rickey, vice-chairman; Milton H. Blow, public member; W. Arthur McCoy, representing the Civil Service commission; Charles C. Finucane, assistant secretary of defense for manpower, personnel and reserve; William F. Patterson, representing the Department of Labor; Charles H. Kendall, Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization; and Mrs. Jane Warnock, alternate public members.

Report Shows Stenogs Salaries On Increase

The average salary and average workweek of women stenographers in the Chicago area was $75.50 and 38½ hours per week in April, 1959 according to preliminary estimates released by Adolph O. Berger, Chicago regional director of the U. S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Among 23 office occupations studied, weekly salaries of women workers ranged from an average of $57.50 for routine file clerks to $89.50 for secretaries. Tabulating-machine operators averaged $77.50, comptometer operators $74, key-punch operators $72, class B acounting clerks $70, copy typists, $63.50, and office girls $59.

Hourly rates of pay for men in skilled maintenance trades averaged $2.74 or more. Tool and die makers had average rates of $3.16; electricians $3.05; machinists $3.03; pipefitters $3.02; carpenters, painters, and sheet-metal workers $3.01; millwrights $2.90; toolroom machine operators $2.82; and mechanics $2.74.

In the custodial and material movement jobs, material handling laborers and janitors had occupational averages of $2.06 and $1.83, respectively. Truckdrivers averaged $2.63 and forklift truck operators $2.30.

Industrial nurses, one of the professional and technical occupations included in the survey, averaged $92.

Employment Gains Set Record for May

WASHINGTON, June 10 (AP) — A million more Americans found jobs in May to boost employment to 66,016,000, a record for the month.

The government's latest job count today also showed the number of idle workers fell by 238,000 to 3,389,000, a considerably better improvement than expected.

President Eisenhower's reaction was supplied by press secretary James C. Hagerty: "The President was given the information and he was pleased by the figures." Hagerty added that Eisenhower is still concerned about those who remain without jobs.

Recovery Cited

Heads of the Commerce and Labor departments, Lewis Strauss and James P. Mitchell, welcomed the new data as demonstrating further recovery from the recent recession.

The ratio of unemployment to the work force fell from 5.3 per cent in April to 4.9 per cent in May—the first time this has dropped below 5 per cent since November 1957.

The average weekly earnings of factory workers reached $90.32—the first occasion they have passed the $90 mark in history. For durable goods workers the average was $98, for soft goods workers $80.

Longer working hours, plus higher wage rates, caused the earnings rise. The average work week in manufacturing rose to 40½ hours, represent— the longest work week for May since 1955.

A particularly encouraging fac- another favorable sign was May tor, aside from the usual expanding farm employment, was a 10,000 jump in factory employment.

Factory employment often declines in May. But last month substantial job gains were registered in steel and other primary metals industries, in fabricated metals and machinery industries. There was a small gain in auto employment.

Seymour Wolfbein, deputy assistant secretary of labor, said decline among the long-term unemployed—those idled 15 weeks or more.

This group dropped by 280,000. The long-term unemployed still number 1,100,000, or a third of all unemployed.

Employment Hits New Record As Number Of Jobless Drops Greatly

WASHINGTON — (UPI) —Unemployment dropped to its lowest level in 18 months in May while the number of Americans at work hit a new record for the month, the government reported Wednesday.

The labor and commerce departments said a decline of 238,000 from April lowered the May jobless total to 3,389,000. This was about 700,000 higher than in May, 1957, but about 1,500,000 below a year ago.

Meantime, employment rose by 1,004,000 to establish a new May record of 66,016,000 The rise was atttributed to an unusually sharp pick-up in non-farm jobs as well as a further seasonal gain in agriculture employment.

The decline in unemployment dropped the jobless rate to 4.9 per cent of the labor force. It was the first time the rate had fallen below 5 per cent since November, 1957.

COMPARISON MADE

The rate was 5.3 per cent in April and hovered around 6 per cent last winter. The May decline was attributed largely to the recall of factory workers to their jobs.

The departments also reported that the average weekly factory earnings increased to $90 32 in May, topping $90 for the first time The average work week also increased by 12 minutes to 40.4 hours, the highest since 1955.

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating R-N. Y. called the report evidence of a "massive economic upsurge" Speaking to the Senate, he chided "men of little faith" who called only recently for major public works to provide jobs.

Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, who hailed the report in advance as "extraordinarily good," predicted that the cost of living would remain stable for the next four to six months.

PAYS BUY MORE

Coupled with the rise in factory earnings, he said, this will mean that the average worker will be able to buy more with his paycheck than ever before

Deputy Assistant Labor Secretary Seymour Wolfbein said one of the most heartening items in the May report was the fact that factory employment rose by 100,000 to 16,100,000 Durable goods industries, which were hit hardest by the recent recession, chalked up nearly all of the increase.

Substantial gains also were reported by the steel, primary metals, fabricated metals and machinery industries. Even the hard-pressed automobile industry showed an increase.

Unemployment is almost certain to rise this month because many of the 2,225,000 high school and college graduates will invade the labor markets. Wolfbein said this usually happens in June, but he noted that total employment also rises during the month.

Wolbein predicted that the jobless total will not exceed the four-million mark before next winter provided only seasonal changes occur.

VA Finds Physically Handicapped Get Jobs Done Well

WASHINGTON — Long a leader among Federal agencies in the hiring of physically handicapped employees, the Veterans Administration has issued an inspirational report of the ability of these employees to get the job done as well as their hale and hearty co-workers.

Entitled "Handicapped? Not on the Job!" the report takes the form of a pamphlet highlighting the more dramatic among VA's handicapped employees.

The Veterans Administration, in its stations and hospitals from coast to coast, employs more than 8,400 physically handicapped workers. Each of VA's major divisions, the Department of Medicine and Surgery, the Depantment of Veterans Benefits and the Department of Insurance, has found room for qualified and skilled workers who despite some physical handicap have proven that they can do their assigned job well.

CAN DO JOB

"The quality of the performance of the physically handicapped proves that when they are properly placed they can do the job," says Sumner G. Whittier, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, in a brief dedication of the pamphlet. "All they need is the opportunity to demonstrate their ability."

The Administrator urged other organizations, Federal and non-Federal alike, to give a fair chance to qualified applicants among the physically handicapped and promised them that they would be pleasantly surprised.

The VA report bears out the findings of the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Labor that:

1. That Physically-handicapped workers produce at slightly higher rates than do unimpaired workers;
2. Impaired persons sustain fewer disabling injuries, and
3. The handicapped have the same range of interest, skills and abilities as the non-handicapped.

Summer Jobs Defended Under U.S. Laws

As schools close for the summer and thousands of youngsters seek vacation jobs, Illinois employers were reminded that the employment of teenagers may be subject to the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act — the Federal Wage-Hour Law — if they work in establishments producing goods or shipping merchandise in interstate commerce.

Earl F. Harverson, regional director of the U. S. Labor Department's Wage and Hour Division, emphasized that minors must be at least 16 to work in general occupations, and at least 18 hazardous occupations.

The child-labor provisions of the law permit the employment of 14 and 15-year-old youngsters in non-manufacturing jobs, such as in office, clerical, or sales work, but their employment is limited to, 8 hours a day and 40 hours a week when schools are closed.

Number Of Americans Holding Jobs Highest In History Of Nation

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — The number of Americans holding jobs spurted to 67,342,000 in June, the highest employment level in the nation's history, the Labor Department reported Tuesday.

Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell said the new record indicates "once again the basic strength of our economy and the kind of opportunity that lies ahead for all Americans."

Unemployment also rose — to 3,982,000. But the increase was mostly seasonal, brought on by a heavy influx of job-seeking students and June graduates entering the labor force.

FACTORY EARNINGS HIGHER

Despite its rise, unemployment remained at 4.9 per cent of the labor force. Joblessness among workers who are heads of families actually dropped by 180,000.

The department said weekly earnings of factory workers also reached a new record high, climbing to an average of $90.54.

Employment showed a considerably bigger gain for the month than unemployment. The number of employed was $333,000 higher than May, nearly 2,500,000 higher than June, 1958, when the economy was just pulling out of the business recession, and 121,000 above the previous employment peak set in July, 1957.

Unemployment was 593,000 higher than the May figure of 3,389,000. The May total was the lowest level of joblessness since December, 1957.

MANY NEWCOMERS

Some 2 million students and new graduates entered the work force last month, with 600,000 seeking work for the first time This influx had a seasonal effect on employment as well as unemployment.

But Labor Department experts said the employment gain was large enough to be more than merely seasonal.

Seymour Wolfbine, a department job specialist, said there had been an "enormous" growth in the number of jobs for each of the past several months. He said the employment total had risen by 4,600,000 since February, "a real thrust in the economy."

JOBLESS PAY BILL EXTENDED BY IKE

405,000 Jobless Workers Are To Receive Benefits

By TOM NELSON

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Eisenhower signed into law Tuesday a bill extending for three months emergency unemployment pay benefits for an estimated 405,000 jobless workers.

The measure carries on temporarily last year's emergency extension, which was due to expire at Tuesday midnight.

The President signed the measure in the wake of a Labor Department report that more major industrial centers suffered "substantial unemployment" this month than during March, 1958. That was when the recession neared its worst.

The report named 74 areas where unemployment exceeded 6 per cent of the labor force, compared with the all-time high of 8 last July.

REQUESTS JOBLESS FIGURES

In another development, AFL—CIO President George Meany asked Secretary of Commerce Lewis L. Strauss to release March unemployment figures in advance of an AFL—CIO unemployment conference April 6. The figures are normally released about the 10th of each month.

Meany said the AFL—CIO asked for the early report so it can deal with "facts, not guesses" at its rally of jobless workers and union officials. The meeting is designed to pressure Congress and the administration for action to bolster the economy.

Meany told Strauss that unemployment usually drops by 250,000 to 300,000 during March. The number of idle in February was 4,749,000.

"Even a substantial drop, for in excess of 300,000, would still leave us with a serious unemployment problem," Meany wrote Strauss.

STATES MUST AGREE

Like the original recession-born extension of jobless benefits, the new act signed Tuesday extends federal benefits to jobless workers who have exhausted regular state compensation - provided the state is willing to take on a federal loan and - or to hike tax rates on employers to finance the extension. Currently 17 states are participating fully in the emergency extension and others are participating in part.

The Labor Department estimated the new extension would provide payments totaling 78 million dollars to some 405,000 jobless workers who had exhausted state benefits.

Eliminated from the final measure that cleared Congress on Wednesday was a Senate - passed feature which would have extended the federal benefits for any worker exhausting state benefits within the coming three-month extension period.

JOB SITUATION BEST IN YEARS

Glowing Predictions Made By Government; Data Due In Day Or So

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Monday night that March improvement in the nation's job picture was the best in years. The over-all economy was reported to have registered a new high during the first quarter of 1959.

President Eisenhower and his Commerce and Labor cabinet members issued a series of glowing predictions promising that data to be issued in a day or two will demonstrate business is even better than had been anticipated.

Job Report.

Eisenhower started out the round of happy predictions. He promised a new jobs report Tuesday will be gratifying and hinted at a substantial cut in unemployment.

Then, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell arranged for the Labor Department to put out the job data Tuesday at an unprecedented news conference.

Finally, Secretary of Commerce Lewis Strauss issued a statement saying the job figures "will show a more than seasonal drop in unemployment and a substantial rise in emplyment—actually the best improvement figures between February and March in years."

The guessing was that employment will increase by about 500,000 jobs with unemployment declining around 300,000 to 400,000. This would still leave unemployment well above the four-million mark.

The latest previous unemployment figure was 4,749,000 for February when 62,722,000 were employed.

The history of changes in unemployment between February and March for the past decade has been as follows: Down 93,000 in 1949, down 486,000 in 1950, down 220,000 in 1951, down, 320,000 in 1952, down 134,000 in 1953, up 58,000 in 1954, down 257,000 in 1955, down 11,000 in 1956, down 239,000 in 1957, and up 25,000 in 1958.

An unemployment cut of 300,000 would be the biggest since 1952 and one of 325,000 the biggest since 1950.

Strauss made these other observations:

1. Latest department statistics, most of them as yet unannounced, "make it apparent that business is good, in fact much better than was anticipated at the start of the year."

2. National income has hit a new peak.

3. Business plant and equipment spending is increasing more than expected.

4. The value of all goods and services produced — a statistic called the gross national product —hit a record annual rate of close to 465 billion dollars in the first quarter. This compares with 453 billion in the 1958 final quarter.

5. With income up and prices staying stable, purchasing power now is at the highest point ever reached in the United States.

"The signs indicate that the current spring vigor in the economy should increase in the coming months," Strauss said.

South Job Total Hits 8-Mo. Low

Employment in the South last month was at its lowest since last July, the U.S. Department of Commerce Atlanta field office reported Monday.

The report noted that although the January figure of 93.1 was the second highest of all sections of the country, it reflected a sharp decline from the South's December level of 94.4 per cent.

The report covered total civilian non-institutional employment in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, the Carolinas, the Virginias, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas and the District of Columbia.

Merrill C. Lofton, Commerce department field manager, said an encouraging note in the South's employment figure was that 83.3 per cent of the total were on the job in non-agricultural pursuits, the highest rate of such employment since January, 1958.

JOB SITUATION 'BEST IN YEARS'

Substantial Cut in Unemployment Hinted

By NORMAN WALKER

WASHINGTON (AP)—The government said Monday night that March improvement in the nation's job picture was the best in years. The over-all economy was reported to have registered a new high during first quarter 1959.

President Eisenhower and his commerce and labor cabinet members issued a series of glowing predictions promising that data to be issued in a day or two will demonstrate business is even better than had been anticipated.

Eisenhower started out the round of happy predictions. He promised a new jobs report Tuesday will be gratifying and hinted at a substantial cut in unemployment.

STATEMENT ISSUED

Then, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who had given Eisenhower an advance fill-in on the March job figures, arranged for a labor department aide to put out the job data Tuesday at an unprecedented news conference.

Finally, Secretary of Commerce Lewis Strauss issued a statement Monday night saying the job figures "will show a more than seasonal drop in unemployment and a substantial rise in employment — actually the best improvement figures between February and March in years."

The guessing was that employment will increase by about 500,000 jobs with unemployment declining around 300,000 to 400,000. This would still leave unemployment well above the four-million mark, however.

The latest previous unemployment figure was 4,749,000 for February when 62,722,000 were employed.

BUSINESS GOOD

An unemployment cut of 300,000 would be the biggest since 1952 and one of 325,000 the biggest since 1950.

Strauss made these other observations:

1. Latest department statistics, most of them as yet unannounced, "make it apparent that business is good, in fact much better than was anticipated at the start of the year."

2. National income has hit a new peak.

3. Business plant and equipment spending is increasing more than expected.

4. The value of all goods and services produced — a statistic called the gross national product —hit a record annual rate of close to $465 billion in the first quarter. This compares with 453 billion in the 1958 final quarter.

5 With income up and prices staying stable, purchasing power now is at the highest point ever reached in the United States.

PLANS HELD UNWISE

"The signs indicate that the current spring vigor in the economy should increase in the coming months," Strauss said.

The report will come a day ahead of a big rally due Wednesday by the AFL-CIO to spotlight unemployment. The labor organization is bringing 5,000 union officials and idled worker-members from 15 East Coast cities to tell about their job-hunting troubles.

FEDERAL STANDARDS URGED BY ADVISORS

A major overhaul of the unemployment compensation system—keyed to higher federal minimum standards for benefits and duration of payments — has been recommended overwhelmingly by an official tri-partite advisory council to the Labor Dept.

The 16 public and labor members of Labor. Sec. James P. Mitchell's Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security unanimously favored legislation calling for jobless pay of at least one-half the individual's normal wage or two-thirds of a state's average weekly wage, whichever is lower, for a flat 30-week period.

They also favored continuance of the present system under which employers in states adopting the new standards are allowed to escape as much as 2.7 percent of the existing 3 percent payroll tax to finance the jobless pay system. In states not liberalizing their programs, the escape factor would be limited to 1.7 percent.

The AFL-CIO has repeatedly called for federal standards to beef up the jobless pay program and end the gross inequities between various state programs.

Only five of the eight management representatives attended the meeting which passed on the recommendations. These five dissented, adopting a "states rights" position terming imposition of federal standards "uncalled for and unjustified."

Details of the council's recommendations were disclosed first by the Bureau of National Affairs, Inc., of Washington, in its Daily Labor Report, and subsequently confirmed to the AFL-CIO News by a public member of the panel.

The Laber Dept. declined comment. A spokesman indicated that the Eisenhower Administration's present position would not be made public until the President sends his legislative proposals to the 86th Congress.

Mitchell, however, is known to favor modernization of the jobless pay system. In a little-publicized address to the Bricklayers' convention in Atlantic City, N. J., last October, he stated these broad views on unemployment compensation:

"It is my hope . . . that the Congress next year when it convenes will look at this whole problem of unemployment compensation and the adequacy of unemployment compensation, both in terms of duration and in terms of benefits, so that we can set at the federal level a standard which the states could properly follow."

While not made public by the Labor Dept., the recommendations of the public and labor members of the council, together with the five employers' rebuttal arguments, were distributed to all state unemployment compensation offices for study and comment. The department made it plain that the views were only "advisory" and were not binding on Mitchell or the White House.

The public and labor members' majority called for achieving the recommended maximum benefits on a three-step basis spread over a five-year period. During the first two years, the maximum would be not less than 50 percent of the average weekly state wage. This would jump to 60 percent for the next two years and hit the two-thirds mark by the fifth year.

This would mean immediate boosts in compensation payments in virtually all states, and a major increase across the country—ranging from $7 a week in Mississippi to as much as $47 a week in Alaska —by the time the two-thirds maximum is reached.

The effect of the 30-week flat benefit period for all eligible claimants would be felt in every state except Pennsylvania, which already has a similar provision incorporated in its laws.

In all other states, the current benefit period varies sharply. Lowest is Florida, where benefit periods range from as little as five weeks to a maximum of only 16 weeks. With the exception of Pennsylvania, the longest benefit periods are a flat 26 weeks in Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina and Vermont.

The formula which the majority recommended on tax offsets is a variation of the current system used to assure state compliance with what are billed as "voluntary" standards.

At present, employers are theoretically liable to a 3 percent payroll tax to finance the system. Actually they pay three-tenths of 1 percent to the federal government for administration and varying taxes to the state for benefits, the specific tax depending on the condition of the fund and the individual employer's experience in employe turnover.

Unemployment Figure Down By 387,000

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment declined 387,000 in March to 4,362,000. Employment jumped by 1,106,000 to 63,828,000.

The government, in reporting this today, said the rise in employment and drop in unemployment were both about twice the amount seasonably expected for the month.

It was the biggest February-to-March drop in unemployment since 1950. The employment rise for the month was the biggest since 1951.

PARTLY SEASONAL

Seymour Wolfbein, head of the Labor Department Employment Statistics Bureau, told a news conference that while the improvement was partly seasonal the job picture definitely shows substantial signs of repair from depression damage.

The seasonally adjusted ratio of unemployment to the total work force declined from 6.1 per cent in February to 5.8 per cent in March.

Wolfbein's holding a news conference to release the report was an unprecedented thing.

Ordinarily, the regular monthly job reports of the Commerce and Labor departments have simply been handed to newsmen in printed releases.

The unusual procedure pointed up the administration's gratification over the developments.

EARLY FORECAST

Administration officials from President Eisenhower on down had forecast Monday that the report would show great improvement in the job picture.

Wolfbein said one of the really heartening things in the new figures is that practically all of the job improvement was concentrated among males 25 years or over —the prime working group and family responsibility group in the population.

On the other hand, Wolfbein noted that the number of persons unemployed 15 weeks or longer has remained steady at about 1½ million. He said this underscored that "we are by no means out of the woods," particularly among the long-term unemployed.

Similarly, James B. Carey, head of the International Union of Electrical Workers, said in a statement that the figures were no cause for celebration. Carey said 175,000 electrical workers are still looking for work and that there is "a still desperate crisis" in the job situation.

Carey has been one of the prime movers behind an AFL-CIO jobless rally to be held here Wednesday. The rally will seek to promote jobless aid measures.

Even with the new lower unemployment total of 4,362,000 for March, the idle total still is the highest for the month in recent years except for March of last year in the depths of the recession.

FIGURES CITED

The corresponding report for February showed employment at 62,722,000 and unemployment at 4,749,000.

Secretary of Commerce Lewis Strauss said the changes reflected in the job report would be "actually the best improvement figures between February and March in years."

To top that off, Strauss said other government data, some of it still to be released, shows the national economy is whirling along at the end of 1959's first quarter at its greatest pace ever in history.

INCOME AT PEAK

The commerce secretary said that with national income at a peak and prices remaining stable, purchasing power never was higher; the value of all goods and services, or gross national product, is also at a record.

In fact, said Strauss, "The signs indicate that the current spring vigor in the economy should increase in the coming months."

Strauss predicted the new job data would show a more than seasonal drop in unemployment and a substantial rise in employment. A drop among the idle of 300,000 would be the best March improvement since 1952, and one of 325,000 the best since 1950.

GOOD NEWS

Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell went to the White House Monday to fill in Eisenhower personally on the good news. Afterward press secretary James C. Hagerty said the President promised today's job report would be "gratifying and of great interest to all Americans."

Negro Jobless Rate Twice That Of White Workers, Hill Asserts

ST. PAUL — Fiscal policies of the National Administration are making Negro employment gains extremely difficult and in many cases are destroying past progress, NAACP Labor Secretary Herbert Hill charged here Saturday.

Mr. Hill delivered the main address at the third annual American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations Institute on Human Rights.

As certified agents, he said, trade unions are often the decisive factor in determining status of the Negro worker. "All too often there is great disparity between declared public policy of the national AFL-CIO and the day-to-day reality experienced by northern as well as southern Negro wage earners," Mr. Hill declared.

He added that "during 1958, the non-white unemployment rate, as estimated by the census bureau, was higher than at any time during the last 12 years.

"In 1958 and the first quarter of 1959, the non-white unemployment rate has almost been consistently more than double the white unemployment rate.

"This would indicate that very

Administration Support Of Benefits Ruled Out

By WILLIAM J. EATON

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — President Eisenhower called on the states anew Monday to boost regular unemployment compensation payments to 50 per cent of the average weekly wage in each state and make the payments run for 26 weeks.

He told eight governors at a special White House conference the action should be taken this year. The President ruled out any administration support for arbitrary federal standards on the amount and duration of jobless benefits.

In Congress, the Senate Finance Committee unanimously approved a House-passed bill to extend for three months the temporary federal unemployment compensation program born during the depth of the recession. The program would die March 31 unless extended.

The committee sent the bill to the Senate floor for expected approval Wednesday after rejecting, 12-4, a substitute sponsored by 18 Democrats. The substitute would have renewed the program for 15 months and provided federal funds on a grant rather than loan basis.

The White House meeting was called by the President to study ways of strengthening the federal state unemployment compensation program. Eisenhower's views were reported by Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell.

IKE URGES IMPROVEMENT

The President has been urging the states since 1954 to improve the jobless pay program.

Mitchell also said the administration soon would recommend to Congress that it extend coverage of the permanent unemployment compensation program to 3,200,000 additional workers.

Unemployed Many Amid 'Prosperity'

By ROBERT E. HOYT
Of Our Washington Bureau

ROANOKE, VA.—This city in a metropolitan area of 150,000 population is a study in contrast.

Almost one in every 10 of its 60,000-some workers is without a job.

Yet the merchants are prosperous. The people on the streets are well-dressed. It gives every indication of being a growing, thriving city.

HOYT

Yet when the Yale & Towne lock plant says it will have 75 new jobs available in a "month or two," there are 1,200 applications—immediately.

Roanoke lost some 2,000 jobs when the American Viscose Corp. closed its rayon-producing plant here last Fall.

About the same number of workers have been laid off by the Norfolk & Western Railway in the last 15 months as it closed up shop operations and switched from steam to diesel locomotives.

These are the big jolts that have left Roanoke with 6,375 persons out of work—9.5 per cent of the labor force.

In the jargon of the U.S. Department of Labor, Roanoke is a "Group E city where job seekers are considerably in excess of job openings and the situation is expected to continue over the next four months."

Local experts, in fact, foresee no improvement for the rest of the year. They estimate that there will be some new jobs, but feel newcomers to the labor market will keep the 1-in-10 ratio undisturbed.

Still there is prosperity. Roanoke depends for its livelihood not only on its own people but on those from the whole of western Virginia, even some from North Carolina and West Virginia. It is the center of a giant trading area.

Ratio Above U.S. Average

THERE ARE OTHER FACTORS too: less than a third of the workers are in manufacturing, and those in relatively small plants; almost as many deal in "services"; many of Roanoke's potential workers are women who may have other income in the family.

Still, 1-in-10 is a nigh ratio, well above the national average.

Some Receive $40 a Week

ONE OF THE UNFORTUNATES is O. W. Kasey, a Negro who worked as a laborer for the N & W Railway for 10¼ years before he was laid off last summer.

Railroad workers get unemployment compensation of $40 a week. That ran out in February. He and his wife and seven children live on Hanover Avenue in Roanoke.

The oldest of the children is 8. The twins are a few weeks old.

Kasey is 44. He's been in Roanoke for 20 years. "I worked for the gas company before I went in the Army. Served 4 years and 3 months. Couple of years after I got out I went with the railroad," he says.

Kasey is a big man, with a barrel chest and powerful arms. His strength is no help in the battle he's fighting.

"Nobody got a job for a man without a trade," he says. "And I don't see how I can get back at the railroad. There's some talk they'll merger the N & W and the Virginian (Railroad). It'll most likely cut out jobs—same as when they brought in the diesels. Everything they do cuts out labor."

Kasey has borrowed, he's gotten a little help from one source or another, and "I get up a little something every so often—cleaning brick or a day job."

In the early days of the layoff, his wife could get a little "day work," but not even that was possible in the later days of her pregnancy or since the twins were born.

Kasey is about at the end of his rope. About the future, he says: "I don't know what I can do. I've been everywhere looking for a job. I don't know what you do when you've looked everywhere—and there's nothing. When you've borrowed and you can't borrow any more. I just don't know."

There's no reason to believe Kasey is being discriminated against when he applies for a job. But the Negro in him is—partly because he isn't "acceptable" for many jobs, partly because he has not the same opportunities for training.

But the situation is no worse in Roanoke than the rest of the country.

Negro Percentage Is High

OVER THE U.S., 10 per cent of the labor force are Negro. Of the unemployed, 20 per cent are Negro. Of those unemployed six months or more, 26 per cent are Negro.

The State of Virginia's relief regulations make it tough on the Kaseys. It's not enough to be in need, an applicant must also be "unemployable"—physically unable to do work.

If Kasey were to leave his wife and family, they could get some help under the Aid to Dependent Children program. But nothing while he's there.

At 35 It's Not So Bad

ANOTHER KIND OF PROBLEM is presented by George T. Stout Jr. and his family. He worked for American Viscose for 17 years, started when he was 18.

At 35 he has a wife and three children, 8, 6, and 4 months. He made $1.84 an hour at Viscose, hasn't worked since last August. His unemployment compensation, $28 a week, has run out.

Since then? "I had some money put away that I thought was going to put my boy through school someday. I've been stringing that along—and hoping," Stout said. "And I just put my wife to work. She's a nurse and she just got a job in a doctor's office."

Stout and his wife have their home on Highland Avenue almost paid for.

Ends Meet and That's All

ANOTHER N & W WORKER who's "making ends meet—and that's all" is E. H. Walker. He's not unemployed according to the official records.

He made $70 a week as a laborer in the "East End shops." Now he works as a porter in a department store at $35 a week. He could actually get $5 more a week in compensation but, as he points out, "That don't last." Railway workers get $40 a week when laid off.

He owes two loan companies, about $450 each. He's borrowed some money from his mother-in-law. He's had his loan payments reduced "but I still can't make 'em."

Walker's wife has "picked up a little money baby sitting" but "not enough to mean anything." He worked for the railroad 11 years, was buying his home.

Walker was clean cut, well dressed.

He confessed: "I had it good. But I don't know what's going to happen now.

"If I got my old job back right now it'd take me two years to catch up what I borrowed. Next thing you know they're going to take my furniture and I don't know what to do about that."

Washington Bureaus Happy Havens Of Negroes In White Collar Jobs

Newport Courier Mon. 6-8-65
Charleston S.C.
p. 6-A

By THOMAS R. WARING
Editor of The News and Courier

WASHINGTON.

One of the reasons — and probably the chief reason—why Washington has drawn thousands of Negro migrants is the wealth of white collar jobs.

A city where the principal industry is government, Washington has acres of offices teeming with clerical workers. These positions pay well, considering the routine duties involved in many of them. They also afford security, generous vacations and sick leave.

Nowhere else in the world are so many safe, comfortable spots available. And with the emphasis nowadays placed on equal opportunity regardless of race, new doors have opened for colored people once consigned largely to heavy labor or menial tasks.

As one prominent official remarked to this reporter, "It's gotten so you almost have to be colored to get a job around here."

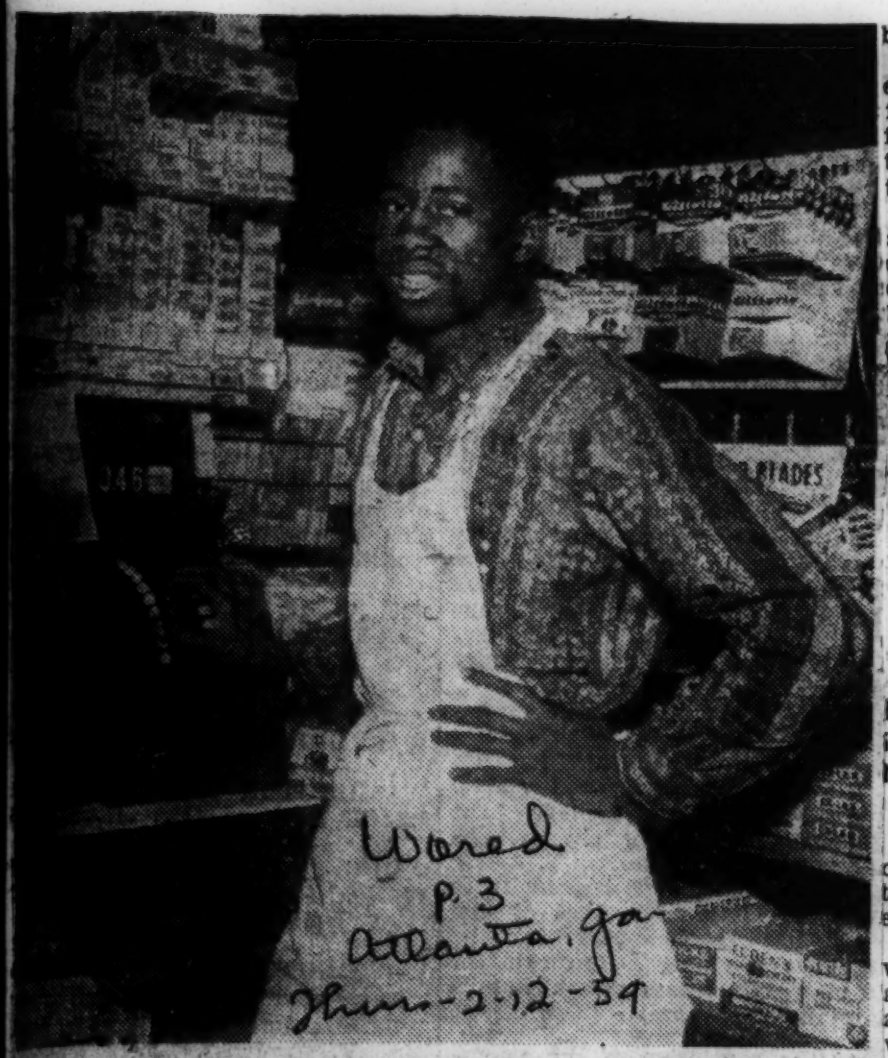
A visit to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for years a favorite haunt among tourists who want to see how money is made, brings quick and visible confirmation. From the guards and the guides who shepherd long lines of visitors to the scores of employes checking and counting the green currency as it comes from the presses, the personnel appears to be about 90 per cent colored.

Though in some capacities both white and colored employes seem to be assigned without regard to race, in others a sort of separation appears to exist. For instance, this visitor noted only white men operating the presses and other mechanical equipment. No doubt exceptions could be found on closer checking. Sitting at tables were row on row of colored women who quickly riffled through sheets of $1, $5, $10 and higher denomination bills. Others were looking for printing imperfections and marking the faulty bills with a red pencil. Only a few white women were at these desks.

Some of the other bureaus, I have been told, likewise have high percentages of Negroes in their clerical positions. In time, a growing number of supervisory and other important positions will be manned by Negroes. Some observers believe the civil service and the armed forces are destined to become heavily, if not predominantly, Negro in manpower.

Though Washington is more than half Negro in population, sightseeing crowds and clients in hotels and restaurants still are almost totally white. Segregation of course does not exist in transportation, schools, or other areas. But in less conspicuous ways the races manage to separate.

What actually goes on within the granite and marble halls of federal government would require far more study than a quick visit can disclose. Some day a historian may find it worthwhile to delve into the subject. He may be baffled by curtains carefully drawn over the color lines.



HOLDS DOWN RESPONSIBLE POSITION — Joseph Beavers is a young man with a responsible position. The 19-year-old college freshman is a cashier for the Speedy Market at Greensferry Avenue, and Ashby Street. W. C. Wilson, manager of the store, says Joseph practically grew up at the market, having started out as a stock boy three years ago.

Clerk Job Open In Post Office To Women Here

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 6-3-59

Another job opportunity is being opened in Atlanta for qualified women. The openings are being made available in the Post Office where plans are being formulated to use women as substitute postal clerks.

The information regarding the eligibility of women for the posts was made known to the WORLD Saturday, and a confirmation on the report was received Tuesday directly from the Civil Service Commission.

According to the information received from the commission, there will be no barriers for any woman in acquiring the postal clerk job, except the standard civil service examination that must be passed by all applicants.

An official with the Civil Service Board of Examiners reported Tuesday that approximately five women are already working as postal clerks on a trial basis "to see how they fit in."

The official said there has been no manpower shortage that prompted the acceptance of women's applications. He reported that the applications of women who successfully pass the Civil Service Examination will be reviewed on the same basis as that of men and that the women will receive calls to work on a similar basis as the men employees.

Many women have already taken the tests that is a prerequisite for employment in the post office. If employed, the official said that the women will be placed in the Old Post Office only.

For further information and for applications, all correspondence concerning the new post office openings should be addressed to: The Executive Secretary; Board of U. S. Civil Service Examiners: U. S. Post Office; Old Post Office Building; 56 Forsyth St. N. W. Atlanta 1, Georgia.

Many Women Seek Post Office Jobs

World
Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 7-1-59

A large number of young women have filed applications for substitute postal clerks at the U.S. Post Office here according to the Women's Auxiliary of the Atlanta Branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees.

ATLANTA, Ga. (SNS) — A good percentage of these applicants is expected to pass written tests and be interviewed regarding employment.

These good paying jobs are being widely sought. The jobs became available when a traditional bar against women postal employees was lifted by the local post office. Women have worked in such capacities in other sections of the nation.

The duties will be light and the post office intends to clear up any misunderstanding or uncertainties that women may have regarding the jobs. Employment wil ibe dignified and within the capabilities of their sex.

All new employees are hired as substitutes, and as such, will have no definite schedule of hours of work. A work day may consist of less than eight hours or occasionally it may last longer than eight. As a rule, most new employees will be required to work in the afternoons and nights. Duties will consist primarily of sorting letters. As seniority and skill increase it is quite possible that other duties will be undertaken.

It is generally understood that the Post Office Department is looking forward to more fully mechanizing its functions, and women will be able to fit well into this situation as machine operators. More than 100 women have been recently added to the clerical force in the Washington, D. C. Post Office, and it is expected that Atlanta will soon have a large female force.

The Post Office Department is highly recommended for its security aspects, liberal leave provisions, insurance and retirement policies. In view of these facts, any young women offered employment will do well to accept this challenge and join the ranks of government employees

Bus Driver Maps Plans for Golden Glove Title

Bill Johnson, who is as familiar with jet planes as the CTA bus he drives, also is adept in the ring. He's mapping his Golden Gloves strategy as he rolls along in North avenue.

BY HOWARD BARRY

Bill Johnson, former air force jet plane mechanic, is planning his Golden Gloves strategy as he drives his CTA bus along North avenue these January days.

Johnson, a hard hitting fighter who is popular with the crowds, enlivens his performance by carrying on a patter of comment, mildly razzing his opponent, between exchanges of punches. While waiting for stop lights along his bus route he may think up some new and subtle cracks before his first bout of the 1959 campaign.

Johnson, who won numerous boxing titles while in the air force was Chicago's south sectional light heavyweight champion last season. He lost a decision to Kent Green in the City Finals. Green subsequently went on to a Golden Gloves championship and a place on the Intercity team.

Chicagoan Since '58

Johnson, 23, whose home was in Jackson, Tenn., before his four year hitch in military service, has been a Chicagoan since his discharge in January of last year. He lives in a bachelor apartment at 3309 W. Warren av. His main interest now is a career with the CTA. His good humor enables him to maintain an efficient, easy going manner thru all the harassments which beset a bus driver in Chicago's wintry weather.

While stationed at the Yokota air base in the Tokyo area, Johnson won the Far East air force 175 pound title. After returning to this country, he won the world wide air force championship and also the air service championship at his weight.

He began his boxing career while with the air force. In 73 fights, he has won 62, scoring 33 knockouts. In his 11 defeats he was stopped only once, when he incurred a cut over an eye.

In the 1959 Golden Gloves city tournament, Johnson is ready to take up where he left off when he dropped that close decision to Green in last year's city finals. He is training in the Catholic Youth organization gymnasium for the tournament which begins with the south sectional event in St. Rita's gymnasium Feb. 9, 10, and 11, continues with the north sectional in St. Andrew's Feb. 16, 17, and 19 and is climaxed by the city finals in St. Andrew's Feb. 23.

Golden Gloves boxers will report for the first of the medical examinations Friday between 6:30 and 8 p. m. in the C. Y. O. gymnasium, 1140 W. Jackson blvd. The boxers will be checked in by inspectors of the Central Amateur Athletic union. These inspectors are Paul Staff, John K. Vorres, Joe Miller, and Edwin J. Albrecht.

It takes footwork, too, to beat a ring opponent. Bill Johnson defies snow to stay in shape for Golden Gloves bouts.

ILLINOIS HOUSE MEASURE ADDS AGE BIAS BAR

New Bill Would Create Probe Group

[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Springfield, Ill., March 11 — Discrimination because of age would be illegal under Gov. Stratton's Fair Employment Practices commission bill, introduced in the House Wednesday with bipartisan backing.

It would create a five member state Equality of Employment commission with power to investigate complaints of discrimination against persons because of race, color, religion, national origin, ancestry, or age.

Earlier Bills Offered

Bills introduced by Democrats earlier in the session did not include provision for older persons who have trouble getting jobs.

Rep. William H. Robinson [R., Chicago] was chief sponsor of the governor's FEPC bill. He was backed by 23 other representatives, including Rep. Corneal A. Davis [D., Chicago], chief sponsor of an earlier bill. Davis told a reporter that he will not obstruct the Robinson bill.

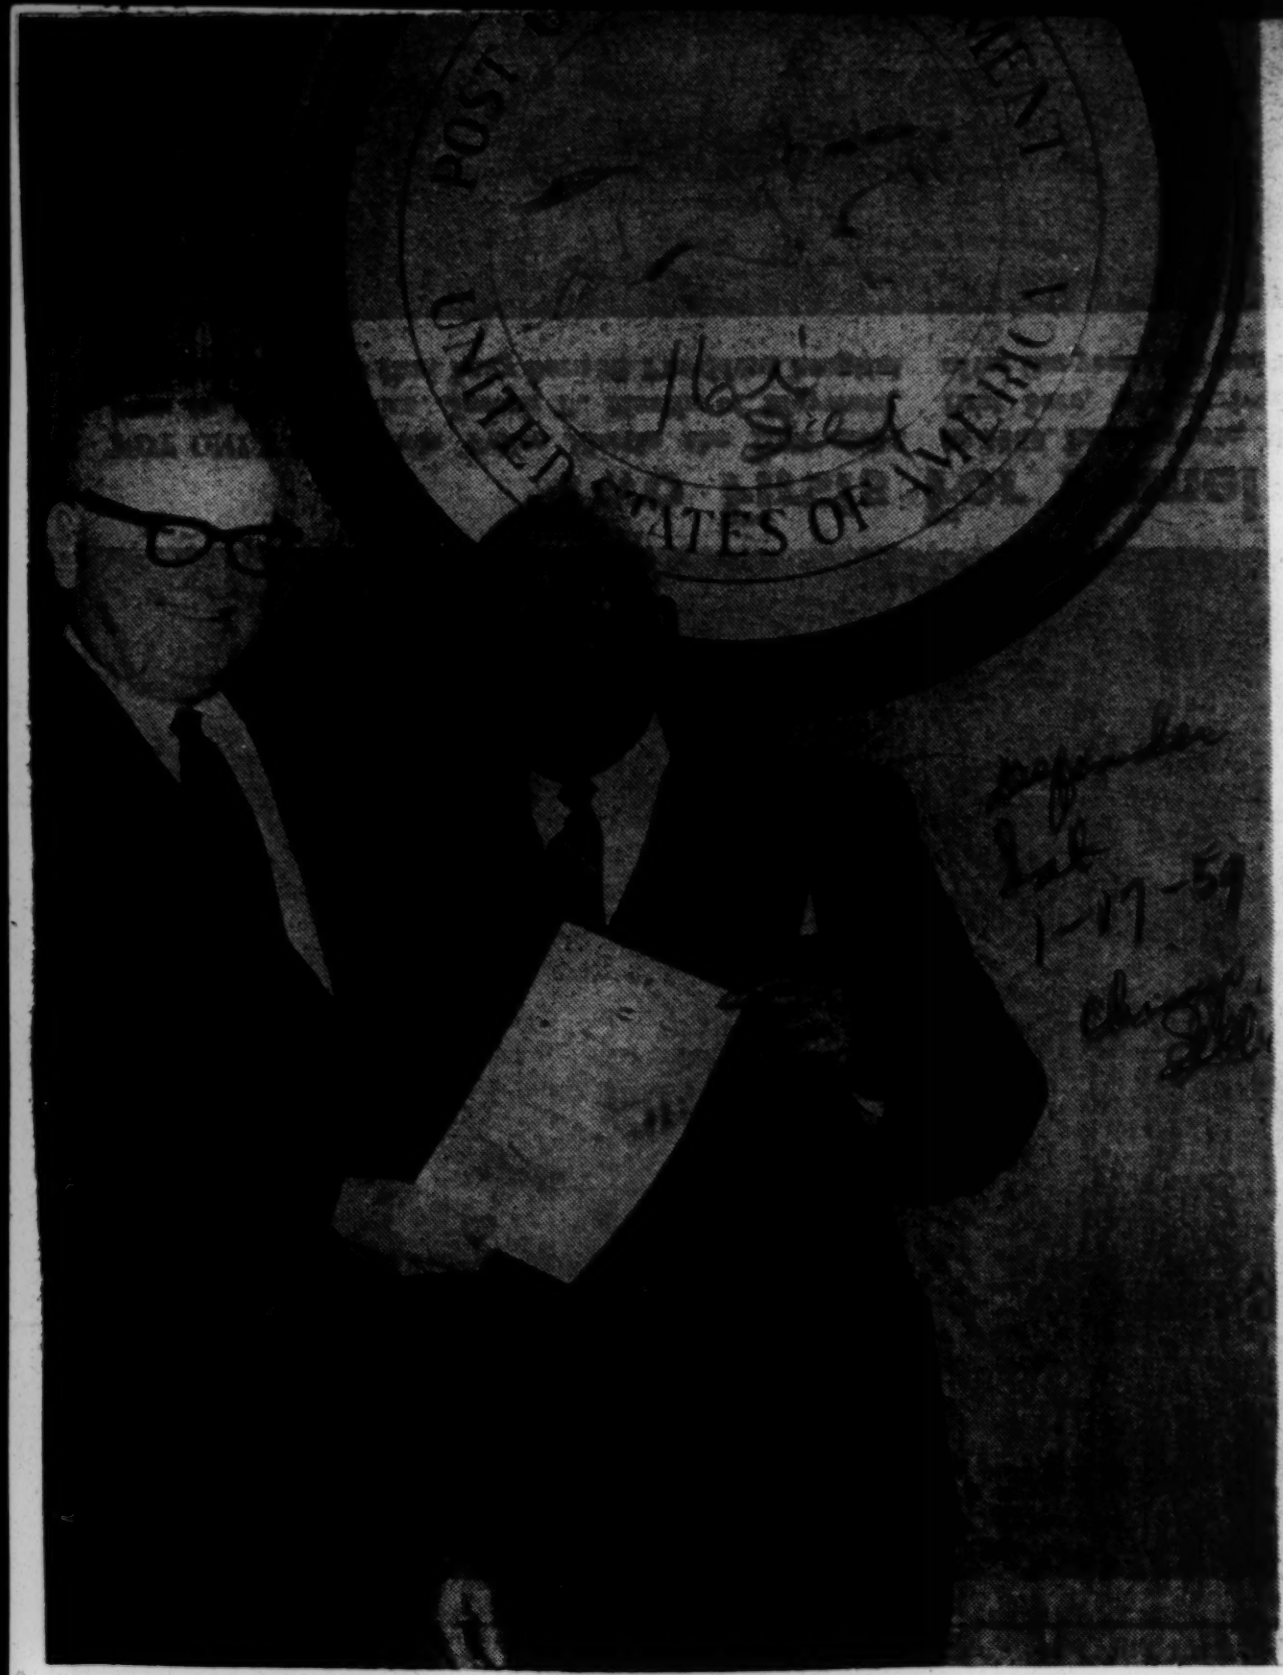
At past sessions, FEPC measures occasionally have been passed by the House, but always met death in the Senate. Republican leaders this session told Gov. Stratton that they would not introduce the administration measure.

Plan Two Offices

The equality commission with a $50,000 appropriation and offices at Chicago and Springfield, would carry on educational campaigns, investigate complaints, issue subpenas, hold hearings, and ask courts to take action against discriminators.

Rep. Anthony J. Scariano [D., Park Forest] introduced bills to abolish the office of public administrator in all counties and to turn over to state's attorneys the work and fees involved in settling estates of persons who die without wills and heirs in the state.

Scariano told news men his bills were designed as substitute for a Stratton administration measure to give the Cook county public administrator a $20,000 a year salary. He now pays himself and office expenses from fees. Scariano is a co-sponsor of a pending bill by Rep. Robert W. McCarthy [D., Lincoln] which would permit out-of-state heirs to nominate Illinois administrators of estates.



Steps Down After 41 Years' Postal Service

ROBERT S. DUDLEY (right) 9410 Michigan ave. retires after 41 years of Postal Service. Dudley was given a special luncheon in his honor and Carl A. Schroeder, Chicago postmaster (left) delivered to him a personal letter of congratulations from Postmaster General Summerfield. Dudley also received the Honorary Recognition Certificate.

Edwards Receives Postal Promotion

James C. Edwards, 4608 S. Michigan ave., has been advanced to the management staff of the Chicago Post Office.

Edwards has been an employee of the post Office for 30 years. He has been assigned to the "roundtable" section. The section is one of the key unit of the Post Office since through it all outgoing mail is dispatched to hundreds of railroad trains.

A person such as Edwards who is assigned to the "roundtable" is considered a top distributor because of the large number of schemes, train schedules and dispatches he must learn and retain.

Edwards' new position will be that of foreman of the mails. He will be assigned to supervise postal employees at the 22nd st. postal station.

A married man, Edwards has five children and four grandchildren. He attends Park Manor Congregational church at 7000 S. Park ave. and is a member of the board of directors of the Peoples Co-Op Credit union.

He is also a member, past president and vice president of the Roosevelt university alumni association; the NAACP, Postal Employees Alliance and the Hyde Park Co-Op.

Postmaster Carl A. Schroeder congratulated Edwards on his advancement and discussed the technical details and responsibilities of his new assignment.

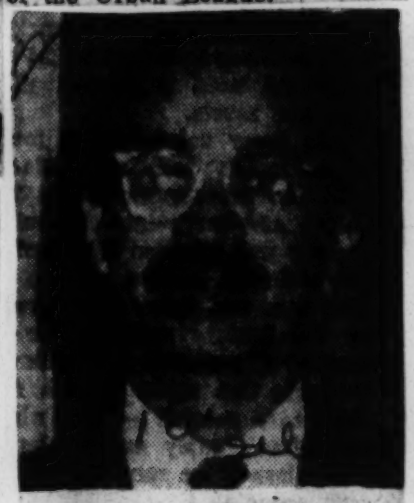
Morrow Gets Top Spot In Post Office

Postmaster Carl A. Schroeder announced this week that William P. Morrow of 7209 Calumet Avenue has been promoted to the management staff of the main Chicago Post Office.

Morrow, a veteran postal worker, was made Foreman of the Mails which is a supervising unit of mail distributors at the main Post Office.

His most recent assignment was to the Label section where sack labels are prepared and printed for the million of mails sacks used by the Chicago office. He has been employed in the postal system for 30 years.

A native of Franklin, North Carolina, Morrow has been married for 23 years. He has two daughters and one grandchild. He attends St. Mary's Church at 5300 South Dearborn Street. His wife Thelma is active in Church's affairs. Morrow is also a member of the Urban League.



WILLIAM P. MORROW

NEGRO FILLING A KEY POSITION IN MAJOR BANK

He Is Racial Pioneer in Several Firms

BY ROY OTTLEY

Norman A. Simon, assistant to the president of a major Loop bank, has been a successful racial pioneer in several Chicago companies which have begun the process of integration.

He was the first Negro to work as a commercial bank teller in Chicago, the first to be sales representative of a business machines company, and the first to serve as a timekeeper with a big auto products house.

He is the assistant to Edgar M. Heymann, president of the Exchange National bank. As such, he solicits new business, analyzes financial statements of small businesses applying for loan, and is a member of the speakers' bureau at the bank.

Describes His Job

He said that his activities are not limited to Negro accounts, and that his public relations work carries him to all parts of the city.

He was born in New Orleans on Jan. 30, 1922, one of five children. His father, John M. Simon, a graduate of Dillard university, is vice president of the Good Citizens Life Insurance company.

In New Orleans, young Simon attended Joseph A. Craig elementary school, Xavier Preparatory, and McDonald High No. 5, from which he graduated in 1940.

In Army Four Years

His education was interrupted by four years of service in the army in North Africa and Europe. He was mustered out in 1945 as a technical sergeant.

Soon afterward he came to Chicago and got a job with the Marimont Auto Products company. Three years later he joined the Mammoth Life Insurance company as an agent.

He resigned to obtain night work in the postoffice to enable him to attend Roosevelt university. He majored in finance and graduated in 1953 with a B. S. C. degree.

Now Studying Banking

The next two years Simon served as a teller at the Main State bank. He resigned to join the staff of Remington Rand, Inc., and in 1957 entered the employment of the Exchange bank.

He now is a student at the American Banking institute.

He is married to the former Leonette Mayronne, a graduate of Alexis Business school. They have three children: Lenore, 8; Jeffrey, 4; and Sandra, 3.

15 WITNESSES PRAISE, ASSAIL RIGHT-TO-WORK

Indianapolis, Jan. 30 [Special]—Fifteen witnesses testified Thursday night at the Senate labor committee's public hearing on a bill to repeal thte state's right-to-work law. An 18 minute union movie also was shown.

Sen. George W. McDermott [R., Alexandria], committee chairman, turned over the gavel to Sen. Roy Conrad [R., Monticello], ranking member of the committee, after the first witness was heard. McDermott, suffering from influenza, returned to his hotel room.

Conrad rapped for order 27 times as opposing camps cheered their witnesses. One of the committee members felt the impact of Conrad's gaveling. Sen. Nelson Grills [D., Indianapolis] jumped to his feet to protest the questions Sen. D. Russell Bontrager [D., Elkhart] was asking Dallas Sells, state president of the AFL-CIO.

Chicagoan Testifies

"Junior, be seated," Conrad ordered.

Bernard Mamet, a Chicago labor attorney representing the Indiana Workers Protective Committee Inc.; said the right-to-work law was legislation for the "neurotic, heretic and maladjusted."

"It's for the guy who refuses to conform to sciety and now runs up to this Senate committee with his problems," he added.

Methodist Bishop Richard C. Raines of Indianapolis, said:

"I am convinced that so-called right-to-work laws such as ours in Indiana are in the best long time interest of the labor movement and the individual union worker. The law has not been on our statute books long enough for us to know what its effect will be on this movement. We need further experience."

Claims 63,803 Loses

Sells produced a report from Ralph E. Monroe, a certified public accountant, which compared the period from July 1 to December 31, 1957 with the corresponding period of 1958. The report showed the state AFL-CIO lost 63,803 members. The right-to-work law prohibits compulsory union membership.

During questioning, Sells admitted that unemployment and other factors, in addition to the right-to-work issue, were involved.

Charlete Stevens, an office worker at the Perfect Circle corporation foundry in New Castle, pleaded for retention of the law, saying that during the 1955 strike she was "abused threatened and insulted."

A bill which would take state funds away from Indiana's 200 smaller high schools, forcing them to consolidate or pay their own way, headed for the Senate Friday. It passed the House by a 59 to 37 margin.

NEGRO WOMAN HAS VITAL ROLE IN INTEGRATION

Serves Industry Here in Many Ways

BY ROI OTTLEY

Mrs. Ora Alice Higgins, assistant employment manager of Spiegel Inc., mail order company, has made a significant contribution to the racial integration trends in Chicago's industry.

The Negro executive has served both as a participant and teacher in racial integration programs. She has also served as a personnel adviser to several business firms, and is credited with helping to introduce racial integration without untoward incident.

Hired New Personnel

When she joined Spiegel in 1945, she was given the job of coördinating the company's integration program. Not only did she recruit and interview, but she tested and hired the new personnel.

Beyond these duties, Mrs. Higgins counsels employes, handles union grievances, tours the schools to recruit new employes, and represents the company at industrial personnel meetings and conferences.

Mrs. Higgins was born in Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 24, 1919. She was one of five children. Her father, the late Rev. Ira McKinney, settled the family in Chicago soon after her birth. He was assistant pastor of Greater Bethesda Baptist church for 17 years.

Received N. U. Degree

She attended Felsenthal Elementary school, and later Wendell Phillips High school. She enrolled at Northwestern university, where she received a bachelor of science degree in 1946. In 1951, she received a master's degree in personnel administration, one of the first Negro women to do so.

Mrs. Higgins served as an industrial specialist for the Chicago Urban league from 1941 to 1945. She also has served as personnel adviser for department store training classes conducted by the board of education.

Mrs. Higgins has been honored by the Associated Organizations of Vocational Achievement. Her busy schedule includes membership on the Mayor's Commission on Fair Employment Practices, the American Management association, Parkway Y. W. C. A. and the N. A. A. C. P.

Her husband is William Higgins, a Swift & Co. safety inspector.

Handled Calls—Illinois Bell Telephone Co. "Royal Tour Operators" are shown an electronic device which was presented to Prince Philip by Major Lenox R. Lohr, president of the Museum of Science and Industry, during the recent visit of the members of the royal family to Chicago. Showing the instrument is Mrs. Anna Bohan. The operators are: Mrs. Barbara Jones, Mrs. Joyce Nixon and Josephine Henderson. The girls handled all calls to the royal yacht, which was anchored in Lake Michigan near Grant Park.

NEGRO WOMAN GIVES ADVICE TO EMPLOYES

BY ROI OTTLEY

Mrs. Lovelyn J. Evans, employe counselor of the Campbell Soup company for nearly 17 years, has contributed significantly to the progress of the south side community.

Mrs. Evans

She also helped improve race relations in industry. She was among the first Negroes to be employed by the company and now holds an executive position, counseling both white and Negro.

Her duties include helping to adjust problems relating to personal troubles, attendance, work performance, job attitudes and conduct, prompt payment of debts, and wise buying. She deals with assignments and garnishments, and interviews those who are ending their employment with the company.

Worked on Newspaper

Until she joined the Campbell company, Mrs. Evans was the club editor of the Chicago Whip, a Negro newspaper. For 20 years she helped promote the annual football game between two Negro institutions, Wilberforce university and Tuskegee Institute.

She also served 10 years as a "colonel" in the Salvation Army's fund raising drives, was secretary of the South Side Boys Club auxiliary and the Illinois Children's Home and Aid auxiliary, and was co-founder and board chairman of the Juvenile Delinquency committee [5th district].

Mrs. Evans was born in Chicago, March 9, 1895, one of three children. Her father, Joseph Miller, who started his career as a coachman to a noted attorney, Luther Laflin Mills, established the Buena Park Express & Warehouse, which he sold during his old age for $100,000. Her mother claimed to be a descendant of Richard Wagner, the composer.

Classmate of Pegler

Mrs. Evans attended Horace Greeley Elementary school and Lakeview High school, where she was a classmate of Westbrook Pegler, newspaper columnist. In a syndicated column, he described her as "one of the brightest students in the class."

Mrs. Evans, who has taken many specialized courses at Northwestern university, is married to John W. Evans, who recently retired from the Illinois Bell Telephone company after 45 years of service.

They have two sons, John W. Jr., a Veterans administration employe, and Joseph M., assistant manager of Lake Meadows development; a daughter, Mrs. June Pelkey, a Child Care society secretary, and four grandchildren.

NEGRO MOVES UP ON SANITARY DISTRICT STAFF

Ex-Fighter Pilot Now a Civil Engineer

BY ROI OTLEY

George A. Taylor, who recently was made a senior civil engineer for the metropolitan sanitary district of Chicago, is the first Negro to occupy such a position in the department.

Taylor

He also was the first Negro engineer draftsman for the sanitary district, when he was employed in 1950. Three years later he became the first Negro to hold a junior civil engineer status in the department.

Prepares Progress Reports

Taylor's duties primarily involve layout plans, the preparation of reports on construction progress, and the final checks to see that contractors conform to contract specifications.

He attributes his achievement in steadily moving up within the ranks of the sanitary district to the fairness and liberal attitude of his superiors and the trustees of the department.

Taylor was born in Middlesex, Va., Oct. 17, 1919, one of five children. His late father, George P., was a truck farmer. He settled the family in Berwyn, Pa., where young Taylor attended elementary school.

Joins Air Force

The family moved back to Middlesex in 1934, where Taylor entered Middlesex High school and was graduated in 1938. He enrolled at Virginia State college in Petersburg. After three years there he joined the air force.

He served in World War II with the 332d fighter group, commanded by Col. B. O. Davis. He flew more than 50 missions as a fighter pilot in Italy, and served five years in the air force.

Taking advantage of the GI bill when he was discharged, Taylor came to Chicago and entered the Curtis-Wright School of Aeronautical Engineering [now Aeronautical university], and was graduated in 1950.

Hired as Draftsman

Soon afterwards he got a job with the sanitary district as a draftsman. Three years later he passed the civil service examination and was appointed a junior civil engineer. Recently he was promoted to senior engineer.

Taylor, a bachelor, is now a captain in the air force reserve research development group. He also is a member of the Air Force association, Chicago Catholic Interracial council, Chicago Urban league, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Tomato Grower Violates Child Labor Laws

SPRINGFIELD — Secretary of Labor, James P. Mitchell, obtained a court order from U. S. Judge Omer Poos, in the Federal District Court at Springfield prohibiting William L. Harmon of 1210 Rooney Ave., Bloomington, from violating the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act — the Federal Wage and Hour Law. This law makes it illegal to permit children under 16 to work on farms during local school hours.

According to Earl F. Halverson, Regional Director of the U. S. Labor Department's Wage and Hour Division, the court action grew out of a recent inspection by the Department's investigators who found 12 school age boys and girls, ranging from 8 to 15 years old, picking tomatoes on defendant's fields, during the hours when local schools were in session in McLean County.

The injunction prohibits Harmon from employing or permitting children under 16 to work on farm jobs during local school hours. It also requires him to keep records of the dates of birth and addresses of any minors who may be employed in farm work and prohibits future shipments in interstate commerce of crops grown on Harmon's farm, where under age children are permitted to work during local school hours.

Marjorie Lawson consultant on Industry Advisory Committee

WASHINGTON

Mrs. Marjorie McKenzie Lawson, Washington, D.C. attorney, served as the only colored member and one of two women members of the Industry Advisory Committee on Valuation which met here recently with Commissioner Norman P. Mason of the Federal Housing Administration.

The committee was broadly representative of leaders in the builders, lenders, manufacturers of building products, appraisers, real estate brokers, and publishers of trade journals.

They were invited by Commissioner Mason to review with him the policy and method by which the housing agency arrives at the estimate of the value of a dwelling unit, whether existing, new or proposed.

THE APPRAISAL procedure of FHA is of the greatest significance because it determines the amount of the loan that the Government will insure on a particular property, and thus influence standards of construction and establishes the standard for the financing and marketing of a great part of the nation's housing supply.

Among other members of the committee, appointed by Commissioner Mason, were Earl J. Morgan, president of the Mortgage Banks Association of America; R. C. (Dick) Hughes, former president of the National Association of Home Builders; Joseph Grazier, president of American Standard, one of the biggest manufacturers of plumbing supplies, and Charles K. Reiger, vice president of General Electric appliances and television.

The committee made various recommendations regarding the factors to be considered in arriving at valuation, and will continue to confer with Commissioner Mason.

MRS. LAWSON, who has had considerable experience in the production and financing of middle and low income housing on an open-occupancy basis, states that valuation factors influence the availability of good housing to minority families of moderate means in several ways.

One of the chief problems in producing housing for the minority market, Mr. Lawson says, "concerns the acquisition of suitable land for new housing, in the right environment, at the right price and in the proper condition for development.

"Another is the assumption by many builders that minority families cannot afford or will not appreciate a good or 'quality' house, even when builders can be found who are willing to develop and sell on an open-occupancy basis.

"Many minority families are forced to buy older, existing properties in deteriorating neighborhoods, where low valuations and low loan commitments under FHA force these families to turn to conventional financing and high priced second mortgages."

IN COMMENTING on her appointment to this important committee, Mrs. Lawson said:

"Unless the special problems of minority families are represented in meetings such as this, the special attention that is necessary to the production of more and better housing, at prices these families can afford, may continue to be lacking.

"I am certain that housing officials need and would welcome more expressions of dissatisfaction, or inquiry, and especially of ideas from colored leadership, organizations and community groups."

Negro Bus Driver Hired In Wichita

Wichita, Kan. — Aaron Brown, 34-year-old former bus driver in Detroit, Mich., recently became the first Negro bus driver to be hired by the Wichita Bus Company.

Having had experience with the Detroit Department of Streets and Railways, Brown, who moved to Wichita a few months ago, applied for a position with the Wichita company. Shortly afterward, he received notice of the acceptance of his application and went through preliminary training in November.

When he applied, Brown was unaware that Negroes had not been hired as bus drivers by the company before. He was surprised to learn that the company was privately owned. A similar position in Detroit, he indicated, would be designated as a civil service job.

The Negro driver was one of the top applicants among seven drivers recently hired by the Wichita company. He became senior driver among the newly hired men.

RETURNS.—Mr. Frank Mills, 642 Troup avenue, Kansas City, Kansas, after 25 years of service with Armour Packing Company, began retirement on April 1. He was employed as a brander in the smoked meat department. He plans now to spend his time fishing and hunting. A native of Decatur, Ala., he has lived in Kansas City, Kas., 38 years, working previously with the Board of Trade in Kansas City, Mo. He plans to 'get about town' and take his wife, Mrs. Pearl Mills, to California on a vacation this summer.

5 Per Cent Of Negroes In Profession, Sales

TOPEKA, Kan. — A few Negroes, five per cent, are in the professions, managerial work or sales work, a survey by the Anti-Discrimination commission on employment shows. Of the white workers surveyed, 21 per cent were in the professions or in managerial work. Fifteen per cent worked in offices. About half that number, eight per cent were in sales work.

Questioned were the heads of 284 families. 142 of the majority group or whites, 112 Negro and 110 Mexican Americans. Also interviewed were 69 employers, who were selected to provide a cross-section of the basic types of business in Topeka.

Only in semi-skilled and unskilled labor were Negroes and Mexicans found in large percentages. Here were found 31 per cent of the Mexican-Americans and 32 per cent of the Negroes. When it came to skilled labor, eight per cent were Negroes, seven per cent Mexican-Americans and 32 per cent of the dominant white group.

Negroes were most numerous in service occupations. They made up one-half 40 per cent to be exact. A tiny group of whites, five per cent and four per cent of the Mexicans worked in this group.

Seven Negroes were self-employed and 18 whites. None of the Mexican-Americans were. Most workers were wage earners with the Mexicans and whites nearly equal, 106 of the whites, 103 of the Mexicans and 84 Negroes.

More whites than the others earned over $2 an hour, 44 per cent of the whites, 13 per cent of the Negroes and 14 per cent for the Mexicans. Most of the Mexican Americans earned from $1.50 to $1.99 an hour or 53 per cent with 37 per cent of the whites and 38 of the Negroes. Double the number of Negroes over both whites and Mexicans earned less than $1.

An equal number of Negroes and whites or 20 per cent had some college training against three per cent of the Mexicans. More whites, 31 per cent had completed high school, 25 per cent of the Negroes and 10 per cent of the Mexicans. Fifty-six per cent of the Mexicans had only finished grade school; against 33 per cent of the Negroes and 28 per cent of the whites.

The Negro in Topeka, disregarding his education finds most of his employment in the less skilled, lower paying and menial ocupations. Negroes holding semi-skilled and in-service ocupations included 80 per cent of the group surveyed, although only 33 per cent of the Negroes had less than a high school education. On the other hand 24 per cent of the white workers are in such jobs, yet 29 per cent have not gone beyond grammar school.

"What do members of the minority groups, asks the report, "think of their chances of employment in the city's firms. This is important as impressions, accurate or not, influence the type of jobs which Mexican-Americans and Negroes prepare themselves for and for which they apply."

A very large percentage of Negroes and Mexicans said they believed there were Topeka firms which did not hire Negroes and Mexicans for the jobs they could do. Two firms in particular, were mentioned with greater frequency than all other firms combined.

"This widespread belief on the part of minority group members that they would not be hired for certain jobs may be one important reason why, as employers reported, few Negroes and Mexicans have applied for clerical and white collar jobs."

Enough information was gained by this survey to show that Negroes and Mexican-Americans do not have equality of employment opportunities in the Capital city, regardless of the color of his skin concludes the report.

Retires After 40 Years of Government Work

Negro G. E. Lab Manager To Address Urban League

The Courier-Journal
Louisville Ky

A 37-year-old Louisville Negro, who became manager of a flight-propulsion laboratory at General Electric Company's Aircraft Gas Turbine division at Cincinnati, will speak at the Urban League's Equal Opportunity Day program Thursday.

He is John W. Blanton, son of Mr. and Mrs. John O. Blanton, 621 S. Eighth. The program will be in the Mason-Dixon Room at the Kentucky Fairgrounds.

Blanton, a graduate of Central High School and Purdue University, was described by Urban League board member Ben G. Robertson, Jr., as a living example of what Equal Opportunity Day represents.

The Urban League is an interracial agency with a program to foster equal education for Negroes.

Retired Will Be Feted by Group

New Orleans La.

Retired members of the New Orleans Branch of the National Alliance of Postal Employees will be honored at the 12th annual testimonial banquet Sunday at 4 p. m. at Vernon's restaurant.

EARLS

H. E. Yarborough, branch president, said the three to be paid a tribute are John A. Willis, John Harris and David White. Willis was formerly a letter carrier at Station B. and Harris and White are both former mail handlers.

Felton J. Earls, assistant distribution officer, Memphis Region, U. S. Post Office Department, will be the guest speaker. He is a native of New Orleans.

Negroes Eligible

Merit to Be Basis For Awarding Jobs

NEW ORLEANS — President Revius Ortique of the New Orleans Urban League board, and some 100 religious, social and civic leaders held two meetings recently with representatives of the Winn-Dixie-Hill Company. Climaxing the meetings, a policy of employment of Negroes on the basis of merit in the super markets owned by the company was established.

James Israel, public relations adviser on Negro affairs for Winn-Dixie, emphasized the determination on the part of the super market chain to move progressively forward on employing Negroes in various job categories.

J. G. Epperson, director of advertising for Winn-Dixie-Hill, said the company has agreed to work with the Urban League in the selection of employes and providing other company benefits to the Negro community.

THE FIRST meeting, a breakfast, was held in Portia's Restaurant and Grill and was attended by some 35 ministers and civic leaders who had been invited by the Rev. A. L. Davis Jr., chairman of a citizens committee on merit employment. On the same evening, a public reception for Mr. Israel and other company officials was held at the Two Sisters Restaurant. Sponsored by the New Orleans Urban League and the Winn-Dixie-Hill Company, this affair attracted more than 100 Negro and white citizens.

Employment Up Slightly in Dixie

A small rise in general employment between January and February was reported in the South by the local field office of the U.S. department of commerce.

The increase, only about one-tenth of 1 per cent, was reported mostly in nonagricultural industries which showed a gain of four-tenths of 1 per cent, while farm job opportunities were on the decline by three-tenths of 1 per cent.

According to a 15-state survey, ranging from Delaware to Texas, 93.2 per cent of the South's labor force was on the job in February of this year as compared to 93.2 per cent in January: 94.4 per cent in December and 95.1 per cent November, which was the peak month of employment last year.

La. Negroes Get More White Collar Jobs

WASHINGTON — The number of Negroes serving in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in federal agencies in the New Orleans area has increased nearly seven-fold since 1951, according to a recent survey made by the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy.

During this period, however, total federal employment in the New Orleans area has decreased by nearly 2,000 employees.

The committee conducted the survey on the basis of information which had been gathered in 1951 by the Fair Employment Board of the Civil Service Commission, relating to the number of Negro typists, clerks, and stenographers employed by federal agencies in New Orleans.

The total number of Negroes employed in these categories in 1951 was 17. The committee's survey of the same agencies as of March, 1959, showed that 115 Negroes are now employed in these job categories.

Commenting on the results of the survey, Committee Chairman Archibald J. Carey, jr., of Chicago, stated:

"We believe there is significance in the increase. The total number of Negroes now employed in these positions in New Orleans is not large, and it is also true that in some of the smaller agencies no Negroes at all are employed. Nevertheless, the survey indicates that qualified Negro-Americans are finding increased opportunities for white-collar office employment.

The President's Committee on Government Employment Policy was created by an Executive Order of President Eisenhower in January, 1955. Its function is to assist federal agencies in implementing the Administration's policy of prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, religion or national origin in civilian employment.

Negro 'White Collar' Employment Climbs In New Orleans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Negroes employed in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in federal agencies in New Orleans has increased nearly seven times since 1951, the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy announced Wednesday.

During the same period, total federal employment in the New Orleans area fell by nearly 2,000 employes.

The committee said there were 17 Negroes employed as clerks, stenographers or typists in 1951 and 115 as of March 1959.

"We believe there is significance in the increase," said Archibald J. Carey Jr., chairman of the committee. "The total number of Negroes now employed in clerical, stenographic and typing positions in New Orleans is not large, and it is also true that in some of the smaller agencies no Negroes at all are employed in these categories.

"Nevertheless, the survey indicates that with reference to these particular positions qualified Negro-Americans are finding increased opportunities for white-collar office employment in the federal agencies in this Southern city."

The committee was created by President Eisenhower in January 1955. Its function is to assist federal agencies to carry out the administration's policy of prohibiting discrimination on a basis of race, religion or national origin in federal civilian employment.

Veteran Messenger Gets Scroll on Retirement

By GEORGE J. MARTIN

"Jim" William Hathaway, hailed as a passing "institution—a landmark", wound up his duties Thursday as a messenger of the Louisiana supreme court.

The seven members of the high court sat around the conference table in the elaborate consultation room in the high court's new home in the civic center. In the offing stood court attaches and others.

All were smiling as Jim came into their midst in company with V. J. Courville, clerk of the supreme court.

"I guess I'd better bring them some coffee," Jim told Courville as he saw the justices around the table.

At that juncture Chief Justice John B. Fournet called to the honoree, "come up here Jim. The court is pleased to honor you on this your official retirement day. We have asked Associate Justice Walter B. Hamlin—who has known you longer than any of us have—to present you a scroll which you more than merit."

TRUE FRIEND OF COURT

Justice Hamlin then presented the scroll on which "It is ordered adjudged and decreed that 'Jim' William Hathaway be declared a true friend of the court . . ."

Further the scroll bore words thanking the faithful attendant for loyal services far beyond the call of duty.

The scroll was signed by the members of the high court, and along its margin were inscribed the names of attaches and a number of others.

"I feel," Justice Hamlin said, "that I have been honored by the chief justice and my brother associate justices of the supreme court in delivering this farewell address to our good and faithful friend, William Hathaway, affectionately known to all of us as 'Jim', who has served this court for so many years, loyally, efficiently and well.

DEPARTURE REGRETTED

"Our friend Jim has been a part of the supreme court from the time when, about 1907, as a young man, he helped in building the foundations of the civil courts building (then known as the new courthouse building), located on Conti and Royal, from the confines of which this court moved last summer.

"With Jim's retirement from his duties as an employe of this court there passes an institution—a landmark—call it what one will—and I feel sure that I express, on behalf of every member and attache of this court, a deep regret that we do not any longer have his ready and willing efficient services, his pleasant smile, and his genteel politeness in every action he performed, which has made all of us love and admire him."

Hathaway owns his home at 1639 N. Villere, where he lives with a daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Myers. He said that with the assistance of Courville, he has arranged for social security payments, supplemented by a nice lump sum which he already has received.

CHARLES J. EDWARDS, of New Orleans, left, is presented a diamond service emblem for 50 years' service with Esso Standard Oil Company by E. Duer Reeves, executive vice president. He also received a watch and a trip to New York, accompanied by his wife and son, Don.

Md. makes new rules for migrants

11-7-59 BALTIMORE

The Marylond Board of Health announced a new set of regulations for migratory labor camps in the state last week.

They provide for: annual issuance of permits and frequent inspections by state health officials; penalties for workers failing to cooperate in the maintenance of the camps;

Also: minimum requirements in sanitary and bathing facilities; minimum space-per-person requirements and fire safety measures.

The new regulations, in effect next spring, will govern about 8,000 workers in both public and private camps.

The regulations have been endorsed by the state farm bureau. They were drawn up by a group headed by Dr. Paul E. Nystrom, director of the University of Maryland's extension services.

Gas and Electric Co. hires no colored meter readers

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 7-18-59 p. 8

'White only' policy called 'judgment of what works best for the community . . .'

BALTIMORE

The Baltimore Gas and Electric Co., "one of the largest employers in the State of Maryland," hires no colored people as meter readers because it is their "judgment of what works best for the community. . . ."

J. W. Carothers, director of personnel for the firm, told the AFRO on Wednesday that the company has never hired colored men as meter readers.

He said workers in this department, all white, are selected on the basis of "who will be best fitted to serve the public in Baltimore . . ."

Mr. Carothers was questioned about the Gas company's hiring policies as a part of an AFRO survey to determine job opportunities in the Baltimore area.

IT WAS Mr. Carothers who said the Gas Company is 'one of the largest employers in Maryland,' and 'we have a large number of colored people in the organization from skilled to semi-skilled.'

He declined, however, to give any statistics. It is known that there are some construction workers, mostly laborers employed, and at least one home economist.

Mr. Carothers added that colored persons are 'hired throughout the company.' He would not elaborate on this statement.

However, he did say that persons hired as meter readers are required to be high school graduates and pass a physical fitness test.

An applicant who sought a job as meter reader with the Gas Company earlier this week was advised that there are no openings at present.

He reported that the interviewer advised him that even though there are no colored employed now should an opening occur his application would be 'considered.'

* * *

FOLLOWING ARE highlights of an AFRO reporter's interviews with Mr. Carothers, the Gas Company's personnel director. The first was a telephone interview; the second a personal visit:

Q — Can you tell me how many people are employed as gas meter readers?

A — This is an unusual approach, isn't it? Applicants come in and make their application, they're interviewed and are employed under the ordinary selection processes, generally that's it.

Q — Do you have any colored gas meter readers?

A — No, not at the moment.

Q — Have there ever been any employed in the past?

A — No.

Q — Is there any hope for the future?

A — Well, now, aren't you employing a line of questioning here that is unusual?

Q — We're making a survey as to what. . . .

A — I cannot answer a question like that. We employ people according to their merit here, their educational qualifications and personality.

Q — What are the qualifications?

A — We usually require high school graduates, physical qualications and so forth. . . . if you have any such line of interrogation as this, your telephone approach is not quite the way. Why don't you come in and see me, my door is always open.

Q — How about today?

A — I'm right here this afternoon, but it is not quite customary to go into this approach by telephone.

Q — Oh no, no, we're making a survey of job opportunities in our city. A lot of people are wondering what kind of job to go and look for.

A — Your approach is a little different than I'm accustomed to.

Q — I guess you remember I called you about 15 or 20 minutes ago from the AFRO. I was just wondering if you could tell me something about the opportunities of the Gas and Electric Company for colored people in the line of employment.

A — We are one of the largest employers in Maryland.

Q — Could you give me any statistics as to how many colored people are employed at the Gas company?

A — No. No statistics. Why do you ask that question?

Q — We are making a survey as to the opportunities open to colored people in various industries.

A — Skip the statistics. . . . We have a large. . . .a very large numnumber of colored employees with the company. . .

Q — You don't know just how large a number that is?

A — Now we are one of the larger employers in the state of Maryland. We have a large number of colored people in the organization From skilled to semi skilled.

Q — What is skilled as far as the Gas and Electric Company is concerned?

A — There are many different jobs we call skilled. A craneman is an example of a skilled occupation.

Q — Lineman?

A — Yes Linesman is a skilled job.

Q — What happens when a colored applicant comes to apply for a job as meter reader?

A — You have a complex about this meter reader thing. Don't you?

Q — No, no. You don't have any colored meter readers do you?

A — No. I told you that before.

Q — Is there any reason for that?

A — The reason is this is the judgment of what works best for the community.

Q — And colored meter readers don't work best for the Community?

A — I did not say that at all.

Q — What are the qualifications for a meter-reader?

A — The qualification for a meter reader is to be able to have the educational background. . . the physical fitness. . .

URHA phone girls quit because of fan operator

BALTIMORE

"We have had too good a record of integration to let any employee's personal feelings interfere with the operation of this agency". p. 8

Robert J. Moyer, acting director of the Baltimore Urban Renewal and Housing Agency, was speaking Thursday, confirming the reported resignations of two agency switchboard operators who resented a colored operator.

Mr. Moyer, who is actually director of the agency's information services, said the two blonde switchboard operators had been given a flat ultimatum in the matter.

HE SAID THEY were told they had the choice of either working with the colored woman, who is a secretary employee of the agency, or resign, or be fired.

'THE MAN'—Uncle Sam's income tax man, that is, is pictured here. He is Robsol Grant Pinkett, a revenue officer attached to the Baltimore office of the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. He spends 90 per cent of his time on the street collecting delinquent taxes and leaving tax notices. Mr. Pinkett, a native of Salisbury, Md., is married and has two sons.

Mass. Governor's Secretary Works For Future Of 4 Sons

BOSTON, Mass.—Like a great many modern mothers, Juanita Parham of Governor Foster Furcolo's office is also a wage earner for a very pertinent reason. She wants to insure a better future for her children.

"I hope," she said, during a break in the day's occupation, "to be able to provide them with an adequate education so that they will be prepared to take advantage of the opportunities which come their way."

Juanita, who is a graduate of Roxbury Memorial high and Boston Clerical schools, keenly appreciates the value of a higher education. The costs of raising a family have been spiralling since she was married at the age of 18. She learned, like other homemakers, that budgets can't be stretched to permit regular savings for the funds necessary to pay for a college education when that figure is multiplied by four. Her salary, is the important factor which has enabled her to plan her sons' future with assurance.

The two oldest of her four strapping sons now are students at Boston Latin school. One has his sights set for West Point. The other is planning a career as a pathologist. When they're ready for college, the funds from 20-year endowment plans, thoughtfully started by their mother, will help to pay their expenses. The other boys also will have the same financial advantages for carrying on their studies.

The full time demands of both of her jobs - as office worker and housewife - keeps her busy from early morning until late at night.

ATTRACTIVE WORKING GIRL

At the office she's typical of today's attractive working girl who dresses in simple, casual clothes. Her distinctive features - black hair and eyes and a copper-tinged skin - are the proud heritage of her American Indian forefathers.

Her working hours are busily occupied with handling the vast quantity of mail addressed to the Governor. It requires processing, photostating, routing to the proper individual or office for a reply, and constant checking to make sure that each letter is answered as speedily as possible.

The position which she has filled for 28 months always offers variety and interest - the two factors most women seek in a job, she noted. The kindness and understanding which Governor Furcolo shows to all the people who work for and with him makes the office a congenial and cooperative place in which to work.

Office work is followed by housework and homework. Her four boys, now beginning to tower over Juanita's mere five foot three, have made it much easier for her to do both her jobs efficiently. "I don't want to brag," she said smilingly, "but they're better than any four girls. They're a fine group of boys and exceptionally cooperative around the house. Each has his own chores and assumes the responsibility of doing them."

HELPS HER BOYS

Juanita, who presides at the nightly homework session, has been giving the boys a helping hand in their studies for a good many years. The lessons they bring home from Boston Latin school, she finds, are somewhat of a challenge to her as well as to them.

The Parhams are a sports-minded family in their precious leisure moments. Juanita's four brothers conditioned her for an interest in athletics such as swimming and basketball. Bowling is one of the few activities in which her husband, Lloyd, a former army captain retired with a total disability, can participate. His service career, in which he rose from rank of sergant to a captaincy, ended when he was badly wounded in action in Italy just a few days before VE day.

In addition, Juanita pointed out, she's been exposed to football and baseball. "With five men around the house," she added, "you learn to take an interest in their interests or you're out in left field."

PREJUDICE NOTED IN JOBS FOR AGING

The New York Times

Senate Hearing in Detroit Told of Problems—Help to 40-65 Class Urged

New York

By DAMON STETSON

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Dec. 10 — The Plight of the worker too old to get a job but too young to receive Social Security was explored today at a hearing of the Senate Subcommittee on Problems of the Aged and Aging.

Max M. Horton, director of the Michigan Employment Security Commission, testified that "the younger older workers," under 65 and over 40 or 45, were those most in need of employment and worthy of speciel consideration.

He said one-third of the applicants for work at commission offices were in that category. However, he added, prejudice against hiring workers over 40 was "a very real thing."

60-Year-Old Testifies

This group of unemployed, he said, includes persons who are "too old to work and too young to retire," although they must bear the full expense and burden of maturing families.

Jean Velden, 60, described himself as a case in point. He said he had worked for the Hudson Motor Car Company thirty-two years, but was laid off in 1957 and had not been able to find steady work since.

He said he could not qualify for Social Security, but employers would not hire him because they said he was too old.

"What have I done to be penalized this way?" he asked. "We older workers can't wait. Age discrimination must end."

Senator Pat McNamara, chairman of the subcommittee, said the inability of many persons over 50 to obtain steady work was a national problem.

"Age discrimination practices in employment have the effect of shelving healthy vigorous men and woman in the prime of their working lives," the Michigan Democrat declared.

"If a man has the misfortune to lose his job, even as early as at the age of 45, his chances of finding new employment are slim."

Most witnesses felt that Social Security benefits should be increased, that older persons needed help for medical costs and that housing problems existed for the aged.

Court Balks on Rail Wage Differential

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON—The United States Supreme Court has refused to rule that the government is responsible for the wage differential between Negro and white employes on the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

In a one-sentence order, the high court, "denied" a request by Negro trainmen to decide whether the United States, through its judiciary branch of government, judicially enforced a discriminatory practice against them, solely because of their race.

● The case, involving 47 Negroes, was brought to the Supreme Court by Walter Allen, who claimed they worked as trainmen on the Missouri Pacific some time between 1938 and 1954.

During that period, when the railroad was undergoing reorganization proceedings, under the Bankruptcy Act, it was operated by trustees, appointed by the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.

THE NEGROES were called "train porters," a classification applied exclusively to their race. But in addition to their duties as porters, they performed, also, the functions of "brakemen" on passenger trains. But they were paid less wages than the white men who were classified as "brakemen."

The wage difference, they claim, was the result of an agreement between the railroad company and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, a union which did not admit Negro members.

The Negro workers allege that the United States is liable for wage demands by virtue of the fact that the "judicial branch of the government . . . took custody and control of all of the properties and assets of the railroad company" for 23 years. And they added that discrimination by the United States Government is a violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

Cassie S. Pennington, having reached the retirement age, and no longer fearing loss of his job, filed a petition in the District Court of St. Louis in 1955, asking for the recovery of $16,800 back wages, due him by reason of wage discrimination.

In March of the following year, the court denied his application to intervene. The case, then, was carried to the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. In December, 1956, this court sustained the District Court and affirmed the denial of the petition for intervention.

● The Negro employes then carried the case to the U. S. Court of Claims in 1958, seeking recovery of back wages. This court found that an obvious case of wage discrimination prevailed, but it contended that the Government was not responsible.

In an opinion, released in June, 1959, the Court of Claims said:

"The plaintiffs allege that the practice of paying Negro brakemen less than white brakemen, and of requiring Negro brakemen to perform porters' duties in addition to brakemen's duties, was 'unjust and discriminatory'."

But, the court added, their claims do not lie against the United States. "It would appear that whatever wrong the suffered was effected by their employer, the Missouri Pacific Railroad, against which, alone, they might make a direct claim for wages." This conclusion was accepted by the Supreme Court when it refused to review the case further.

MISSISSIPPI

Surplus Food Needed Again

Mississippi Workers Need Help During Winter

6 COUNTIES APPLY

By FRED T. FERGUSON
United Press International Staff

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 11.—"The Bread Lines" will form in Mississippi again this winter, in many places almost specifically for farming people.

It is local distribution of surplus food commodities from the Federal Government that has been nicknamed "The Bread Lines."

The nickname applies to the long lines of men — totaling thousands in one Delta County alone this year—who will receive free foodstuffs. It does not apply in the respect that persons receiving the food will not necessarily starve if they do not get it.

Join In Winter

Sixty Mississippi counties are regular recipients of the Surplus Food Commodities Program year 'round, according to the state Welfare Department. Most of the others join the program during the winter.

Persons on relief are automatically eligible. The temporarily unemployed whose financial status is considered "substandard" may also apply for the food. The farm situation enters the picture under the latter.

Day laborers and some tenant farmers face a mid-winter period when there will be nothing for them to do. Thousands of them will be so short of funds they will have to go deeply into debt to feed their families if they don't receive the surplus food.

According to W. E. Holcomb, state Welfare Department chief, six counties have asked to join the Surplus Commodities Relief Program for the winter months and 13 have asked that the program be expanded for them during the winter.

Situation In One County

Here is the situation in Washington County, in the heart of the Delta, as told in Leland to United Press International by Mrs. Helen Spiars:

"We are taking applications for surplus commodities. The County Board of Supervisors has asked the Federal Government to be allowed to join the program for the winter months.

"So far, after one week, we have taken about 1,500 applications for the Leland area alone and turned down only three. We expect the total number of applications to run near four or five thousand.

"We'll start distributing the foodstuffs as soon as we get them, probably about the first of next month. Each applicant will get two pounds of rice, five pounds of meal, 10 pounds of flour and four and one half pounds of dry milk for each member of his family.

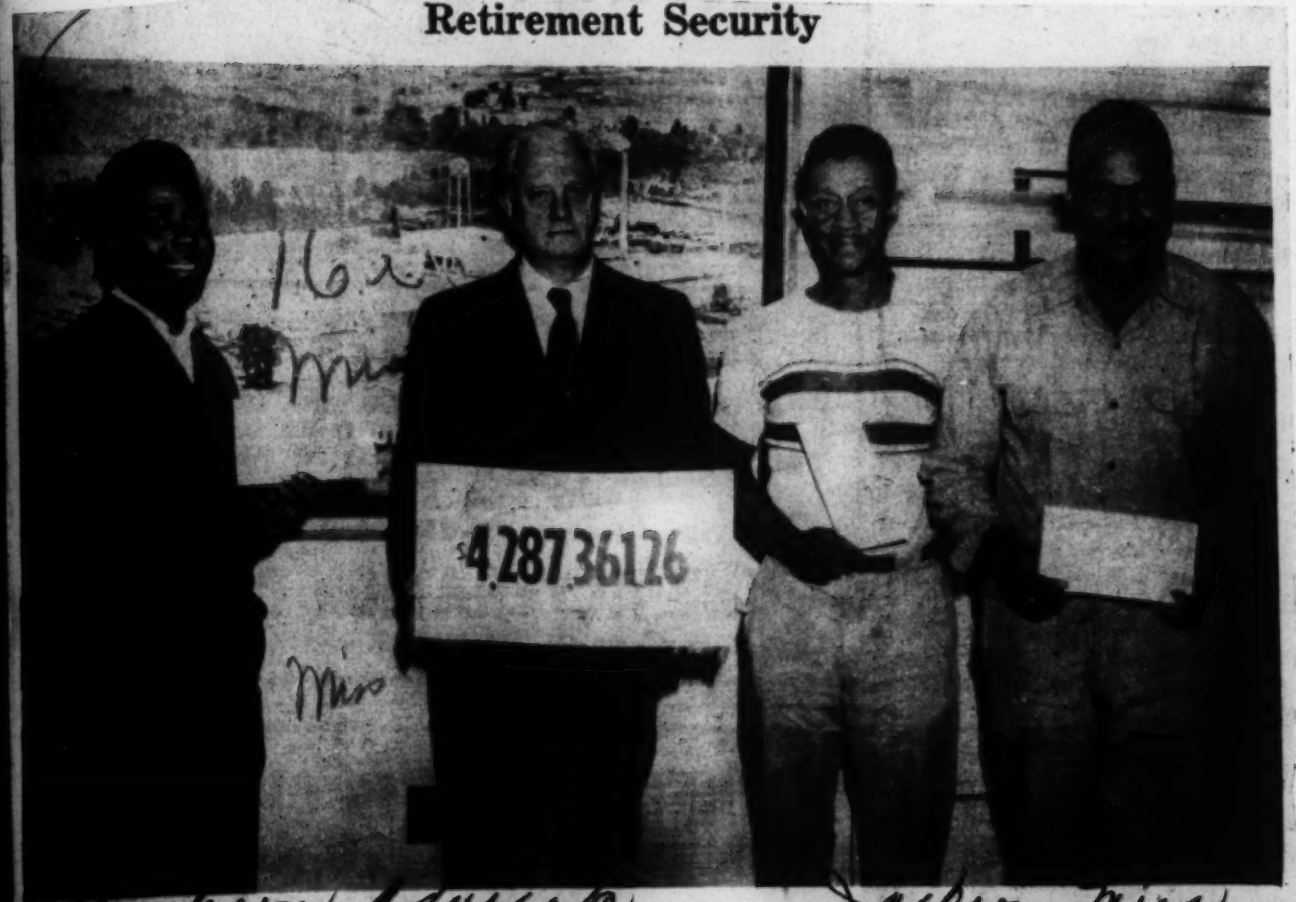
"The plantation owners asked the supervisors to apply for this program because they did not feel financially able to help the workers through this difficult time.

Can't Leave Farm

"If we ask an applicant why he doesn't get a job in town or take season work out-of-state he replies, 'I can't. I do anything Mrs. John Smith (fictitious name) wants me to. I can't work in town or go to Florida. Mr. Smith may call me and want me to do some work.'"

Mr. Holcomb said counties to get the commodities for distribution to persons on relief and temporarily unemployed for the winter months only are Bolivar, Claiborne, Humphreys, Sunflower, Washington and Yalobusha.

Retirement Security



A total of 1,244 employes at Mississippi Products, Inc., in Jackson learned last week that they are worth a total of $4,287,361 in the Savings and Profit Sharing Pension Fund of Sears, Roebuck and Co. employes. These three MPI employes are shown receiving annual Profit Sharing statements from MPI President George Huth. The annual statements show the extent to which each employe-member shared in the company's profits last year and the present value of his individual account. Shown receiving statements are (left to right) Eddie Porter, Mr. Huth, Laurie Davis, and Robert Taylor. Profit Sharing members at MPI and at the Sears store in Jackson have a total investment of over $5 million in the Profit Sharing Fund, a program designed to help members build a financial reserve for retirement years.

Goodwill Industries Program Is Important Asset To Mississippi

The present May 3-9 observance of Goodwill Industries Week is of special significance in our state, due to the effective program of our own Goodwill Industries of Mississippi, Inc., headquartered here in Jackson. Guided by the principle of "Not Charity But a Chance", this program aids many deserving persons.

Its basic purpose is to provide employment, wages and training for handicapped persons so that they may become useful and self - supporting citizens. Nationally, the Goodwill Industries movement began in 1902. Our state organization was formed in 1947 by a group of public - spirited leaders. Briefly summarized, the program works like this: discarded articles from homes, business and industry are collected in Goodwill trucks and are then expertly repaired by handicapped workers in 10 repair departments. Merchandise thus renovated is sold by the Goodwill non - profit Thrift Store to aid low income shoppers and pay a living wage to many handicapped individuals.

Goodwill Industries service includes special training in useful trades, employment under sheltered conditions, cash wages, case work and referral to other agencies, limited reemployment service and clean, repaired merchandise that low income groups need and can afford.

In Mississippi alone last year, the first full year of operation, our Goodwill Industries, Inc., salvaged discards from generous Mississippians and produced over $48,000 in sales, thereby employing over 80 handicapped workers. It is a non - profit organization incorporated under state laws.

Our state unit is Mississippi - controlled and managed, being directly governed by a local volunteer board made up of civic and business leaders. It is affiliated with 128 Goodwill Industries across the nation and is a member agency of Jackson's United Givers Fund.

Sponsors note that while Goodwill Industries was "born in the church", it is nonsectarian in service and believes that religion is important in rebuilding lives. There is a morning chapel service at which attendance is voluntary. There is no duplication of this service. No other agency has the objectives and methods of Goodwill Industries.

Goodwill Industries Week, May 3 - 9, affords a splendid opportunity for citizens in this area to personally visit our state branch at 113 South State Street In Jackson and obtain first-hand knowledge of its efficient operations. Public contributions make possible these jobs opportunities for handicapped Mississippians. The program of Mississippi Goodwill Industries, Inc., multiplies dollars in self - respect for every dollar contributed.

YAZOO COUNTY NEGROES MOVING TOWARDS INDUSTRY—JOBS GOAL

Yazoo City, Miss., Oct. 12—More than $10,000 has been pledged by Negroes here in an effort to bring to Yazoo City an industry that will give employment to members of their own race.

Professor J. L. Palmer, negro teacher and leader, is heading the drive to raise $100,000 which will be needed. John Oakes, owner of the Lintonia Cleaners, and originator of the plan, is assisting Professor Palmer. Serving with him are Cleo Magee, secretary of the committee, Louise Howard, Hubert Owens, J. C. Godron, Hal Fuche, Bradley Page, and Dave Burnett.

The group have been assured by an officer of the First Mississippi Corporation, Charles Jackson, that the company could establish a plant to give employment to one negro man for every thousand dollars raised.

The money, to be secured on a pledge basis in amounts of $100 for negro citizens, will be deposited by the individuals themselves in an escrow account in the Bank of Yazoo City and The Delta National Bank. The banks will receive and keep records of the pledges and deposits. If an insufficient amount is raised by June 1, 1960, the money will be returned to the investors.

All of the money will be invested in shares of First Mississippi which would own and control the proposed plant.

Besides Mr. Jackson other white business and civic leaders who have attended the meetings and helped with details are Herman DeCell, local attorney, Murry Kelly, chairman of the Industrial committee of the Yazoo County Chamber of Commerce, F. G. Corley, president of the Chamber, Thomas Campbell, Jr., former president Bob Wheeler, manager; and Herbert Hogue, J. L. Graeber, W. A. Henry, and Norman A. Mott, Jr.

Negroes Granted Equal Vacation Time By NLRB

WASHINGTON (AP) — An examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has held that an employer who grants two-weeks vacations to white employes must do the same for Negroes.

Examiner A. Bruce Hunt ruled yesterday in a case involving Intracoastal Terminal, Inc., of Harvey, La., and Teamsters Union Local 270.

Hunt's review of the case said the Harvey firm in 1957, while the teamsters were organizing the employes, abandoned the discriminatory vacation plan, but restored the old policy in 1958, after the employes voted in favor of the Teamsters union.

According to Hunt, there were two violations of labor laws: one, refusal to bargain with the union over vacation policy change, and, two, retaliation against Negro workers because the union got in.

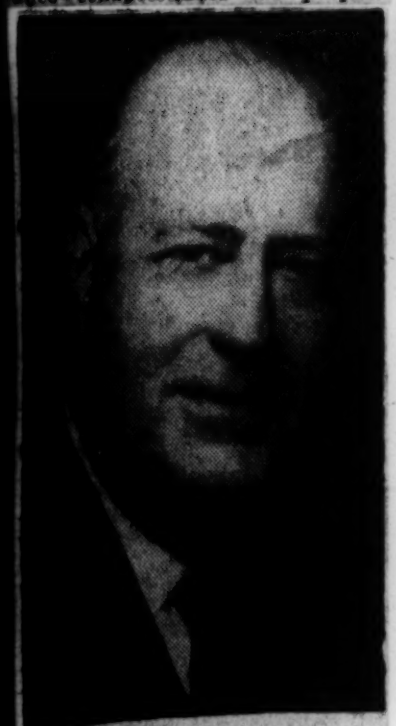
Meany, Bristol Named Equal Opportunity Day Honorees

Chicago Defender

NEW YORK — Gearge Meany, president, AFL-CIO, and Lee Hastings Bristol, chairman of the board of Bristol-Myers company, will be honored at the Equal Opportunity Day dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel on Nov. 17.

The dinner will be sponsored by the National Urban League to commemorate Equal Opportunity Day (Nov. 17), an annual observance conducted for the purpose of focusing national attention on the America ideal of equal opportunity for all, regardless of race, color or creed.

GEORGE MEANY



LEE H. BRISTOL

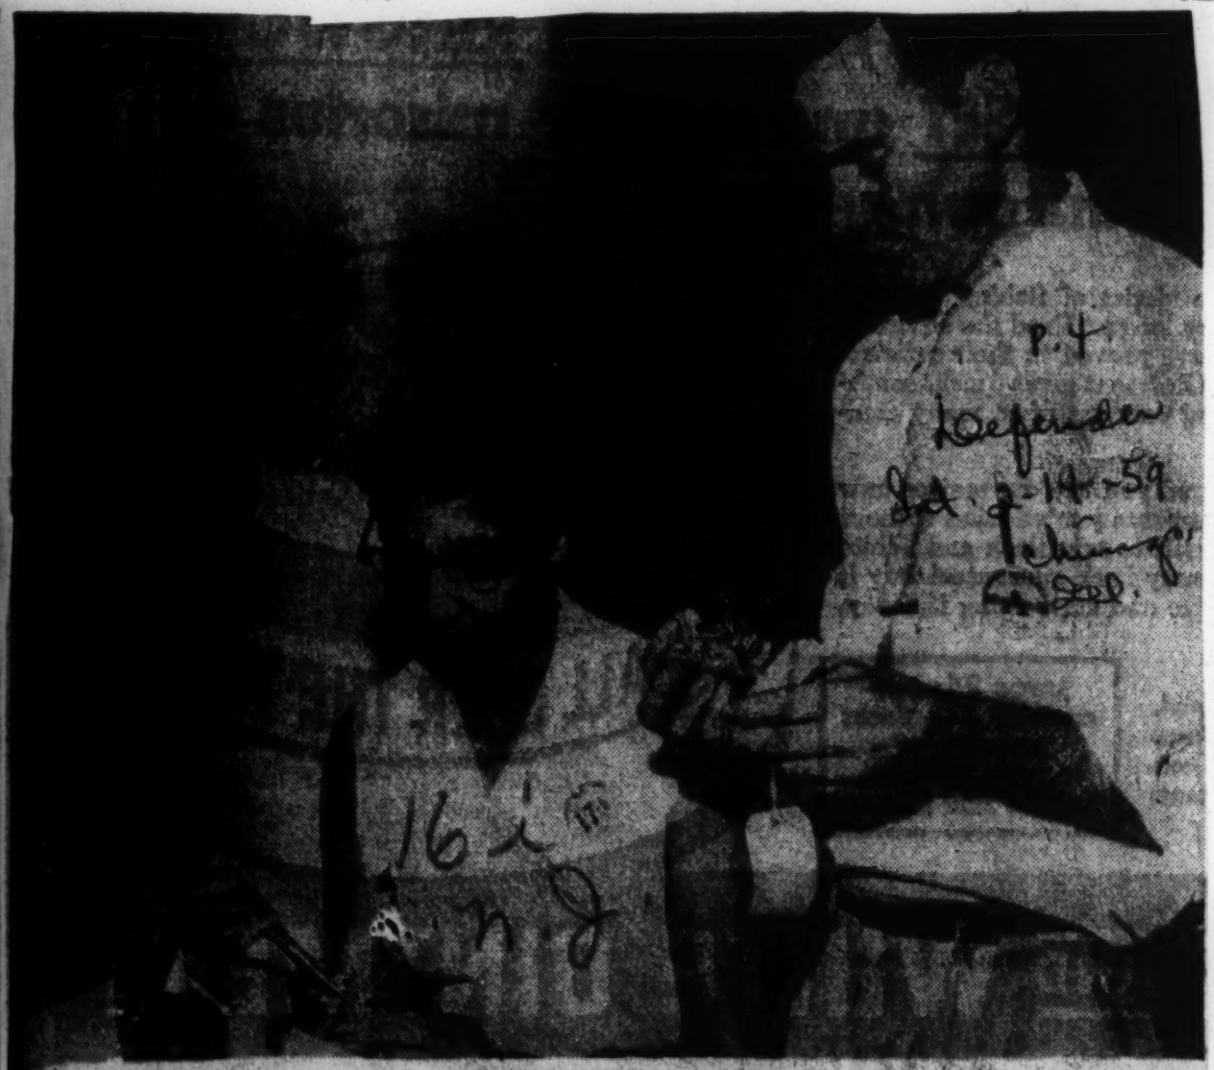
Meany will receive the Urban League award to give recognition to the constructive efforts of organized labor to eliminate racial discrimination in the nation's work force, the league reported.

Born the son of a trade unionist in New York City in 1894, he became a plumber's helper in 1910. He was president of the AFL in 1952 and was elected president of the merged AFL-CIO three years later.

Bristol was selected by the Urban League for his efforts toward making the equal opportunity principle a reality in American industry, the League announced. Bristol, a widower, resides in Bay Head, N. J. He was graduated from Hamilton college in 1914, and in 1952 was awarded an honorary LL.D. degree at Hamilton.

Each year the Leauge presents the EOD award to a representative of industry and labor for their efforts in behalf of equal opportunity.

The National Urban League is an interracial organization devoted to improving economic opportunity for Negroes and bettering race relations in America. It was founded in 1910.



MRS. IRENE HOLMES, an employee of the Radio Corporation of America's Camden, New Jersey plant since 1944, is shown assembling a control unit for a helmet radio receiver - transmitter while George Sproul, assistant foreman of the Shipborne and Aviation Assembly section, scans two subassemblies that make up the control section.

Chock Full O' Nuts On N.Y. Exchange

NEW YORK — Chock Full O' Nuts Corporation, founded in the early 1920's as a basement store selling nuts only, has been admitted for trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Its symbol on the "Big Board" is CHF.

The company roasts its brand of coffee in its Brooklyn, N. Y., plant and markets it in 12 Eastern States and parts of Canada. Chock Full O' Nuts also owns and operates a chain of 27 restaurants in New York City and one in Newark.

Chock Full O' Nuts was founded by an unemployed engineer, William Black, just graduated from Columbia university. To this day, Black remains president of the company.

Jackie Robinson, ex-Brooklyn Dodgers baseball star and now in his third year as Chock Full O' Nuts vice president in charge of personnel, took part in the trading ceremonies on the floor of the Stock Exchange.

With Black and Robinson were Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange; Frederic T. Tansill, executive vice president of Chock Full O' Nuts, and representatives of F. J. Connelly & Co., and Scholl & Co., stock specialists.

The company's latest statement for the nine months ended April 30, 1959, showed sales and earnings were the highest for any nine-month period in its history.

Powell Wants Jobs For Racial Groups

One of every three elective and appointive political jobs in Manhattan should be given to a Negro or Puerto Rican because of recent population gains, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (D., N. Y.) said today.

Mr. Powell, resuming campaigning after an appendectomy as the anti-Tammany candidate for Democratic leader of Harlem's 12th AD South, charged that Tammany Hall has been pursuing a racial policy—detrimental to Negroes and Puerto Ricans—in filling posts.

Mr. Powell is opposing Elijah L. Crump for leadership in the 12th AD South.

Rail Waiter Honored By New Haven Riders

The New York Times

Jamie H. (Jimmy) Johnson at festivities yesterday.

A 64-year-old New Haven Railroad steward was feted yesterday as a "friend to man" by the commuter habitués of the club car on train 114, known as "The Berkshire" (New York to Pittsfield, Mass.).

The steward, Jamie H. (Jimmy) Johnson of 2367 Seventh Avenue, was taken by surprise when, a few minutes before departure time—5:27 P.M.,—his "regulars" presented him with a gold wrist watch, five shares of New Haven stock and a plaque inscribed with seventy-seven names and an "Ode to Jimmy, the man Who Knows How to Run a Railroad."

In a presentation speech, Felix Sutton of Wilton, Conn., a writer of children's books, said, "He is the best friend any commuter on the Berkshire run ever had."

Not only that, Mr. Sutton continued, but "Jimmy is the only man on the New Haven who knows how to run a railroad, so we thought we'd better make him part owner."

NEGROES ASSURED ON PIER JOBS HERE

Meany Tells Urban League Charges of Bias in I. L. A. Will Be Investigated

George Meany said last night that charges of Jim Crow practices by the International Longshoremen's Association on the New York waterfront would be investigated.

The president of the merged labor movement told the National Urban League that the civil rights department of the federation would attempt to correct alleged discrimination against Negroes in pier jobs.

Mr. Meany explained, however, that the complaint apparently involved "only one or two local unions." He defended the Longshore Union, which, he said, "always had a fine record with regard to its Negro membership."

The labor leader spoke at the league's annual Equal Opportunity Day dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. He and Lee Hastings Bristol, chairman of the board of Bristol-Myers Company, were cited by Theodore W. Kheel, president of the league, for their efforts against discrimination.

The charges of Jim Crow practices in the I.L.A. were made last September by A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations in San Francisco. Mr. Randolph objected to I.L.A.'s readmission to the labor federation. The union had been banished for six years after charges of domination by corrupt elements.

Two Leaders Differed

Mr. Randolph's insistence that the federation should no longer tolerate segregated locals so annoyed Mr. Meany at that time that he accused Mr. Randolph of posing as a self-appointed "guardian of all the Negroes in America."

Later Mr. Meany said there was no rift between himself and Mr. Randolph. Both, he said, wanted to eradicate Jim Crow but disagreed on methods.

"The civil rights objectives of Phil Randolph are my objectives too," Mr. Meany said last night.

"However, when he brought up the charges against the I. L. A., this was the first informationI had received, or the Executive Council had received, on this subject. While we considered the information important and germane, it was submitted too late to receive proper consideration from the convention.

"This does not mean the complaint will be ignored. I can assure the National Urban League it will be looked into thoroughly."

Mr. Kheel appealed to President Eisenhower to call a summit meeting of Negro and white leaders to discuss racial tensions.

The President had sent a message to Mr. Kheel saying:

"Equal opportunity to enjoy the bread which is earned by the sweat of one's own face—in the plain words of Abraham Lincoln—is among the basic principles of American democracy. One of our noblest tasks is to continue, under God and watched by the entire world, our efforts to translate this principle into a practice of daily life."

Store Agrees To Hire Negroes After Protest

NEW YORK — The Sears Roebuck Fordham Road and 149th Street department stores in the Bronx, have agreed to employ Negro sales personnel following three weeks of picketing by the Bronx branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Herbert Hill, NAACP labor secretary, reported this week.

The picket line was withdrawn after agreement was reached at the conclusion of a series of conferences of NAACP leaders with the store's personnel executives and with Commissioner Elmer Carter of the State Commission Against Discrimination.

Picketing was begun following an NAACP survey of employment practices in major retail stores in the borough. The survey revealed that many of the stores were not employing Negroes in "visible' positions. However, all, except Sears Roebuck, promptly changed their policies after representation had been made to them by the NAACP.

Participating in the conferences which led to the agreement were Mr. Hill, Commissioner Carter, Frederick D. Jones, president of the Bronx NAACP; Oliver Martin, chairman of the branch's labor and industry committee; Leroy Burnett, president of the Williamsbridge NAACP branch; and Charles Bacon and John Reed, Sears Roebuck personnel executives.

At the conclusion of the talks, Sears Roebuck management agreed to inform the Bronx N.A.A.C.P. branch when vacancies occur and promised to employ qualified Negro applicants.

The company also agreed to broaden the base of its recruiting operation to include institutions within the Negro community and further promised to participate with the Bronx NAACP in a general conference of retail merchants in the borough under the auspices of the Bronx County Advisory Council of the State Commission Against Discrimination.

Tan Model Cracks Color Bar in Gotham Fashions

(See Photo Page 1)

NEW YORK — Exotic Bani Yvelton has been engaged by Jerry Greenwald, Inc., a manufacturer of Junior Wear at 498 Seventh Ave., as one of their regular fashion show models.

Her first showing was held for the press on Jan. 31.

• This is the first time a Negro model has been employed in a mid-town showroom exclusively for modeling.

Last fall, Bani was selected as one of the high fashion models, the only Negro, for a fashion feature in Look magazine, it was the first time a national general publication has included a model of color in the regular fashion features.

MISS YVELTON is one of the famous Grace Del Marco models who are making history in all departments of the modeling field.

Miss Mills, director of the Grace Del Marco agency, says "it is fantastic how many, "never before," modeling assignments are coming into the agency.

She has been so flooded with calls that the agency has found it necessary to employ an additional person to help with the casting.

On the Move— Exotic Bani Yelverton, known simply as Bani, cracked New York's important Seventh Avenue wholesale garment area as a model when she was employed last week by Jerry Greenwald, manufacturers of junior fashions. Bani opened another wedge some months ago when she was featured in Look magazine. (Story Page 3)

May Make Possible, Nearly 2 Million More Jobs for Unhired Negro Workers

New York—The adoption of a shorter work week with no reduction in pay would mean 1,835,000 new jobs for Negro workers in America and would provide "the best tangible evidence of working brotherhood" for millions of unemployed colored workers, the 150,000-member United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America (UE) said Monday.

35-Hour Week

At the winter meeting of the union's General Executive Board, Albert J. Fitzgerald, UE President, said: "This union prides itself on its unrelenting struggle for full equality among the working men and women in the electrical industry. Our program for the shorter work week with no reduction in pay will provide an estimated 8,300,000 new jobs in America if adopted. It would provide 35-hour a week jobs at 40 hours pay for the millions of fully unemployed, part-time workers and young workers entering the labor market for the first time.

Negro Workers

"It would also mean that the Negro workers of America would be able to get their rightful share of the job market at a time of rising unemployment amid rising production and soaring corporate profits," Fitzgerald said.

"Our economists estimate that the adoption of a 35-hour week with 40-hours pay would mean approximately 1,835,000 jobs for Negro workers," he stated.

For the past year, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE), which bargains for 150,000 workers in 28 states and Canada, has been campaigning for a shorter work week to meet the crisis of unemployment.

Shorter Work Week Would Help Negroes

NEW YORK (ANP) — The adoption of a shorter work week with no reduction in pay would mean 1,835,000 new jobs for Negro workers in America and would provide "the best tangible evidence of working brotherhood" for millions of unemployed colored workers, the 150,000-member United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE) said.

The union recently called for Congressional action on unemployment and demanded a Congressional investigation into growing corporate profits while joblessness has spread throughout the country.

"It is no secret that Negro workers have been hit harder by this depression than any other workers," Fitzgerald noted. "The shorter work week would be one way to relieve this unjust burden from the backs of our colored brothers and sisters."

Report Blasts Conditions For Migrants

Immediate steps to improve the substandard living conditions of migratory farm workers in the United States were urged today in a "Report on Farm Labor" released by the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor.

Principal findings on the plight of migrants and of farm workers in general were:

- They are among the most "economically disadvantaged" of workers.
- Most live in makeshift housing—shacks, tents, barracks and even trucks—which lack "elementary sanitation."
- Whole areas are depressed by the low income and lack of stability of these underprivileged workers.
- Migrant children are retarded in school and the retardation becomes greater as the child grows older.
- Social legislation rarely covers and usually specifically excludes the farm worker.

The report confirms findings of Allan Keller, World-Telegram staff writer, whose investigations resulted in two crusading series of articles in improvement of laws affecting migrants in New York and New Jersey.

The report, based on public hearings in Washington, was released by Dr. Frank P. Graham, former U.S. Senator from North Carolina, and A. Philip Randolph, vice president of the AFL-CIO.

One of the 56 witnesses heard was the Rev. K. P. Thornton, of Pompano Beach, Fla., who paid his own expenses to Washington to tell a dramatic story of large families living in one-room "dilapidated shacks . . . with no windows."

The report also spoke of the hazards encountered by the workers with tragic accidents in transportation inevitable "until the states assume responsibility for intrastate regulation of migrant travel."

Sears Bows in Bronx To NAACP Pickets

NEW YORK—After four weekends of picketing in front of Sears Roebuck & Co., Bronx branch, the management agreed at a meeting to consider members of minority groups for employment in sales positions whenever future vacancies occur.

The meeting was held with Commissioner Elmer A. Carter of the State Commission Against Discrimination in its offices and was attended by Herbert Hill, labor and industry director of the national office of the NAACP, representatives of Sears and of the Bronx branch NAACP, initiators of the picketing.

Sears' Bronx management also offered to lend its help and influence to the NAACP program aimed at eliminating discriminatory hiring policies in other Bronx areas.

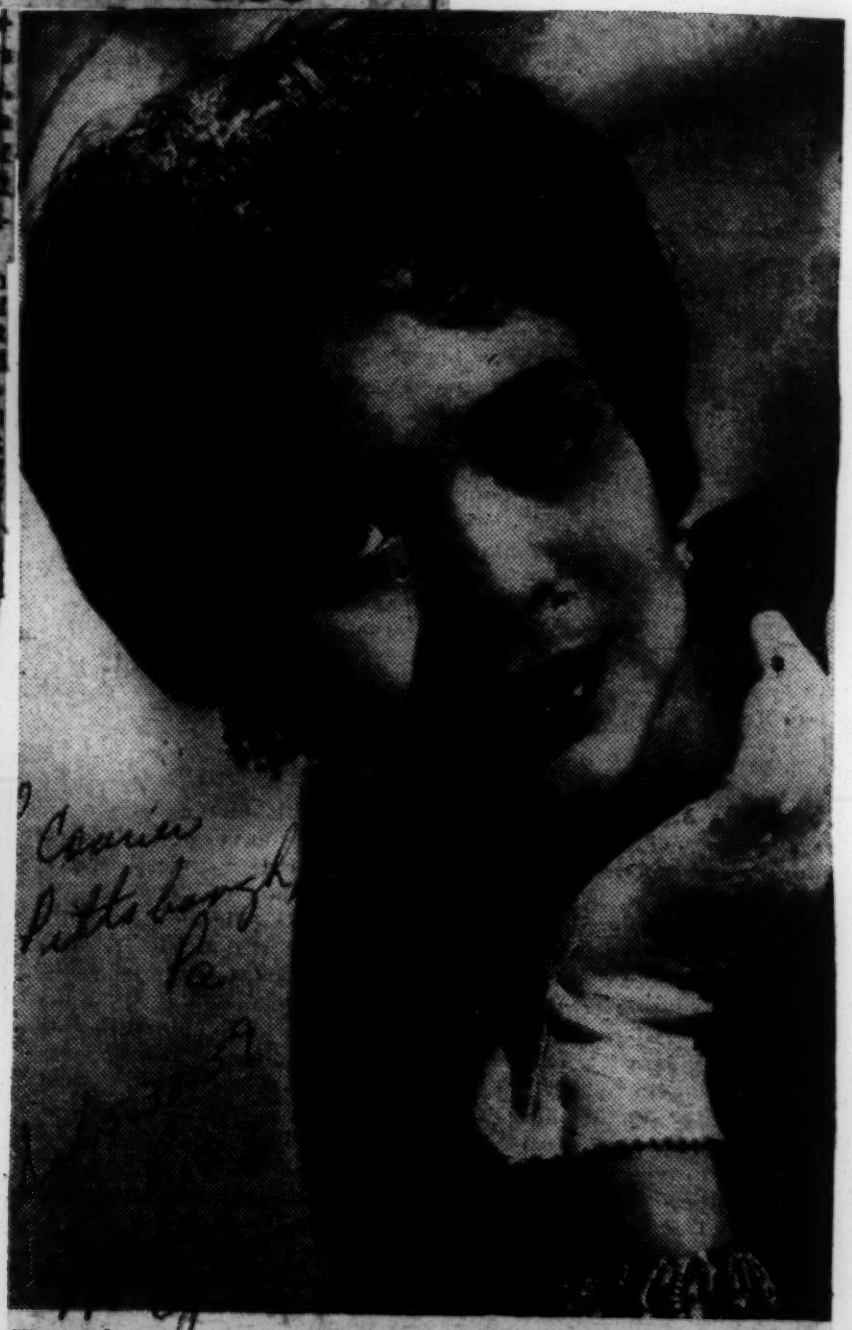
A CONFERENCE is being set up to meet with business leaders and managements of stores in which no Negro personnel are represented on the sales staffs.

The meeting ended the picket line which began Dec. 20, after the Bronx NAACP said that Sears refused to discuss its hiring policies with representatives of the branch.



Finalist Jayve Henderson, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, and presently attending the John Powers Modeling School in New York City, is one of the finalists in the "Miss Sepia United States" contest. Finals will be held May 30 at the Carlton Terrace Ballroom in Brooklyn.

A Top Man in Postal Manager Training

H. R. Jackson's Ideas Affect Post Offices Throughout U. S.

NEW YORK—The small city of Poplarville, Miss., so much in the limelight these days because of the horrible mob abduction and murder of a Negro prisoner, would probably be more than mildly surprised to know that certain decisions made by a Negro in New York, influence the policy of its local post office.

For policy decisions made by Henry R. Jackson, a 53-year-old Negro, with 34 years in the U. S. Postal service, are largely accepted in Washington, D. C., and carried out in local post offices throughout the country.

Jackson is regional training officer for the Post Office Department, New York region. His position and responsibilities include planning, directing and coordinating the training and development for more than 80,000 employes, 7,000 Negroes, and supervisors in approximately 1,800 postal installations in New York State.

BUT HIS responsibilities go much beyond the confines of the New York region. The only career training officer in the entire United States (there are 15 U. S. Postal regions with a training officer assigned to each), the rest of the country looks to him for guidance and instructions in this terribly complex field of training.

Before present Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield, a big Chevrolet dealer from Michigan, was appointed to the post, management training in this important department was pretty much a hit-or-miss thing.

The tug-of-war is still going on between those Senators who want the Post Office to operate as a service, regardless of red ink, and those who want to put it on a business basis and make it carry its own weight.

SUMMERFIELD recognizing Jackson's abilities, placed him in a management training position, and, as such, he was the first to set up any organized training plan for the postal services.

"Until Summerfield was made Postmaster," he said, "about 72 per cent of the entire budget went for salaries. There was little or no money left for training. We were 50 years behind the times and there was no organized training for half million postal workers."

Now, every post office throughout the country with 500 or more employes has a full-time training staff, Jackson said.

JACKSON HAS been a member of management for 16 years, and following 15 years of work as a postal clerk, he has been promoted every three years since.

A graduate of New York University's School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, Jackson also has a graduate degree from the school's Public Administration and Social Services' school. Presently, he is an instructor and lecturer at his alma mater in the Graduate School of Public Administration.

JACKSON IS credited with introducing a "new concept" in management training: he insists that supervisors must have a working of three related jobs. "Experience contributes to their development," he says. "But it is primarily a matter of communications. You must be able to communicate with subordinates.

"One of the major weaknesses of management everywhere is its failture to evaluate the performances of their subordinates," he said. "We attempt to develop an organization where everybody understands objectives. Thus, we can give the best possible service."

Jackson, whose office, secretary and staff are in New York, spends a good bit of his time on the road. He travels to various local post offices, sits and chats with the postmasters about their management problems and helps them solve many of them.

"UNTIL I STARTED this job, he said, "I didn't realize that from 35 to 40 per cent of the postmasters are really postmistresses."

He said many Southerners ask him, "How do you find people of the other race reacting to you?"

My answer is stock: "These people are interested in finding solutions to their pressing problems—trying to relieve the pressure and tension of their jobs. They will listen to anyone who can help them achieve this goal. I am considered only as a source of help, and color makes no difference.

"OF COURSE, they will not listen to you at first. But once they begin to feel that you know your job—and believe me, I know mine—they are certainly ready to listen to anyone who can help."

Jackson, who earns about $12,000 a year and expenses, could probably double his salary if he went to work for private industry—providing, of course, he could find such a position open to him in industry.

He was in Detroit at the time of the interview for the annual week-long conference of the Society of Training Directors, a professional society of national scope. The convention was held at the Sheraton-Cadillac Hotel.

JACKSON WAS the first Negro to be accepted in this organization. There are now several others.

He said the field of management training is a wide open one. But not many Negroes are taking advantage of the fact and training themselves to fit into it.

The proposed additional one cent postal raise on first-class mail is necessary, he said. "We need funds for automation and mechanization . . . to replace outmoded equipment and facilities," he said.

He lives in New York with his wife.
